work at the request of the Government. The papers were presented some two years ago, and referred to the Light-House Board by the Committee on Commerce, and all the facts stated by Mr. Parrott were proved to be correct. Upon a report of the committee, based on the action of the Light-House Board, the Senate at that time passed a bill for Mr. Parrott's relief. The measure is recommended by the Light-House Board and by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to the full amount he claimed. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury is very short, and I will read it:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 2, 1866.

SIR: Your letter of the 16th ultimo, with inclosed memorial of R. P. Parrott, of Cold Spring, New York, praying an increased appropriation for building an iron light-house at Cape Canaveral, Florida, having been referred to the Light-House Board, I now have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of their report under date of 31st ultimo, in which is recommended that relief to the extent of $12,198 35 be granted to the memorialist; which report and recommendation have my concurrence.

I am, very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. Z. CHANDLER, Chairman Committee on Commerce, Senate United States.

The papers are somewhat lengthy, and I suppose it is not necessary to go through them. The facts are that the work was suspended at the request of the Government, and afterward constructed when the cost of materials was very greatly increased after the war was over. It is for that that this bill is here.

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill was passed by the Senate during the last Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. Passed unanimously two years ago.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Is there a written report?

Mr. CHANDLER. There was in the last Congress. The papers are voluminous; but the committee agreed unanimously in favor of the claim. It is a very just claim.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to inquire whether this bill makes an allowance for the increased cost of building the light-house over the contract price, or whether it is according to contract? Has there been any prior allowance, and are the committee aware of how much that allowance is in excess of the contract price?

Mr. MORGAN. This is for the enhanced price of materials caused by the postponement by the Government. Mr. Parrott was ready to go on with the work, but during the war he could not go on with it. When he did go on with the work it cost him this addition to his contract price, and it is proposed to pay him for it, as the delay was caused by the action of the Government.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Then this is no part of the contract, but in excess of the contract?

Mr. MORGAN. In excess of the contract for the enhanced price of the materials caused by the postponement at the request of the Government.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask the Senator from New York whether he himself is satisfied that it is right?

Mr. MORGAN. I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Has the Senator examined the papers?

Mr. MORGAN. I have examined them fully.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is there a report of the Light-House Board in the case?

Mr. MORGAN. The report of the Light-House Board is in the papers, and can be read if desired.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to hear that report read if it is not too long.

Mr. MORGAN. I send that report to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
WASHINGTON, March 31, 1866.

SIR: The memorial of R. P. Parrott, referred by the Senate Committee on Commerce to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, and by him to the Light-House Board for report, having been duly considered the following is submitted:

The memorialist on the 17th December, 1860, contracted with the United States, through a proper agent, the engineer secretary of the Light-House Board, for the iron work of a first-class light-house, to be erected at Cape Canaveral, Florida.

Upon the breaking out of the rebellion, the Government desiring to suspend operations upon that coast, as well as to avoid the disbursement of money at a time of great stringency, inquired of Mr. Parrott upon what terms he would suspend the work. On the 5th February, 1861, he submitted a letter from which he gives an extract in his memorial. This letter contained two distinct propositions, the first of which was accepted by the Government in a communication of which the memorialist gives a true copy, as ascertained by comparison with the records in this office.

In accordance with this proposition the United States has paid Mr. Parrott the sum of $12,603 68, erroneously stated in the memorial at $12,500.

In this connection it may be proper to give a statement of all the bids received from parties who desired to have the original contract. They were as follows:

Gage, Warner & Whitney, Nashua, New Hampshire, $69,600; James Bogardus, New York, $65,756; People's Works, Philadelphia, $63,800; Donio & Roberts, Boston, $57,000; J. G. McPheeters, St. Louis, $55,521 87; Globe Locomotive Works, Boston, $55,000; William Adams & Co., Boston, $52,932; Pusey, Jones & Co., Wilmington, $49,500; Henry Steele & Son, Jersey City, $47,440; Atlantic Works, Boston, $45,000; William M. Ellis & Bro., Washington, $45,000; J. P. Morris & Co., Philadelphia, $45,000; Hittinger, Cook & Co., Charlestown, Massachusetts, $44,900; Hazlehurst & Co., Baltimore, $39,000; Ira Wrim, Portland, Maine, $39,556; Trenton Locomotive and Machine Manufacturing Company, Trenton, New Jersey, $39,450; Poole & Hunt, Baltimore, $35,550; Knapp, Rudd & Co., Pittsburg, $32,000; J. Morton Poole & Co., Wilmington, $31,985; R. P. Parrott, Cold Spring Foundry, $23,000.

The following facts appear from this statement, namely:

There are four bids, each of which is more than twice the amount of Mr. Parrott's.

There are nine more, each of which exceeds one and a half times the amount of Mr. Parrott's bid.

If the amount asked for by Mr. Parrott to reimburse him for the loss he must suffer by the completion of his contract be added to his original bid, the amount will be $30,517 84. There are only six of the original bids which are less in amount than this, notwithstanding the low prices of labor and materials at that time, and three of these six are only a few hundred dollars less.

The board has taken pains to ascertain from manufacturers the present prices of labor and materials, and an estimate, based upon the lowest prices given, shows that the total amount required to complete the work is $27,594 67.

By the terms of his contract Mr. Parrott is bound to complete the work for $15,396 32; which, deducted from the amount of the estimate, leaves a balance of $12,198 35, which is the amount Mr. Parrott will lose unless Congress affords relief.

The board therefore respectfully recommends that relief to the extent of $12,198 35 be granted to the memorialist.

Very respectfully,

W. B. SHUBRICK,

Chairman.

Hon. HUGH McCULLOCH, Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSULAR CERTIFICATES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move now to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 442.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 442) to amend section one of an act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1863, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, to provide for more certain and speedy collection of claims in favor of the United States, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1863, by adding to section one thereof the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That in case of goods, wares, and merchandise imported from a foreign country adjacent to the United States, the declaration in this section hereinbefore required may be made to, and the certificate indorsed by, the consul, vice consul, or commercial agent, at or nearest to the port or place of clearance for the United States.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan what the purpose of this bill is, and what evil it is intended to remedy?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer the Senator very briefly. This applies solely to countries adjacent to the United States. It is customary for farmers and others not conversant with the law to cross over into Canada for the purchase of animals, or for the purchase of a particular kind of seed barley or seed wheat.

They will go perhaps one hundred miles from the nearest port of entry at which they propose to import the goods without the knowledge that it is necessary to have a consular certificate from the consul at the place where they made the purchase, and great inconvenience has been experienced in that regard. The bill applies as well to the State of the Senator from Vermont as to the State of Michigan. It applies all along the frontier. The bill is to remedy that inconvenience. A farmer purchasing a horse, for example, would have to go back perhaps one hundred or one hundred and fifty miles to get a consular certificate, when the certificate of the consul at the port nearest the port of entry of the United States would do just as well. It applies simply to this case, and is meant to remedy that one inconvenience.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer this resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That one hundred and fifty additional copies of House bill No. 605 be printed for the use of the Senate.

This is the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, of which there are no copies left. The resolution has received the assent of the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARLAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WAGON-ROADS IN DAKOTA.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. No. 650) to amend the act of March 3, 1865, providing for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory, with the amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the bill just returned from the House of Representatives be recommitted to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote on the passage of the bill must first be reconsidered.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that, by unanimous consent, that reconsideration may be had.

The vote passing the bill was reconsidered by unanimous consent. The vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading was also reconsidered, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Territories.

SALE OF SHIPS TO BELLIGERENTS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 94.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 94) declaratory of the law with regard to the sale of ships to friendly belligerents was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

By this bill, in order to remove all doubt with regard to the existing law, it is declared that nothing contained therein shall be construed to render it illegal to sell or charter a vessel or steamer built within the United States, or purchased from the United States, to any foreign Government at peace with the United States, or to any subject of such Government, although the vessel or steamer be wholly or in part prepared for war, if the transaction is simply commercial, with no intent on the part of the seller or charterer to participate in any belligerent act; and the vessel or steamer, while in transitu, is to be in no respect exempted from the law of contraband.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is a very important bill. According to my recollection it changes the present law, which has stood on the statute-book perhaps for forty years, prohibiting the sale of vessels that may be turned into vessels of war. One of our difficulties during the recent rebellion grew out of the fitting out of vessels in Great Britain, which were sold to the rebels, and armed after they had passed out to sea frequently. I did not know that this bill was coming up this morning; but a bill somewhat similar was at one time before the Committee on the Judiciary, and my recollection is that it was not thought best to recommend its passage at that time. Perhaps the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] will remember about that. This is a bill that proposes to authorize the sale of vessels which may be turned into vessels of war, and is in contravention of the policy of the Government, I think, ever since its foundation. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] more particularly represents our foreign affairs, and if he is satisfied with the bill I do not propose to interpose any further objection than to call the attention of the Senate to it as a very important change in the law, which may possibly involve us in difficulties with friendly Powers hereafter in the event of foreign wars.

Mr. CHANDLER. If Senators will read the proviso they will find that this bill is very carefully guarded. It has been carefully prepared. The proviso is:

Provided, That the transaction is simply commercial, with no intent on the part of the seller or charterer to participate in any belligerent act, and that the vessel or steamer, while in transitu, is in no respect exempted from the law of contraband.

Thus it will be seen that the bill is very carefully guarded. It has been petitioned for, I believe, by all the vessel builders on the Atlantic coast—certainly by all in New York. My friend from New York [Mr. MORGAN] will, I think, remember that the petition to which I refer was signed by every vessel builder in New York. I think the whole vessel interest has applied for the passage of this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator be kind enough to state to us what the law is now, as he understands it, and then the change made by this bill, and the extent of the change?

Mr. CHANDLER. The law, as it now is, is a little mixed. It is governed more, perhaps, by usage than positive statute. This is declaratory of what the law is and shall be construed to be. The law lies now as much in the usage of nations as in definite statutes. The object of this bill is merely to define what the law is and shall be hereafter construed to be.

Mr. CONKLING. A mere statute of construction, then?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; that is, the bill says the law shall be construed so and so. It is declaratory of the law with regard to the sale of ships to friendly nations. That is all. I think the bill ought to pass. It is certain that the ship-builders of the United States want it to pass.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, if the effect of this bill were to be, and we could have that assurance, to measure to the other nations of the earth precisely what is meted out by them to us, I think it ought to pass; but it relates to a very complicated and delicate subject, to one which, in the House of Representatives, has been considered elaborately by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and which is embraced within memorials and bills that have several times been referred here to the corresponding committee of this body. I had no expectation that such a bill was to come at any time from the Committee on Commerce, and certainly no expectation that we were to consider it this morning. My impression is that it is a jump in the dark. I submit to the Senator from Michigan that if he is going in this present bill to press the subject upon the attention of the Senate it would be well to allow it to stand over to the end that we may consider it a little and take it up hereafter. My impression is, as I said before, that the subject-matter belongs appropriately to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is not a thing by itself; it is one link in a chain a good many links in which need to be burnished; and whenever we take up the subject at all, I think it should be more completely and more intelligently than we can do it now, and certainly in a bill so brief as this. I do not wish, however, to interpose any objection to the bill; I make my remark in the nature of a suggestion to the Senator, that I think he had better let it stand over or else send it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to its standing over, but I will simply state a fact that has just come to my knowledge. This bill was drawn really by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations as a substitute for another measure, and is very carefully guarded. I state the fact to show that it has certainly had the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it is, as we think, very carefully guarded. But if the Senator from New York desires that the bill shall lie over I shall not object.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I would suggest an amendment to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce that I think will obviate any further difficulty, and that is to insert in the proviso a clause requiring the transaction to have the approval of the Secretary of State.

Mr. FERRY. What good would that do?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think that complicates it without doing any good.

Mr. FERRY. It would give the Secretary of State control of all that kind of commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the bill is sufficiently guarded now. If it be the pleasure of the Senate to pass it we may as well do it at once; if not, let it go over.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GREAT BRITAIN AND ABYSSINIA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 69.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 69) to preserve neutrality between the Government of Great Britain and the king of Abyssinia.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

DUTIES ON DAMAGED MERCHANDISE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 76.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 76) providing for the abatement of duties on merchandise damaged on the voyage of importation was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides that merchandise, which may have sustained damage during the voyage of importation, shall be entitled to an abatement of duties in proportion to the damage so sustained; but no abatement of duties for damage on any merchandise shall be allowed unless claim therefor shall be made by the owner or consignee within ten days after the landing of the same, nor unless it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the collector, or chief officer of the customs of the port into which the merchandise is imported, that the damage alleged was sustained after the merchandise had been shipped from a foreign country destined for, and previous to its landing in, the United States. The damage, in all cases, is to be ascertained and appraised by the officers of the customs charged with the ascertainment and appraisement of the value of merchandise imported from foreign countries.

The second section provides that before any order for the ascertainment and appraisement of damage alleged to have been sustained during the voyage of importation shall be granted by the collector, or other chief officer of the customs, the owner or consignee shall make application to such collector, or other chief officer, specifying the description of the merchandise and the number of packages, parcels, or quantities, or which an abatement for damage is claimed, and such application shall be made in such form, and be sustained by such proofs, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The third section makes it the duty of the inspectors, or other officers of the customs, under whose supervision any merchandise imported from foreign countries is unladen, to keep a particular account of all packages and parcels of such merchandise which may exhibit any appearance of damage during the voyage of importation, and to note the same in books kept and the returns made by them; and the day on which the unloading of any vessel is completed is to be deemed and taken to be the date of the landing of all merchandise imported in such vessel, from which the ten days may run, within which the owner or importer is allowed to make claim for damage.

It is provided by the fourth section that no abatement of duties on account of alleged damage during the voyage of importation shall be made in respect to any merchandise which has passed into the custody and control of the owner or consignee; but such packages and parcels of merchandise as exhibit, on landing, appearance of damage, may, at the request of the owner or consignee, be deposited in any public or bonded warehouse, or other suitable place, to be designated by the collector, or other chief officer of the customs, there to remain at the risk and expense of such owner or consignee, until the damage, if any, shall have been ascertained and appraised.

The fifth section provides that merchandise entered for warehousing, and deposited in public or bonded warehouse, may be examined by the owner or consignee, under such general regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, to ascertain if such merchandise has sustained damage during the voyage of importation; and in respect to merchandise sent to public warehouse by the collector, or other chief officer of the customs, for examination and appraisement, pursuant to law, the appraiser is to report to such collector, or other officer, if the same has sustained damage, and the amount thereof; and if it shall be proved that such damage was sustained during the voyage of importation, it shall be allowed in the liquidation of the duties, as if application had been made for abatement by the owner or consignee in the manner and within the time hereinbefore required.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. When this bill was up for consideration on a previous occasion I gave notice of an amendment, which is printed in the form of two additional sections. I will merely state that they have received the approval of the Treasury Department, and the chairman of the Committee on Commerce has no objection to them. I now present these sections and ask that they be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to add to the bill the following sections:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That no abatement of duties for damage shall be made in respect to the articles of merchandise hereinafter enumerated, namely: anchors and parts thereof, beeswax, barilla, bells for churches, bituminous substances in a crude state, bones and bone tips, brimstone, camphor, crude; chalk, clay, unwrought; cocculus Indicus, corn, coral, unmanufactured; cork-tree bark, emery stone, flints and flint stones, flour, grain, grease, gums of all kinds, horns and horn tips, India-rubber in all forms, manufactured or unmanufactured; iron and steel in all forms, manufactured or unmanufactured; ivory, unmanufactured; marble and stone of all kinds, unmanufactured and unfit for use unless manufactured; marrow, meal, metals of all kinds, pure or in composition, in the crude state, or in bars, pigs, blocks, or sheets, or old and fit only to be remanufactured, and ores of metals; all mineral substances in a crude state, nuxvomica, natron, ochres and ochry earths, when dry; oil, paving stones, pitch, plaster of Paris, unground; pumice stone, rosin, sal ammoniac, spirituous liquors, sponge, tallow, tar, crude; teeth of animals, wine, wood of all kinds, unmanufactured, including dyewoods in the stick, and timber and lumber of all kinds, split, sawed, or hewed.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That no abatement of duties for damage, except from breakage, shall be made in respect to the following named articles, namely: busts, casts, statues, and ornaments of plaster; castings of iron and iron vessels; china, porcelain, stone, and earthenware, composed wholly of earthy or mineral substances; glass, glassware, and all articles made wholly of glass; liquids of all kinds in bottles; roofing and paving slates and tiles, and manufactures of stone of all kinds; precious stones and imitations thereof; and no abatement of duties shall be made for stains or injury to casks containing liquids, nor for damage of molasses by souring, nor shall there be in any event an average allowance for damage.

Mr. SHERMAN. My attention has not been called to this bill before. It seems to me that it is a part of the tariff system, and ought to go to the Finance Committee in connection with the tariff. It is a bill to provide for an abatement of duties, to modify the law in regard to duties. The provisions in regard to the abatement of duties are all under the tariff law. I do not know to what extent this bill changes the tariff law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I agree with the Senator from Ohio that the original bill ought to have been sent to the Committee on Finance; but it not having been sent there, and having been considered by the Committee on Commerce, I saw no other way to propose any amendment but by offering it to this bill. I understand the original bill has received the approval of the Department, but it ought not to pass without this amendment, because it changes our laws in relation to damages. The amendment which I have proposed will leave the law very much as it now is, with the addition of a few articles more upon which no damage is to be allowed; and it is in harmony with the practice of other nations.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill relates to the tariff, and is really a part of the revenue system. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance; and I will state to the Senator from Michigan that, if I find it satisfactory, I will return it to his charge as soon as I can examine it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to its taking that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the bill and amendments be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REGISTERING OF VESSELS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 505.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 505) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal section five of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIG HIGHLAND MARY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 113.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 113) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the British-built brig Highland Mary was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the British-built brig Highland Mary, owned by H. and S. French, of Sag Harbor, New York.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARK AUG. GUARDIEN.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 36.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 36) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Aug. Gardien was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Aug. Gardien, of the port of New York, the same being a French-built vessel, but now owned by American citizens.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARK GOLDEN FLEECE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 109, which was reported adversely by the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 109) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Golden Fleece.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to be informed by the chairman of the committee what were the facts in the case of the bark Golden Fleece, and if there be any special reason why an American register should not be issued?

Mr. CHANDLER. Last winter and winter before last the Committee on Commerce, both in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, had numerous applications from persons who had changed their flags during the rebellion; and after full consideration of the subject in all its aspects, the committees decided not to report favorably upon the application to give an American register to any ship that had changed her flag for safety during the period of the war. The reasons for this decision were these: if all the vessels belonging to our mercantile marine had changed their flags for safety during the war it would have been utterly impossible for the Government to have carried on the war; they could not have obtained transportation. During the rebellion most of the shipping interest of the United States obtained security by paying, I think my friend from New York told me, ten per cent. additional insurance risk. All could be insured by paying ten per cent. additional risk. These parties are loyal men, very loyal men; but they changed their flag, and this vessel comes under our rule. That is all there is in the case.

Mr. FERRY. I have nothing to say with regard to the general rule upon the consideration of this particular case, although I might, if that were the subject-matter of inquiry now, have doubts as to the expediency of that general rule, especially in these days, when we are complaining that our flag is driven from the ocean and our commerce languishing in consequence of that fact. But in reference to this particular case I have something to say.

The principle upon which the rule has been adopted by the committee would seem to be that although the persons who changed their flag might be loyal citizens yet that the act itself was an unpatriotic act, and that therefore they ought not to be permitted to return their vessels to the protection of the American flag. Now, sir, I know the owners of the bark Golden Fleece. The principal owner is Mr. Thomas R. Trowbridge, of the city of New Haven, in my State, a gentleman who stands next to no man in my State or in New England in his patriotic devotion and exertions from the beginning of the war. Himself far advanced beyond the period of military service, scarcely had Fort Sumter fallen when he devoted his whole energies, to my certain knowledge, to the raising of troops in the State of Connecticut, assisting our noble Governor, furnishing supplies out of his own private purse; and when the conflict actually began I have myself seen this same gentleman at the front, tending to the wants of our regiments; and I have no doubt that the amount contributed by him from his own private means during the period of the war and the results of his personal exertions were surpassed by those of no other citizen throughout the whole country.

Now, sir, what was the fact in regard to the bark Golden Fleece? She was on a voyage, as I understand, laden with a valuable cargo, and the confederate corsairs were roaming the seas right upon her very track. The additional war risk, if paid for by the increased insurance, would not compensate for the loss of his vessel; his own Government was unable to protect him; and he it so that an error of judgment was committed by this question in transferring the vessel, for the sake of the protection of the ship and cargo, to a foreign flag, is it right that a citizen who has done so much as I know this gentleman has done, (and who since the close of the war, partly on account of his patriotic services, the citizens of my State have again and again offered the nomination for the Governorship of that State and he has steadily refused it,) is it right for an error of judgment that he and his partners may have committed during the war, to continue to affix this stigma and compel him to keep his property afloat under the British flag? Now, I submit, Senators, if the general principle be right, if it be true that Mr. Trowbridge did commit an error of judgment, yet, stating what I know in regard to this gentleman, an exception ought to be made by the Congress of the United States in his case. I hope that the bill will not be indefinitely postponed, but passed.

Mr. SUMNER. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut in the view that he has presented, and indeed I should be disposed to go a little further and ask the Committee on Commerce if they are disposed now, at this late day, to adhere to the rule which they originally adopted? I do not undertake to criticize that rule so originally adopted by them. It may have been very proper immediately after the close of the war, when many applications were made. I myself was in the habit at the time of receiving applications from ship-owners whose interests were involved. But I venture now to ask the committee whether that rule has not been in force long enough?

We are now looking about in every direction to do away, so far as we can, with all those rules and usages that were the growth of the war. We have already passed a bill through this Senate which has relieved a large number of persons of their disabilities at the South; and now the question that I again put to the committee, is whether we may not properly turn to the North and see whether there are not parties there against whom a rule has been enforced which is calculated to be of serious detriment to them in their property and business. I am not going to raise the question whether the rule, when it was begun, was not entirely expedient. I accepted it as such at that time; but I submit that at this moment, when we are all seeking to bring about what, borrowing a phrase from another time, I would call the "era of good feeling," we may not properly apply that sentiment to this rule?

Now, unless I am mistaken, we should go beyond this individual case and generalize. We should open the door for the return of these flying vessels who left us for their safety or for the interests of their owners during the war. We should let them come back in peace and take their place once more in the mercantile marine of the country. Such, I must say, is the inclination of my judgment on this question, stated in its most general form; and that brings me to this special case. Even supposing the Senate is not disposed to adopt the more general proposition which I suggest, we have then the question presented on the individual case that has been argued by the Senator from Connecticut. It may be that the Senate will think it better to proceed by individual cases rather than by an alteration of the general rule. So be it; this individual case comes now before us, and, on the statement of the Senator from Connecticut, for one I shall be entirely content that by the legislation of this country we shall say to this vessel "come back."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce had this subject a long time under consideration before it decided what course it would pursue. The impression of the committee was that to permit these vessels to come back and resume their flag after the termination of the war would be in all future wars offering a premium to those who should desert the flag. It was not only the ten per cent. which was a tax upon our commerce, but the insurance upon the cargoes was likewise ten per cent. additional. Consequently our vessels during the whole four years of war were compelled to do business at that loss over all vessels that changed their flag. Why should we take back a vessel that enjoyed this immunity for four years, I may say unpatriotically, although I would not apply that remark to this case, for my impression is that the owners of this vessel, had they been with the ship, would not have changed the flag. Mr. Trowbridge is as patriotic as my friend from Connecticut asserts; no man more so. The Committee on Commerce, in view of all the circumstances, were willing to make an exception of his case, and during the last Congress we reported a bill for his vessel, which was passed and sent to the other House, but the House refused to concur in it. We were willing to make an exception of the owner of this ship on account of his loyalty and devotion to his country. But, sir, the committee did not think—at least they have not yet arrived at the conclusion—that the rule ought to be changed. The matter is in the hands of the Senate. I have not the slightest objection to the Senate passing this bill, if they choose to do so, inasmuch as I once advocated it myself; but I am still satisfied that the general rule adopted by the committee was a correct one, and that it should be enforced. Let it be understood in all future time that the man who changes his flag during a war has changed it forever. We could not have carried on the war if our ship-owners generally had pursued this course. We had something like a thousand transports at one time engaged by the Government carrying supplies. If our ships had all changed their flags, where should we have found this transportation? It is perfectly evident that if their owners had done as these owners did our war would have failed for want of transportation. While I insist upon the general rule, I am not strenuous about its application to this case.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It strikes me that this is a very simple question. I do not know what the circumstances of this particular case are, for I have not heard them stated. I infer, however, from what has been said by the Senator from Michigan, that the flag was not in this case changed by the direction of the owners, but by direction of the master, the owners not being aware of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was acquiesced in by the owners during the war, after it was done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then the case does not differ at all from any other case where the change was made originally by direction of the owner if he acceded to it and availed himself of the benefits that accrued. It strikes me that the question is a very simple one; and it is, whether a man engaged as one of our people in our great contest should be permitted during the pendency of that contest to withdraw his property to his own particular benefit from the risk which others assumed in consequence of the war, and thereby put money into his own pocket, and during the war derived all the benefits from that course of action which he expected to derive from it, and then when the war is over just come back again upon an equal footing with those who exposed their property, and did not shrink or skulk from the dangers properly appertaining to their position. I cannot conceive that the question presents itself in any other light.

I unite with the sentiments which have been advanced by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] as to the importance of kindness and conciliation, and an endeavor to away with the asperities that have grown up during the war. I am very glad to hear him express these sentiments; but it strikes me that it is a very singular application of them to apply them in the first instance to owners of property belonging to men who were of ourselves, and being of ourselves chose to avail themselves of that position among ourselves to escape partially from the risks and dangers which others ran, to withdraw themselves or their property by a change of flag, by concealment of a fact, by so far just putting themselves outside of their country for the sake of gain or to escape loss, and then claim to come back again on an equal footing with those, and perhaps to the injury of those, who did not resort to that course of action.

In consequence of the withdrawal of such large amounts of shipping during the war other people put their property into that description of business, and any one can see that the introduction of foreign shipping largely into our commerce must affect their interests to a very considerable degree. It has been against the policy of this country always to nationalize shipping not built by ourselves. It is only done under very peculiar circumstances; generally in cases of wreck, where the amount of repairs put upon a vessel exceeds the original cost, and those repairs are made in this country. If that is the policy of the nation, is it right so far to controvert it, so far to act against it, as to introduce this large quantity of shipping at once among ourselves, when the owners have chosen in a time of national peril to denationalize it? Sir, I am for letting them take the consequences of their own act; at any rate I am not disposed to pass laws here in Congress for the mere purpose of giving additional value to property which the owners of that property chose voluntarily to withdraw from the protection of our flag. I see no justice in it, and no propriety in it, and therefore, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. FERRY. A few words in reply to the Senator from Maine. The Government of the United States has a duty to its mercantile marine and its ship-owners as well as they have a duty reciprocally to the Government of the United States. The Senator complains that the bill legislates to bring back under our flag those who have voluntarily renounced the protection of that flag. That is a begging of the whole question, for the very difficulty was that at this time the Government of the United States utterly failed in the performance of its first duty, perhaps from no fault of its, probably owing to its misfortune. The Government failing in the protection which it was bound to afford to the owners of the mercantile marine of the country, many of them resorted to the protection of other flags. While I do not excuse entirely those who sought the protection which their own Government did not afford from a foreign flag, I do say that now when the complaint is universal—and I have heard it on the floor of the Senate from the Senator from Maine—that our flag is banished from the ocean; now, when loyal American citizens who, not being able to obtain from their own Government during that period the protection which it was its duty to bestow upon them, from error of judgment, perhaps, sought that protection abroad, desire to come back and build up again our mercantile marine by the addition of I do not know how many more vessels to that marine, that we should continue, according to the Senator's argument, forever to ostracize these loyal citizens of the Republic, seems to me to be bad in principle and bad in policy. It may well be that a Senator from the State of Maine, upholding most firmly always upon this floor the policy which he has just enunciated as the policy of the Government in regard to nationalizing any foreign-built vessels, might be glad to extend the operation of the same rule to those vessels which were compelled to seek protection under a foreign flag.

I did not intend in the commencement of this discussion to go at all into the general inquiry as to the policy of the rule adopted by the Committee on Commerce, but I directed my argument mainly to this special case, where a vessel being on a voyage across whose track came the confederate pirates the master, with the responsibility of the vessel and cargo upon him, unable to find protection from his own Government, sought temporary protection under a foreign flag, seeking, as it was his duty to do, the interest of the owners, and subsequently those owners acquiesced in the action at the very time when, to my certain knowledge, the principal owner of this vessel at any rate was engaged in pouring out his treasure as freely as water for the purpose of filling up our regiments and sustaining our troops in the field; and you say that these men for the error, if it be an error, committed then, shall be forever stigmatized by adverse votes of Congress upon an application of this kind, as during that very war having been unpatriotic and quasi disloyal to their country.

I agree with the general principle enunciated by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] that it is time to put an end to these things on both sides, North and South. I think it is time to bring back harmonious feelings and the old fraternal relations if we can do so without endangering the interests and the future welfare of the country. I cannot see any danger from an operation of this kind; but I can see danger where such men as I know the owners of this vessel to be are kept perpetually stigmatized by the action of Congress and turned out of its doors when they come here, asking simply to increase the mercantile marine of the country by a vessel that is now under a foreign flag, and refuse because of an error which they may have made two or three years ago.

Mr. CHANDLER. I send to the desk the petition of the owners of this vessel, and ask that it be read as it sets forth their own case fully.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, merchants of New Haven, Connecticut, and loyal citizens of the United States, respectfully represent that for a period of more than fifty years their house have been engaged in foreign commerce; that during the great rebellion they were owners and employers of many vessels in their own trade; that in 1862 they contracted for the building of a fine bark, for their business, at a large expense, namely, for about thirty thousand dollars; that in the autumn of 1863, when the vessel was completed and ready for sea, the rebel cruisers were making such havoc with United States vessels that your petitioners having nearly their whole fortunes exposed to capture by the rebels—and as this bark with her cargo would amount to fully $50,000 additional—thought it prudent to avail of an opportunity to seek protection by selling the vessel to a friend who was a British subject, and taking a mortgage on the said vessel they accordingly sold the vessel, calling her the Golden Fleece, and thus she passed under the English flag, but has never passed out of the actual ownership of your petitioners. They now wish to have the said vessel returned to the American flag, and in accordance therewith humbly petition that an American register be granted to the said bark Golden Fleece formerly of New Haven.

H. TROWBRIDGE'S SONS.

NEW HAVEN, February 14, 1868.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That makes a worse case than I supposed. It seems now that at the time the vessel was being built the owners deliberately came to the conclusion that they would put her under a foreign flag, and for that purpose made a sham sale. So it seems they are solely responsible for it, and it was deliberately done. I do not see how their case differs in the slightest possible degree from a great many other cases where the same thing was done in precisely the same way.

This vessel was built early in the war, when the building of vessels was comparatively cheap. At this time, in consequence of the war itself, the cost of building vessels has almost doubled. Now, if you choose to bring back all these vessels thus sold—and they are quite numerous—you bring into our commerce to compete with vessels that were not thus sold and vessels built at the present time at double the cost vessels that have not cost more than half as much, and thus affect their interests and the interests of ship-building generally.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will permit me to state that there were ten hundred and seventy-six vessels in all that either changed their flag or were destroyed—a very large number.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I call that a very large number. The Senate will see at once what the effect would be upon the existing commerce that has been built up, so far as it could be built recently. It is giving to those men who chose not to run the hazard over those who chose to run the hazard, as many did, this striking advantage. Is that dealing justly by those who scorned to cover their property in that way, by disclaiming the protection, so far as it went, of the flag of their country and for the time putting their vessels under a foreign flag? I think it would not be just.

As to putting a stigma upon these gentlemen, I think that is a very curious way to look at it. If they had not brought their petition here nobody would have known anything about it; no stigma would have been put upon them by Congress. It is very curious logic that people come voluntarily into these Halls and say, "We have done a certain thing which you do not approve, which the country does not approve, which does not approve itself to the mind of any right-thinking man, perhaps, for the sake of gain, or to avoid loss; we ask you to restore to us not only the advantages we have lost thus voluntarily, but to give us a preference, in fact, over others who took a different course from us, and if you do not do it it is putting a stigma on us." That is hardly an argument, I think, to be addressed to the sense of the Senate on a question of that description.

Why, sir, the argument which the Senator from Connecticut makes, that they did this thing because the country was unable to make them secure in the possession of their property, might as well be carried further, and it would justify any other mean or disloyal act that was done by any man simply because he thought himself in danger at the time his country was in danger. You may carry it out to justify desertion, or even treachery, as more is granted to one who desires to save his life than one who desires to save his property.

Sir, I am opposed to this whole thing, not only on the general principle which I have stated, but on the principle that carrying this out the effect is materially to injure the interests of men who were not exposed to the charge to which these gentlemen are exposed. They must take the consequences of their own act. They chose voluntarily to take their chance for the sake of gain. Let them be satisfied with it, and having saved their property and made their gain, let them not come and ask for more at the expense of others who are more worthy in that particular than they are themselves.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. The report of the committee was adverse in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no amendment be offered, the question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. FERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the vote is taken I desire to make one remark. I remember that several years ago while the war was raging, when there were various questions before the Senate of confiscation, of emancipation, of the enforcement of military rule in the rebel States, I said from my seat in this Chamber that I regarded all these measures, except the great act of emancipation, as acts of war for the maintenance of the rights of my country; that when those rights had been secured, and when there was no longer any reason for the enforcement of any of those rules, I would be among the foremost to insist upon removing them all; that no one should outdo me in clemency to any rebel the moment the time had come when that clemency could be shown with safety to the Republic. I am not sure that the time has yet come when all those rules which were then adopted with regard to the rebel States can be relaxed. I am not sure that it can be done consistently with the public safety.

But now I turn round to this other rule which was made to bear on the shipping interest of the northern States, and I apply to that the same principle that I would apply generally to the rebel States. I ask myself whether there is any reason of public safety that shall require the further maintenance of that rule. I cannot find it. The Senator from Maine says that the return of these vessels would bring a large interest in competition with another interest that is already in the country and which took no advantage of a foreign flag. It may be so. But I would ask whether that argument is not applicable to every proposed change in the rebel States; whether we can confer any rights on any individuals, or relax any of those severe rules anywhere in the rebel States, without, in some respects, directly or indirectly, bearing also upon faithful Unionists during the war? It seems to me that the argument, if apt in one case, is also apt in the other. For myself, so far as the rebel States are concerned, I fall back upon the position which I took some four or five years ago in this Chamber, that when the change can be made consistently with public safety it shall not want my vote. And now I ask that the same rule shall be applied to cases like that before us. I believe that there is no question of public safety now; I believe that this ship can be allowed to come back and take her old colors or her natural colors, the colors that belong to her, without the Government receiving any detriment.

Mr. MORGAN. As one member of the Committee on Commerce who reported this bill, I desire to say that I shall feel instructed by the decision of the Senate on this bill and I have no doubt the committee will also. This seems to be a test case. It is not like many others, where the captain of a vessel changed the flag in a foreign country without the knowledge of the owners. The flag was changed in this case by Mr. Trowbridge himself. There were two courses open to him while he was building his ship and when he concluded to send her to sea: he could pay the extra insurance, or he could make a sale of the ship and change its flag. He chose the latter course, and placed his ship under the British flag. Others chose the opposite, and paid the additional insurance. If the Senate shall decide that they will grant a register to Mr. Trowbridge, a highly-respectable gentleman, whom I have had the pleasure to know for a great number of years, I, as one member of the committee, shall consider this question settled, and that hereafter we are to grant all these applications. Heretofore we have granted none.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will suggest one other idea; and that is, that during the war all these vessels were in fact British vessels. They were under the British flag, engaged in British commerce; and their interest was, as it was the interest of British commerce, to destroy ours, what we had to destroy; and I am told as a matter of fact that the enemy got probably more information in regard to us through men sailing these vessels which were transferred to the British flag than they did from any other quarter. They were acting against us all the time necessarily, because they were British ships; and now they come and demand that they shall be taken back again under our flag. I think that I would extend mercy to the rebels that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts speaks of to-day quicker than I would grant a petition of this kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Ferry, Henderson, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Vickers, and Willey—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Fessenden, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, McCreery, Morgan, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Saulsbury, Tipton, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Yates—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Cattell, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Edmunds, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howe, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Thayer, and Wilson—23.

So the bill was rejected.

SALE OF SHIPS TO BELLIGERENTS.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. If the Senator from Michigan will allow me one moment, I wish to move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 94, declaratory of the law with regard to the sale of ships to friendly belligerents, was passed. It will take but a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the motion be entered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that motion will be entertained.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I merely wish to say that this bill pretends to settle by an act of legislation a grave question of international law. It also forecloses all action upon a case which for six weeks past has been under consideration by the Committee on Retrenchment. It is well known that the Navy Department has sold two of our iron-clads to the Peruvian Government, or to certain parties who have sold them to the Peruvian Government.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the motion to reconsider be entered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS W. WARD.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 542.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, collector of customs at Corpus Christi, Texas. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Thomas W. Ward, late collector of customs for the district of Corpus Christi, Texas, from March 5, 1867, to July 31, 1867, and to allow him the same compensation and emoluments as if he had been legally collector of customs for that district for that period. It further proposes to recognize the deputy collector appointed by Thomas W. Ward on the 7th of March, 1867, as the legal deputy collector of the district, and the accounting officers are to settle his accounts in the same manner as if he had been legally appointed and all his acts were legal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 764, for the relief of certain exporters of distilled spirits. It has been a long while before the Senate. I believe there is now no longer any objection to it; and it is very important that the bill should be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if he will not allow me to call up a bill? I do not wish to antagonize it to him; but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is not able to be here to-day, sent word to me that there was an urgent necessity for the passage of the bill appropriating $150,000 to sustain the Indian peace commission, so called. I suppose it will occupy but a moment, and I hope the Senator will allow that to be taken up.

Mr. MORGAN. When this bill is taken up, if it does not thereby lose its place, I shall not object to that measure being taken up; but I think the Senator had better let this bill be passed. I think it can be disposed of in a few minutes. It was up once before, but some objection was made, as it was feared there would be frauds under it; but I think those objections are removed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York, to take up the bill (H. R. No. 764) for the relief of certain exporters of distilled spirits.

Mr. HOWARD. I really hope that the Senate will not take up that bill, but will take up Senate bill No. 256, relating to the central branch Union Pacific railroad—a bill which has been before the Senate and has been pretty thoroughly discussed, and one which is of a great deal of importance, both to the Government and the parties who are interested in it. It has been pending before the Senate now for several months, and has been from time to time discussed, and I really hope the Senate will now consent to take it up and finish it, dispose of it one way or the other. I do not like, of course, to antagonize it against the bill of the honorable Senator from New York, but I do not see any other way that I can take. I hope, therefore, that the bill which is now mentioned will not be taken up, and that mine will be.

Mr. CONKLING. Without reference to the bill which it is proposed now to take up, I hope the Senator from Michigan will not insist upon taking up the bill that he suggests. The Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is not able to be here to-day, wishes to be heard on that bill, and has so stated. Several other Senators wish to be heard upon it; and to be entirely frank about it, I am one of those who have some observations to make upon the bill. I have investigated it with care since it was discussed before, and have provided myself with papers to put at rest some mooted questions with regard to it. It therefore certainly cannot be finished to-day, and I hope it will not be taken up in the absence of several Senators, two at least, who have announced their wish to be heard upon it when it is taken up.

I know my honorable friend from Michigan has proposed twice before to take up this bill, both times in the morning hour, when there was unfinished business which would cut it off at one o'clock; and the objection has been made by Senators that they wished to have an opportunity to discuss it, and therefore did not wish it to be taken up for ten or fifteen minutes or half an hour. Now, I will promise the Senator, for one, that if he will move to take up this bill at any time when the Senate is in its ordinary condition of fullness, after the morning hour, I will assist him to get it up, because I agree it ought to be disposed of one way or the other, although I differ with him entirely in saying that the public have any interest in it, except as to the question whether $2,500,000 shall be taken from the Treasury and a large donation of lands made. In that sense, of course, they have an interest. But every Senator who has been here to-day knows that at hardly any time has there been a quorum present. The Senate is somewhat fuller now than it was a few moments ago; but we all observe the unusual thinness of the body. I submit that a bill of this sort ought not to be taken up at such a time as this, and more especially not when, as I say, Senators wish to be heard, two of whom at least are detained on this occasion from sickness, and are unable to be present—the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.]

Mr. NYE. The Senator from New York says he desires to discuss the measure proposed to be taken up by the Senator from Michigan. There will probably be as much time to-day as he wants to use in his argument. I think it ought to be taken up. Here is a road that has only one end to it, and the bill ought to be taken up, and let these people who have been here all the winter dancing attendance on Congress know what their fate is to be. If it is taken up now, and the honorable Senator from New York commences the discussion, I know he will be able to speak the day out, especially if he has got the papers he says he has. I hope that he will use what little time there is left of to-day himself. Then so much of the argument will be over, and to-morrow, undoubtedly, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] will be here, and in that way we shall get along with the bill; but if the Senate wait until everybody is here who wants to make a speech upon it we shall probably not reach it this session. It is a question, I contend, that the public are interested in, outside of the sense which the honorable Senator from New York suggests. It is a question in which the public faith is concerned, as I look upon it; and I insist upon it, it ought to be determined one way or the other, for I do not misstate the case when I say that this road has no connection, and it is impossible to make one unless Congress do something to put the company upon their own resources or to give them means to carry on the work so far as to fulfill the faith originally pledged.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the Senator from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] perhaps had better accept the suggestion of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] with this modification: we should have an understanding that the bill will be taken up to-morrow at one o'clock. I think the bill ought to be considered, and I should like very much to hear the views of Senators upon it.

Mr. HOWARD. To-morrow has been set apart for the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. SUMNER and others. Oh, no; Saturday is set apart for pension bills.

Mr. HOWARD. If I can have such an understanding, I will be entirely content to take it up at one o'clock.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to add, as a reason why I would like a postponement until to-morrow, that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] will discuss the question as a lawyer, of course, and I should like to hear his views upon it. It is a law question, in my opinion, that is involved in this case. When the bill first came up I was decidedly against it, because I thought this road never ought to be a part of the Pacific railroad plan; but upon an examination of the law I find myself very much embarrassed about it. It is almost impossible to resist the conclusion that the law has committed Congress to the support of this road; and as I find myself thus embarrassed about it, I should like to hear the views of Senators who are opposed to the bill, and I shall oppose taking a vote in their absence. I suggest that it be the understanding that this bill be taken up to-morrow at one o'clock, and be disposed of to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana to name Monday, because if the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] should be well enough to be in his place to-morrow he will, undoubtedly, insist upon proceeding with the regular appropriation bills that are now pending.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let it be subject to that contingency.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. You had better place it beyond all contingencies, and have it understood when the bill is to come up.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There is no hurry about the appropriation bills. They have never failed yet, I believe, but once. As the friends of this bill have sought to have it considered so frequently, I think it is due that we should take it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on taking up the bill mentioned by the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN.]

Mr. SUMNER. I am in favor of the bill that is now moved by the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN.] Indeed, I am very anxious that it should be considered and passed. I am also in favor of the bill moved by my friend, the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD,] and I think that it ought to be taken up and passed. All things considered, I should prefer to proceed with the railroad bill this afternoon, and I think we might begin by listening to the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] who has enlightened us repeatedly on the subject, and, I have no doubt, will continue to do so as long as the bill is under discussion. But then he might begin this afternoon, if we should take it up at three o'clock. If the Senate is not disposed to proceed with it this afternoon, then I think that there should be an understanding that it shall be taken up at one o'clock to-morrow, and that nothing else shall be allowed to interfere with it until it is acted on finally. If the opposition of the Senator from New York should then prevail, be it so; but let us act upon it. I think that the bill is too important, whether you look at it in the light of the public interests involved or of the private interests in question, for the Senate to continue to sport with it, if I may be pardoned the expression, as it seems to me to have done during the last two months. Great interests are here in question. Private individuals have made large sacrifices, and they are now held in suspense. I do not think it right. I remember that the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] when he began the opposition to this bill, publicly announced here that the parties had an unquestionable equity. That was his own language. On looking into the bill, I am sure that he did not overstate the case; they have an unquestionable equity, and I think the Senate ought, therefore, to come to some understanding now to proceed with that bill until it is brought to a close.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to taking up the bill mentioned by the Senator from New York?

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to have an understanding with regard to the railroad bill, or I shall oppose taking up the other bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. The understanding is for those who agree to it. I do not agree to any such understanding. If the Senator from Maine comes in here to-morrow and asks us to take up an appropriation bill I shall vote to take it up against a railroad bill or any other private bill. It is true that the appropriation bills are never lost; they never can be lost; but they can be crowded into the heel of the session, so that they pass without any proper consideration; and every session we find in them, not only appropriations that are injudicious and inconsiderate, but we find legislation that never would have passed if we had had time to consider it. I will not agree, for one, to postpone these appropriation bills, which not only are necessary to carry on the Government, but which, by the system that has so long prevailed, contain a great deal of legislation for private interests, and let them be pushed aside to the close of the session when we are to pass them, as I have seen an appropriation bill passed here, without being read.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senate must conclude that it is time that the bill I have moved to take up was disposed of. It passed the House of Representatives on the 4th of March, came here a few days afterward, and had a favorable report from the Committee on Finance. I was instructed to report it, and as I supposed at the time without any opposition. It was brought up in the Senate, and it received some opposition from members of the Committee on Finance, and it was laid over. The business of all the persons engaged in the exportation of alcohol and rum to Africa has been suspended, hung up entirely, awaiting action on this bill; and no State has so much interest in it as the State of Massachusetts. I am therefore a little surprised at my friend on my right [Mr. SUMNER] stating that he would prefer of the two that the railroad bill should be taken up; a bill to grant a subsidy to a railroad in Kansas in preference to this bill relating to the exporters of New York and Boston.

Mr. NYE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York whether the Africans are suffering from the want of this rum, or the merchants of Boston are suffering from not being able to send it? [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. They are suffering both ways. [Laughter.]

Mr. TIPTON. I should like to have this question put in such a form that I could vote for taking up the bill designated by the Senator from New York; but I cannot do so unless I can have an understanding that the bill moved by the Senator from Michigan can come up to-morrow. If a motion can be made in that way, I shall vote to act on both bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Each must stand upon its own merits. There can be no such agreement except by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise, Mr. President, to join issue with the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] not in respect of his wit and facetiousness, both of which are great, nor in respect to the legislative morals, the idea of fair dealing among gentlemen which enters into the statement he makes. He seems to think that acting from what the doctors call vis a tergo, a pressure from behind, about this, it is quite right for him to insist that a bill of this private nature shall be pressed in the absence of Senators whom he knows, by reason of sickness, are detained from the Senate, and who have announced that they wish to be heard upon it. I have no quarrel with him on that subject.

Mr. SUMNER. What one Senator is in the predicament the Senator describes? It is all news to me.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Massachusetts condescended to pay attention to what other members of this body says, and particularly the humbler members of the body; if that honor had just now fallen to my lot when I stated, naming them, two Senators who wish to be heard on the subject, and who are detained from illness, I should be relieved from the Senator's rising from his seat and inquiring of me who is in that predicament. The Senator was not out of his seat, but he sat where he does now when I made the statement which I refer to.

Mr. President, I rose to take issue with the Senator upon his statement of fact. I rose to object to his saying to the Senate that I have repeatedly enlightened, or attempted to enlighten, the Senate upon this subject. That statement is wholly incorrect, although the Senator made it without any qualification. I once took the liberty, on the first occasion when this bill was up, of assigning my reasons for voting against it. I have never discussed it on any other occasion, unless literally I am to except the question which I put to the honorable Senator who sits behind me [Mr. HANLAN] when he addressed the Senate, for explanation. I have never discussed the question in any other way, except once or twice to interpose an objection to its being taken up, as it seemed to me out of season.

The truth is, then, Mr. President, that I did once address the Senate against this bill; and I have no apology to make to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts for so doing, although I have witnessed the extreme zeal on various occasions with which he has pressed this matter upon the Senate. On the occasion to which I refer several Senators, among others the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. POMEROY,] disputed—more than that—he contradicted directly a statement which I made, which I had received from others. Since that time I have taken pains to fortify myself; to find out whether, in truth, I was right or whether he was right; and I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that whenever this bill comes up again, unless the rules of the Senate are so changed as to confine observations in the body to the more eminent members of it, I shall take the liberty of going again somewhat over this ground, to the end that we may see whether in law or in equity we are bound to put our hands into the Treasury and take the sum of $2,500,000 from it and present it to these men, who, I believe in my conscience, in morals and in law, are no more entitled to it than my honorable friend who sits before me. I shall hold it my privilege to do that; and when I have done it, it will be true, should the Senator see fit to say it, that I shall have then twice addressed this body on the subject. But it is not true now that I have repeatedly, or more than once, attempted to enlighten the Senate or "vex the ear" of the Senate upon the merits of this bill.

Mr. HOWARD. It is not, perhaps, very material whether the honorable Senator from New York has addressed the Senate once or twice or three times on this subject. We all know very well his strenuous opposition to the bill; and we all know that he has gone into the subject heretofore very fully; at least I supposed he had done so. What I want at the hands of the Senate is that this bill shall be taken up and fairly heard and passed upon, as other bills in the nature of claims against the Government are passed upon; that it shall be considered, voted upon, and decided one way or the other, after whatever amount of discussion may be necessary. The bill has been lying on our tables for five months to-morrow, and has been somewhat discussed; I think sufficiently discussed; and I think it is of that nature which calls upon us to pass upon it either pro or con, and to satisfy the parties in interest, who have been waiting upon us here for the past five months and more, whether or not we will give them the relief, or any part of it, which they ask at our hands. The question simply addresses itself to our common sense, and I cannot but observe that the opposition to taking up this bill to-day comes from those gentlemen who have shown a decided opposition to the measure in all its forms and phases.

Mr. HOWE. The question, I believe, is on the motion to take up the bill referred to by the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the motion.

Mr. HOWE. I am decidedly in favor of that motion, because the Senator from New York is willing when his bill is taken up to let it be put aside for a moment to pass the bill in relation to the Indian peace commission, which, I am instructed, it is very important should be passed to-day; and I hope the Senate is ready to vote on the question of taking up that bill. I do not propose to antagonize it against the bill moved by the Senator from New York, because to this there is no objection, I understand, and it will occupy but a moment. But we seem likely to spend the day in discussing another bill which is not before us, nor is there any motion to bring it before us at present. I wish the Senate would take a vote on the motion to take up the bill of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the bill mentioned by the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. Now, I ask the consent of the Senator from New York to take up this other bill.

Mr. MORGAN. We can pass this right away.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the bill of the Senator from New York will be laid aside to pass the bill of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be laid aside informally, if there be no objection, for the purpose of taking up the other bill.

INDIAN PEACE COMMISSION.

Mr. HOWE. I now move to take up House bill No. 1218.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that bill has not been reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOWE. I am instructed to report, and I now do so.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 1218) appropriating money to sustain the Indian commission and carry out treaties made thereby was considered as in Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of carrying out treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes and defraying the expenses and disbursements made by the commission, authorized by the act of July 20, 1867, entitled "An act to establish peace with certain hostile Indian tribes during the year 1868." The bill appropriates the sum of $150,000, to be expended under the direction of the commission.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPORTERS OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 764) for the relief of certain exporters of distilled spirits, taken up on motion of the Senator from New York, is now before the Senate, and the pending question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the attention of the Senate will be called to this bill, because I think it is a very important one. I have no objection in the world to the exportation of rum that has been manufactured under the circumstances stated in this bill, that is, manufactured under a contract to be delivered for exportation. I have no desire to interfere with the exportation of honest dealers even in rum. But, in my judgment, the bill as it now stands, if passed, will open the door to whisky frauds to a very large extent. We passed, some time in January last, a bill prohibiting the exportation of spirits in bond, because it was shown to the Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance that frauds were practiced under pretense of exportation by exportation bonds to a very large extent. Cases were furnished to us. If the Senate will look at this bill they will see how it may be open to similar frauds. My only hesitation about the bill grew out of the fact that I feared under its provisions rum and alcohol might be exported in fraud of the law. I will read the bill:

That the act of January 11, 1868, entitled "An act to prevent frauds in the collection of tax on distilled spirits," be so construed as to permit alcohol and rum, which at the date of the passage of said act were already distilled or redistilled and intended for export, &c.

That embraces nearly all the alcohol in this country, or might be made so by proof that could easily be furnished by the "whisky ring"—an intangible thing that we can talk about! The bill authorizes the export of alcohol and rum.

"Which at the date of the passage of said act"—

That is, to-day, or to-morrow, whenever this bill passes—

"Were already distilled or redistilled and intended for export."

How easy it will be to prove that! It is said that there are now twenty million gallons of whisky on hand. I do not know how many gallons of alcohol there are. The one can be converted into the other with great rapidity. It is a mere process of distillation or redistillation, and it is a very simple one. Under this bill, by simply proving that the alcohol or rum, when it was manufactured, was intended for export, they have the right to export it under the old law; and they may do it in another case:

"Or actually contracted for to be delivered for exportation."

So that alcohol already in existence may be exported, either when it was "distilled or redistilled and intended for export"—how easy it will be to prove that fact—"or actually contracted for to be delivered for exportation." It will only be necessary for the exporter to furnish proof of either of these two states of fact in order to enable him to avoid and evade the law. Then he may give transportation or exportation bonds according to law and he may export it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senator what danger there is of fraud in that? If I understand the matter, the law was changed not because there was any aversion to the exportation itself, but because under the bonding system there were abuses by which the spirits pretended to be exported were really sold in this country. Now, if this is only intended for a particular article, limited in its character, is there any danger of its going into use in this country and not being actually exported?

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill simply repeals the act of January last as to all alcohol and rum which may be brought within either of those two classes; because the old law, the law which was repealed in January, provided for transportation and export bonds precisely as this will do. This bill furnishes no additional guard or restraint on the exportation of rum or alcohol. It simply provides that if proof is made that it was already distilled and was intended for export, or that it was contracted for exportation, the law is to stand as it did before the act of January last, and it may be exported under transportation bonds.

I know that no Senator desires to see the hold we have on the whisky on hand loosened. I have no doubt that in a short time, when we reduce the tax on spirits, we shall be able to get the revenue from nearly all the whisky on hand, which, according to official estimates, is twenty million gallons. Indeed, it has been estimated as high as forty millions; but I take the lowest, twenty millions. If that is so, we may by holding on to this whisky interfere somewhat with the legitimate trade in rum for Africa; but we shall at any rate prevent any further frauds in regard to the whisky on hand. That is the only fear I have had in regard to this bill. If it could be confined to the article of rum, which, according to the statements made to us, is the only article exported to Africa, the negro always preferring rum to whisky, and if it could be made with such guards as would prevent fraud in the exportation, I should have no objection whatever to the bill, because, as a matter of course, any revenue bill which we may pass will allow, under proper guards, the exportation of whisky and rum manufactured in this country. But I am satisfied, without now being able to offer the proper amendments, that this bill will open the door to fraud. I am satisfied, from a statement that has been made to me, that this bill will be the medium by which frauds will be committed on the revenue by the exportation of alcohol and whisky; because the proof required by this bill can be so easily furnished, will be so easily manufactured, will admit cases of fraud more easily than under the existing laws.

This is all I desire to say upon the subject. I know that the bill is pressed a great deal by merchants and others who desire to export rum, because it is a legitimate and fair trade in the ordinary course of business operations, and I do not desire to interfere with that trade; but I am afraid that this will be the entering wedge by which we shall lose more revenue ten times than the value of the trade in rum between this country and Africa.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the fact that there was a possibility that frauds might grow up under this bill led the committee to make inquiry and to be more than usually particular about it. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, after it passed the House, saw no difficulty in making regulations that would confine it entirely to the two articles of alcohol and rum. It is a mere question whether this bill shall be passed now, or whether we shall wait for the bill which is in the House of Representatives, in which they have provided, as I understand, for this very thing; but it is rather severe upon the merchants who have chartered shipping for this trade to be compelled to retain it in the harbor until after the passage of that bill. This bill is limited to sixty days, within which time the merchants are to be allowed to remove and export alcohol and rum "already distilled or redistilled and intended for export, or actually contracted for to be delivered for exportation."

All such spirits are to be actually exported within sixty days from the passage of this act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not confine it to that actually contracted for, by substituting the word "and" for "or" at the end of the seventh line; so as to read, "already distilled or redistilled and intended for export and actually contracted for," &c.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio whether that will not meet his objection, to just change the word "or" at the end of the seventh line into "and;" so that the bill will read:

That the act of January 11, &c., be so construed as to permit alcohol and rum, which at the date of the passage of said act were already distilled or redistilled and intended for export and actually contracted to be delivered for exportation, &c.

That will limit it to those who have made contracts. The law is very hard now on the men who have actually made contracts and are waiting for this permission to export.

Mr. SHERMAN. That amendment, as a matter of course, will take away one half of the chances of fraud. I think "alcohol" should also be stricken out. I am told the article of rum is a cheap article, and all the letters that have been written to me on this subject are about rum. If the Senator will also move to strike out "alcohol," in the sixth line, and confine it to rum, a distinct article of commerce, that will lessen the chances of fraud very materially, because alcohol is a very valuable product, and can be put in small bulk.

Mr. MORGAN. There is some alcohol exported to South America from New York and Baltimore; but it is an entirely different article from whisky, and is not known as whisky at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. Alcohol can be converted into whisky, and whisky into alcohol by a very simple process of distillation, I am told.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to know from the Senator from New York or the Senator from Ohio whether there was any evidence before the committee that any considerable quantity of these spirits were contracted for to be exported?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir. When the bill was up before—probably it escaped the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin—there was evidence presented to the Senate, especially from the collector of Boston and others, as to the number of vessels that were engaged for this trade, and how severely the law operated upon the commerce of that port. I have also myself received numerous letters, and I presume every member of the committee has, complaining very bitterly of this delay.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, the fact that several vessels in Boston had been employed in this trade would not be evidence that any merchants had outstanding contracts for spirits to be exported hereafter; and if that was urged there should be some evidence of it, it seems to me, before the committee, instead of letters from the merchants.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They will have to furnish the proof of the contract under this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. The exportation is to be under regulations made by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. HOWE. It is true they will have to furnish evidence of a contract; but getting that evidence hereafter is a very different thing from having it already, and having it submitted to the committee. I wish to ask one more question, and that is, if there was any evidence or any suggestion from any quarter that contracts were outstanding for the distillation of these spirits for export? For I see the bill provides for the case of spirits contracted to be distilled for export.

Mr. MORGAN. We have had letters on the subject; but no proof of it, except the communications from the parties.

Mr. HOWE. I have one suggestion to make upon that point. I understand—I suppose the Senator from New York knows that fact—that these liquors cannot be distilled for less than forty-five cents a gallon. Is not that about it?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know the exact expense. I am not well-informed on that subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that is the case with rum. Whisky can be manufactured for twenty-five cents.

Mr. HOWE. I take it whisky cannot be distilled for twenty-five cents a gallon as grain is now; but I am told that whisky has been selling at from fifteen to twenty cents in bond.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Rum is not made from grain.

Mr. HOWE. I am talking about whisky and alcohol. I do not think it very likely that merchants will be contracting to pay forty-five or even twenty-five cents to have spirits distilled to be exported when they can go into the market anywhere and buy in bond for fifteen or twenty cents.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The bill is now confined to rum.

Mr. HOWE. I did not so understand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We propose to strike out everything but rum.

Mr. HOWE. Well, that would make it purely a New England transaction, and I cannot have anything to say against that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Ohio has moved to strike out "alcohol." I suppose the bill would meet the case of the persons engaged in the African trade if that was stricken out; but there are some persons engaged in the South American trade who export alcohol. However, in order to have the bill passed, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move, then, to strike out in the sixth line the words "alcohol and," and also to strike out the word "or" at the end of the seventh line, and to insert the word "and."

Mr. FESSENDEN. And put a comma after the word "exportation" in the eighth line.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say in offering this amendment that I shall vote against the bill on the ground that frauds will be likely to arise under it; but I think this amendment will lessen the chances of their arising very greatly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was in line six to strike out the words "alcohol and," and in line seven, after the word "export" to strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and;" so that the bill will read:

That the act of January 11, 1868, entitled "An act to prevent frauds in the collection of tax on distilled spirits" be so construed as to permit rum, which at the date of the passage of said act was already distilled or redistilled and intended for export, and actually contracted for to be delivered for exportation, to be withdrawn, removed, &c.

* The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. After the word "act" in the twelfth line, I move to insert the words, "and as shall be provided for hereafter." The bill now provides that this exportation shall be under such regulations "as were required therefor immediately prior to the passage of said act." The exporters have got so familiar with those regulations that I am afraid they have learned to evade them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If you stop to pass new regulations, it will delay them all the time the Treasury Department is making them.

Mr. SHERMAN. They can be promulgated at once. All this exportation will be from one or two ports.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Still, it makes a delay in the time, and it is so small a matter that I think it had better stand as it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken. I have letters showing that there are at least a dozen vessels now waiting to transport this rum.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is comparatively small.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a pretty large amount of spirits.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, even with that amendment, it seems to me that this bill is opening a pretty wide door. I am a little suspicious whenever we attempt to legislate in favor of opening the doors on this whisky business.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill is now confined to rum.

Mr. NYE. I was going to say that it has a peculiar faculty of transforming as well as transporting itself. It will be rum when it starts, and alcohol when it comes out, or water. Two months ago I was in New York, and I met an old acquaintance of mine, a captain of a vessel, who said he was just in from Australia. I asked him what his cargo was. He said he supposed he carried out two thousand barrels of whisky, but when he got there and went to get his consul's certificate he found that he had carried two thousand barrels of water. I expect that will be about the way this New England rum will be transported: it will be water when it gets to Africa. In this process of being transported from one place to another, it will become alcohol first, Santa Cruz next, New England rum next, and all be back in the shape of whisky in the city of New York.

Now, sir, I feel kindly toward these gentlemen who want to export it out of the country. I think they are doing a great favor to the public! But, sir, it is not going out. The old trade in New England rum and slaves in Massachusetts is not quite done away with yet. I do not understand this African trade; there is an Australian trade carried on in the manner that I have stated; there is a Gulf of Mexico trade to Matamoros. All this article disappears, and nothing comes into the Treasury of the United States. I think the experience of the Senate will bear me out when I say that these bonds have been the fruitful source of all the frauds upon the Government. Here we see a redistillation bond mentioned. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York what kind of alcohol they make out of rum that is redistilled.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know.

Mr. NYE. That is in the bill. The honorable Senator from Ohio may possibly be more familiar with the subject than my friend from New York, and may be able to tell me what redistilled rum would be.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I cannot. Whenever I have seen rum I have always seen it in the raw state. [Laughter.]

Mr. NYE. I appeal to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] if he knows what redistilled rum is.

Mr. WILSON. No; I know what cold water is. [Laughter.]

Mr. NYE. That is the best thing; and that is what this will turn out to be—water, not cold, but warm. [Laughter.] I will inquire of any Senator what kind of rum is it that is redistilled?

Mr. SHERMAN. I imagine that that term applies only to alcohol.

Mr. NYE. I understand that is stricken out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know it is stricken out. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the subject to inform the Senator.

Mr. NYE. I do not know, but I suppose this bill applies to what we used to know as old New England rum. It is a beverage that is well known; but I never heard of its being redistilled into anything else. It will kill around the corner with the first distillation. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am afraid of this bill. I assure you that if there are twelve ships waiting, in view of the change this system is undergoing, they will take every gallon of liquor in the city of New York and the city of Boston under these export bonds.

Mr. SUMNER. You do not want to keep it at home?

Mr. NYE. No; but, as I say it is going to be devoured here, I want it to pay something to the Government. I know the care with which the Senator from New York investigates these things; but I am a little afraid that these men have got the weather-side of him in this maneuver to ship twelve ship-loads of rum, distilled or redistilled, to Africa. It seems to me that is not the current that rum takes; it is not the vein in which it runs. It will be lost in this whirlpool of the "whisky ring," and it will turn out as vapor or water on the coast of Africa. I think we had better keep it at home until something is paid on it. The moment these bonds are executed not one cent will ever be collected upon them, and not one gallon of this whisky or rum, in my judgment, will ever reach Africa or any foreign or South American port.

Sir, the whisky frauds have done more to demoralize this country than all other institutions that have been started. Your public officers all smell with fraud. They have been committed under the system of bonding; and it is a well-known fact that there has been a regular line, not of steamers, but of sailing ships from the city of New York, taking out whisky under export bonds in gutta-percha bags, transferring it at sea to another ship, and then bringing it back into our own ports, and using it here, thus defrauding the Government out of every cent of revenue upon it. Sir, I mistrust this bill. As a change in the tax bill is anticipated, I suppose there is a great desire to run out quickly this accumulation of rum and alcohol, so as to get it back and get it into shape before the taxes are knocked entirely off. I think that, perhaps, is the hope about it. If there is any expectation of getting anything to the Government from whisky it seems to me we had better hold on to what we have got as a sort of security, to be transferred with other assets when our friends on the other side shall get into power. [Laughter.] We shall then hand over to them the whisky in bond.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, it should be borne in mind that we had laws up to the passage of the law repealing the bonded warehouse system in relation to whisky that permitted these parties to engage in the exportation of rum. It was suddenly shut down upon them without a moment's notice. Many of them had made written charters, as was in evidence before the committee, for vessels in this trade. A large share, perhaps two thirds of all this business, is done at the port of Boston. We had before the committee a statement from the collector of Boston that there never has been a case of fraud known in that port in relation to this trade.

Now the question again arises whether we shall permit this article of rum to go out of the country, and to continue a certain kind of trade that is profitable to the country. They get returns of palm oil; they get ivory; and there are many articles that we get, even from Liberia, in return for this article.

I am perfectly aware that it is almost impossible that we can have any bonded system by which we can absolutely determine that there shall be no frauds; but I think that there are as many guards and securities about this bill as perhaps we can put on by legislation. The time which it is to run is extremely short. It is only for sixty days, allowing parties to get rid of the obligations upon which they have entered. I think it is safe for the Senate to allow the bill to pass.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator answer me a couple of questions before he sits down?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I cannot promise that beforehand.

Mr. HOWE. The first question I should like to be informed upon, and I ask it for information, is whether the Senator remembers, as he is more likely to do than I would, the amount of rum exported from this country during the last fiscal year?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not remember how much was exported. I know that there have been great frauds in relation to it; but I do not remember the amount.

Mr. HOWE. You know that there have been great frauds?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I know that there have been great frauds in relation to our exports; I mean of whisky.

Mr. HOWE. I refer to rum.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. No; I do not know how much has been exported.

Mr. ANTHONY. There has not been a single fraud in the export of rum.

Mr. HOWE. I am told there has not been a single fraud in the export of rum. If that is so, the returns must show it; and I supposed the Senator from Vermont was familiar with the amount of export. There is another question I desire to ask which I will put to the Senator from New York. I notice that this bill as reported only asked thirty days to close up these contracts. It has been delayed here on its passage for several weeks, and now they ask for sixty days. I assume that there cannot be any more under contract now than there was then, for in the face of this hostility to permitting this export, I take it new contracts would not be made. I ask why sixty days are required now when only thirty were deemed necessary when the bill was first before us?

Mr. MORGAN. As the bill passed the House of Representatives, it was fixed at thirty days; but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue thought the time was too short within which to prepare the regulations, and the Committee on Finance unanimously agreed to recommend sixty days; and we did recommend sixty days at that time.

Mr. HOWE. I understand that by the bill as reported from the Committee on Finance this export was to be made under regulations already out, and not under new regulations, and that these new regulations have been provided for by an amendment introduced by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. They may be.

Mr. HOWE. They may be new regulations?

Mr. MORGAN. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue told me that thirty days was too short a period to enable him to make regulations and obtain the necessary proof; that the whole thirty days would be taken up in that way. We therefore amended it so as to make it sixty days.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Vermont. I really do not understand what is meant by redistillation in Africa.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not to be redistilled there, but here.

Mr. SHERMAN. I feel quite sure that the word "redistillation" applies to the article of alcohol alone. Alcohol may be redistilled and changed, and as we have stricken out the word "alcohol," we ought properly to strike out the word "redistilled;" but I am not sufficiently positive as to whether rum can be redistilled.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What harm will it do to leave it in? It may be that they sometimes redistill rum to refine the quality.

Mr. HOWARD. I merely wanted an explanation. There seemed to be a dark cloud on that branch of the subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no danger about it. It remains rum anyhow.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, let it pass as it is. It cannot do any harm.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it may.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 13, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Cragin, Fessenden, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Davis, Ferry, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, McCroery, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Thayer, Tipton, and Trumbull—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Edmunds, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Saulsbury, Stewart, Vickers, Wade, and Yates—24.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE afterward submitted a motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the bill; and the motion was entered.

ROCK ISLAND BRIDGE.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 201) in relation to the Rock Island bridge.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

It proposes to amend the act of Congress "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1867, as to direct the Secretary of War to order the commencement of work on the bridge over the Mississippi river at Rock Island; but the ownership of the bridge is to be and remain in the United States, and the Rock Island Pacific Railroad Company is to have the right of way over the bridge for all purposes of transit across the island and river, upon condition that the company shall pay to the United States, first, half the cost of the superstructure of the bridge over the main channel and half the cost of keeping the same in repair, and shall also build at its own cost the bridge over that part of the river which is on the east side of the island of Rock Island, and also the railroad on and across the island of Rock Island. Upon a full compliance with these conditions the railroad company is to have the use of the bridge for the purposes of free transit, but without any claim to its ownership. The railroad company, within six months after the new bridge is ready for use, are to remove their old bridge from the river and their railroad track from its present location on the island of Rock Island. The Government may permit any other road or roads wishing to cross on the bridge to do so by paying to the parties then in interest the proportionate cost of the bridge; but no such permission to other roads is to impair the right granted to the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railroad Company, and the total cost of the bridge is not to exceed the estimates made by the commissioners appointed under the act approved June 27, 1866.

In case the Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company shall neglect or fail, for sixty days after the passage of the resolution, to make and guarantee the agreement specified in the act of appropriation, approved March 2, 1867, then the Secretary of War is required to direct the removal of the existing bridge and to direct the construction of the bridge herein mentioned, and expend the money appropriated for that purpose in that act; and the Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company is not to have, acquire, or enjoy any right of way or privilege thereon, or the use of the said bridge, until the agreement shall be made and guaranteed according to the terms and conditions of the act of appropriation.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads reported the joint resolution with an amendment, to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That any bridge built under the provisions of this act, shall be constructed so as to conform to the requirements of section two of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges, and to establish them as post roads," approved July 25, 1865.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to this joint resolution. It looks extremely harmless; but, in my judgment, instead of its being a measure of that character, it is one that will involve the Government not only in needless expense, but in a needless law-suit. Instead of enlarging the powers that we have already granted to this company, our business should be to repeal what we have heretofore done. Why should we make an agreement to build a bridge there and keep it in repair, and that the company is only to restore one half of the cost to us? But not content with the law as it stands, they propose that we shall go forward and tear down an existing structure and build another. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to this kind of legislation, which, if I might be permitted to characterize it, I would say was monstrous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask for the yeas and nays, for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Vermont surely does not want the yeas and nays on this amendment, which requires that the bridge shall conform to the general law on the subject of bridges over the Mississippi river.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. No; I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to the subject. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to say in relation to this amendment, that I have no wish that the amendment should be adopted, nor do I deem it necessary. The bridge is to be constructed under the direction of the engineers of the War Department, and it can hardly be supposed to be probable that they would construct a bridge that would materially obstruct navigation. Therefore I do not think that amendment necessary. But a majority of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads directed it to be reported. I shall vote against the amendment myself.

Mr. RAMSEY. The good thing that there is in this resolution is that it supersedes the old Rock Island bridge, which has been a great nuisance to the navigators of the river. It is objectionable in a great many ways, and has been the cause of the destruction of a great deal of property on that river. The people injured have been in the courts of the United States; they have been all around trying to get rid of it, and at length they have hit upon this plan. That is the merit of this resolution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask the Senator from Minnesota whether there is any more property in the United States building a bridge here than there is in building a bridge over any other river throughout the United States? Why should the United States be put to the expense of building a bridge at this point rather than at any other in the United States? For myself I can see no reason for it whatever.

Mr. RAMSEY. Certainly the Senator will concede that for a great many years, in the courts and in every other way, the steamboat men and the river men of the West have attempted to get rid of the old Rock Island bridge, which is a nuisance and a curse to the navigation of the river, chiefly because the piers instead of being placed parallel with the thread of the stream, as the laws now require, were placed obliquely, causing a great destruction of property on the river. The river men have attempted to get rid of it. They have gone into the courts and everywhere else, but they could not do it. At length they hit on this happy compromise with the Government, that when another bridge is built the existing bridge shall then be removed. That is the great merit of this thing, and led the Post Office Committee to give its assent to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think I can answer the Senator from Vermont, who inquired why the Government should build a bridge here more than anywhere else over a river. The Senator certainly is aware that the Government of the United States is the owner of the island of Rock Island in the Mississippi river, a large island—I do not remember the precise number of acres, but I should think two thousand acres of land—which it has reserved from sale from the beginning, as a most desirable and useful point to be held by the United States Government; and some years ago a law was passed establishing an arsenal and armory at Rock Island. The Government has commenced very expensive works there. When the rebellion broke out it had not in all the Northwest a single deposit of arms. This is being made the great armory for the Northwest; it is located on the Mississippi river near where railroads cross; and it is necessary, in the opinion of the Government engineers, that the Government of the United States should have bridges to connect this island both with the Illinois shore and with the Iowa shore. The value of the great works which the Government is erecting there depend upon having this connection; they must have it with the shores; and the Government is about to erect a bridge as a necessity for the works which are being established there. This is being made the great depot for arms in all the Northwest.

The Government owns the whole of the island. The Government has taken steps since it commenced these works to procure the title to a small portion of the island upon which preemption claims were established some years ago, and has also acquired the title to some very small islands contiguous to this island of Rock Island. There is great water power there, with all the advantages for an armory and arsenal that could be obtained anywhere. At any rate, the Government has always so supposed and has selected it. The reason why the Government is interested in the bridge is because the works erected there will be almost valueless without it. You must have a bridge. How are you going to get to the island of Rock Island? It is separated from the main body of the land on both sides. We have had a bridge connecting the island with the Illinois shore, put there by private parties years ago; but I think it has been injured or partially carried away recently.

Mr. WILSON. We have got to build a bridge there.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Unquestionably we have. Then the question arises whether there should be two bridges. The Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company has a bridge now which crosses the river north of the island, and is erected at a point where the navigating interests have complained very much of it, whether rightly or not I will not undertake to say. But they have their railroad bridge, and this arrangement was entered into between the Government of the United States, acting through the War Department, and the owners of this railroad bridge, by which they agreed that their bridge might come down and they would pay half the expense of erecting a bridge at another point which it was supposed would be less objectionable to navigation and which is absolutely necessary to the Government. The Government must have it. This plan has received the sanction of the Government officials, is recommended by the engineers, and indorsed by the Department of War, by Mr. Stanton when he was Secretary of War. I am not sure whether General Schofield has made a formal recommendation or not; but General Schofield was one of the commission appointed under authority of the War Department who assessed the damages that were to be paid to parties who had interests in Rock Island, and he is familiar with this whole matter. I think there is a reason why the Government of the United States needs a bridge here that does not apply to any other point that I know of: it is an absolute necessity that the Government of the United States must have it.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, this is not a new proposition. In the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1867, this appropriation was made, with the proviso which I will read:

"For the erection of a bridge at Rock Island, Illinois, as recommended by the chief of ordnance, $200,000: Provided, That the ownership of said bridge shall be and remain in the United States, and the Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company shall have the right of way over said bridge for all purposes of transit across the island and river, upon condition that the said company shall, before any money is expended by the Government, agree to pay and shall secure to the United States, first, half the cost of said bridge; and second, half the expenses of keeping said bridge in repair; and upon guaranteeing said conditions to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, by contract or otherwise, the said company shall have the free use of said bridge for purposes of transit, but without any claim to ownership thereof."

When they attempted to carry out this arrangement between the company and the Secretary of War, in pursuance of the provisions of this law, it was ascertained that the company had not the legal power under its charter to make the contract. The company and the Secretary of War ad interim—General Grant was then, I believe, acting as Secretary of War—made an arrangement in, I believe, the precise terms of this resolution, except the amendment which is now pending, and intended to execute it as a contract under the law which I have read; but when the question was submitted to the Attorney General, with a view of having the contract executed, he examined the charter of the company referred to, and decided that, in his opinion, they had not the legal right to make such a contract, and on that account the question came up in the House of Representatives, and they have proposed to enact the contract previously drawn up under the direction of the Secretary of War between the Government and this company.

This explains the origin of the bill. It is in pursuance of a law now existing, and is intended to provide a legal remedy to enable one of the parties to carry out in contract what Congress intended it should do under the law which I have read.

I might state in relation to the merits of the question, (although it seems to me they are not now properly pending,) that Congress has already decided that this bridge shall be built; it has provided for it by a law now on the statute-book, providing that the company shall pay one-half and the United States the other half of the expense. The reasons for that, I apprehend, were those which have been hinted at by the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The Rock Island Railroad Company had a bridge for railroad purposes which was badly constructed, which was an impediment to navigation. The people above on the river complained very much of the existence of the bridge as a partial obstruction to commerce; and so with the people below, particularly the merchants at St. Louis. They desired the removal of that bridge. The bridge was sufficient for the purposes of the company, but they have agreed that their bridge shall be destroyed and that they will pay half the expense of constructing another bridge.

At the same time the Government needs a bridge, and if this company should not thus unite with it, would be under the necessity of constructing one at its own expense.

The resolution also provides that if any other railroad company shall desire to use this bridge for the purposes of transit across the river, it may do so by paying a just proportion of the expense. It is believed, I think, that another railroad company will use the bridge, and thus diminish the cost of this structure to the Government of the United States to one third. I was told but a minute since by one of the colleagues of the honorable Senator from Illinois that the Secretary of War has asked for an appropriation of $100,000, which is now pending before the House of Representatives, for the construction of a bridge between the island and the main land on the Illinois shore. If this resolution should pass, the railroad company would be compelled to build that structure; and this member of the House desired very much that the Senate should act on this measure so that they might know what to do with the Secretary's recommendation in relation to an appropriation for that structure. It will be seen by looking at the top of the second page that this resolution provides that this company "shall also build at its own cost the bridge over that part of the river which is on the east side of the island of Rock Island, and also the railroad on and across said island of Rock Island," so that if it becomes a law this company will be obligated to build the bridge at its own cost on the east side of the island, and pay the whole cost of moving the track of the road across the island, and one half of the entire cost of the main structure on the west side of the island. There is, it seems to me, no reasonable objection to the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I desire that the Senate should fully understand this question. It is true that the Government of the United States has some interest upon this island. After they established a Government arsenal there they bought out a bridge connecting with the Illinois shore and paid for it. The Senator from Illinois is mistaken if he supposes that any Secretary of War has ever recommended this measure. General Grant recommended it, but no Secretary Stanton has ever committed his name to any paper recommending this at all, as I understand.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think I am not. That is according to the information I had in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TRUMBULL. My information is directly the reverse.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The information before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was that he declined to do it. Mr. President, does it look likely that the United States want a railroad across there? Do they own any railroad, that they are compelled to have a railroad bridge? I know that the Senators from Iowa and Illinois would like to have the United States build a bridge across there. They not only want a bridge built for the accommodation of ordinary travel, but a railroad bridge. They want it so that the men who are employed on the island can go across to Iowa, and buy lager beer, peanuts, and tobacco daily; they want some portion of the trade of that island; but it is utterly idle to contend here that the United States have an interest that requires them to lay out a million of money in building a bridge across this stream. We might as well be required to build a bridge across the Ohio or Mississippi at almost any other point as to be required to build this bridge.

Imprudently, as I think, Congress passed a previous law agreeing to build one half of the bridge provided this Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company would build the other half; but the railroad company declining to do it, we now have a bill sent to us from the other House directing that the United States Government shall commence at once upon the work of building a bridge entirely at its own cost, leaving it to the option of the railroad company whether it will come forward hereafter and pay one half the expense or not, or pay one half the expense of keeping it in repair. Why should we keep up a magnificent structure, half at our expense, even if the company should come forward and agree to this contract? Why should we not only build a bridge, or build one half of it if they come into the contract, and pay one half the expense of keeping it in repair for all time to come, when for all the purposes that the United States want any connection with the Iowa shore for we can build a bridge for one tenth part the sum?

Mr. CONKLING. What does the bill provide on that point? That we are to keep only half of it in repair?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. This changes the law. Under the old law we were to build one half the bridge and keep one half in repair. This bill sets out that we are to commence and build the bridge at once, and then it provides that if the company shall come forward and pay one half the expense they may do so.

Mr. President, there is more under this bill than even this. It is said that the present existing bridge there is a nuisance. If it is a nuisance, why not go to the courts and have it abated? Why should we legislate a nuisance out of existence?

Mr. RAMSEY. People have been in the courts for many years and expended a vast amount of money in litigation to get rid of this bridge, and they cannot do it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Because the courts will not declare, and they cannot prove that it is a nuisance.

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes they have proved it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Then the courts have not done their duty.

Mr. RAMSEY. There are legal quibbles, you know.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Ah!

Mr. RAMSEY. If the Senator will allow me further, I will say that actions are brought in the United States district court for Illinois. That court has jurisdiction of only part of the river, and cannot order down the whole bridge. Suits are brought also in the district court for Iowa, and there the same difficulty is encountered. The court has jurisdiction over only half the river, and cannot disturb the whole bridge.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think it is very safe to leave the matter in the hands of the Legislatures of those two States. I do not understand why we are to determine a lawsuit in relation to a railroad bridge across the upper Mississippi; nor can I understand why we are suddenly called upon to commence this structure and to build a bridge beyond what it will be even pretended is required for the purposes of the United States. If the United States want an opportunity for their workmen to get across into Iowa, where they can buy lager-beer cheaper than they can in Illinois, let them say so; bring in a bill here for that purpose, not bring one in here that is to cost a million or more of money.

It is claimed here that the old bridge is a nuisance. Is there anything to guard against the new bridge being a nuisance? The Senator from Iowa has just said that he did not care anything about this last amendment proposed to guard that particular point. We have got one nuisance, and the Senator from Iowa is quite willing that the bill should pass without any protection or safeguard against erecting another—

Mr. HARLAN. The Senator certainly does not intend to misrepresent me.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not.

Mr. HARLAN. I stated in connection with that, that I had no belief that the engineers of the War Department would construct a bridge so as to create a nuisance. Therefore I did not deem the amendment necessary. I thought it would be necessary, if we were incorporating a company to build a bridge, to guard against an improper structure; but as this is to be constructed under officials of this Government, engineers of the Army, I had full confidence they would build it on the best plan; and for that reason I had no wish that this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. When this matter was up before I was quite willing that this company should be allowed to build one half this bridge and allow the law to stand as it is, compelling the United States to build the other half; but, on examining it, I think the previous law ought to be repealed. I think it was highly imprudent that the United States ever engaged to build any portion of this bridge. I see no propriety in any expenditure on the part of the Government for any such structure as is contemplated by this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Minnesota having charge of this bill, what is the estimated cost of the bridge; how much will it be necessary for the Government of the United States to appropriate in order to construct the bridge now contemplated?

Mr. HARLAN. I have not the report of the board of engineers that had this matter under examination, and am unable therefore to answer the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have no recollection of it. It has been in charge of the Senator from Iowa for a long while. If the question is on the amendment I think there is a misprint in regard to that. Am I correct? Is the question on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RAMSEY. The third section, which is the amendment, reads thus:

And be it further resolved, That any bridge built under the provisions of this resolution shall be constructed so as to conform to the requirements of section two of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to establish them as post roads," approved July 25, 1865.

There was no Congress in session in July, 1865; but the general Mississippi river bridge bill is the act of July 25, 1866. The second section of that act provides all the requirements that Congress have recently thought ought to be imposed on bridge-building on that river. Section two of that act provides:

"That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a draw-bridge, with a pivot or other form of draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans: Provided, That if the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, it shall not be of less elevation in any case than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than two hundred and fifty feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river and not less than three hundred feet in length: And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in length, in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining spans to the draw shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet; and said spans shall not be less than thirty feet above low-water mark and not less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark, measuring to the bottom chord of the bridge, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the permanent spans of said bridge, except when trains are passing over the same; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw during or after the passage of trains."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The error will be corrected by substituting 1866 for 1865, if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection, and that correction is made. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the gentlemen in charge of this measure ought to give us the cost of the bridge, because it seems from the papers that the cost is referred to and has been estimated by the Government and the estimates are on file. I should like to know myself what the cost of this bridge is to be, whether $200,000 or $1,000,000. The amount appropriated is $200,000.

Mr. WILSON. I hope this measure will go over until we can ascertain the facts of the case.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope it will go over until next December, and I make the motion that it be postponed until December next. If anybody will look at the second section, he will see that we provide not only for building one bridge, but for removing another. I move that the bill be postponed until December. That will leave the existing law which compels us to build one half the bridge, provided the railroad company build the other half, and I think that is quite enough and much more than we ought to do.

Mr. HARLAN. That is just what this joint resolution provides for: it reenacts the old law, but puts it in such a shape that it can be executed. The law as it stands would be sufficient if it could be carried into effect. The Senator says he is satisfied with the law as it exists.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. No; I am not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like for information to ask the Senator from Iowa one question. Are there any bridges now connecting the island with the main land?

Mr. HARLAN. There is none on the Illinois side. The bridge there has been swept away; and I have in my hand now a communication signed "J. M. Schofield, Secretary of War," recommending an appropriation of $100,000 to put in the bridge between the island and the Illinois shore, which bridge, if this resolution shall pass, will be constructed by the railroad company.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that the only bridge now is the one connecting the island with Iowa?

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is no bridge now connecting the island on either side. There is no bridge from the island to Iowa, except the railroad bridge.

Mr. HARLAN. It is not a carriage bridge; it is a railroad bridge. It touches the island at a point above the point named in this resolution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The communication of the Secretary of War transmits a report of the ordnance office, which says:

"The temporary bridge connecting Rock Island arsenal with the city of Rock Island, on the Illinois shore, was destroyed by ice and flood during the past winter, and there are now no means of communication between them but a temporary ferry. The necessities of the public service require frequent communication of persons and transfer of materials between the city and arsenal, and the reestablishment of a bridge is necessary. A permanent bridge is preferable for every reason, and on the ground of economy. The estimate for the construction of such a bridge is $100,000, and I recommend that an appropriation of that sum be requested from Congress for the purpose."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That is in addition to this bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is a communication dated on the 3d day of June. I am reading from a letter of General Dyer, who is chief of ordnance; and that letter is communicated by the Secretary of War in the following letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON CITY, June 8, 1868.

Sir: I have the honor to send herewith, for the consideration of the proper committee, a communication of June 3 from the chief of ordnance, recommending an appropriation of $100,000 for the construction of a bridge to connect Rock Island arsenal with the city of Rock Island, Illinois.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Secretary of War.

HON. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Now, this bridge having been carried away, there is a necessity for a bridge at once; but this is not required if the bill passes, because the bill under consideration makes provision for a bridge connecting the island with the Illinois shore, as well as for a bridge connecting the island with the Iowa shore. General Schofield was one of the commissioners that made the estimates, fixed the proportions which it was proper should be paid by this railroad company to the Government; and I have been assured by two members of the House of Representatives, since this debate began, that this bill did have the sanction of the Secretary of War; that the Secretary of War himself framed it in part; that it was submitted to him and had his sanction; and that that Secretary of War was Mr. Stanton. I am authorized to state that on the authority of two members of the House of Representatives, given to me within the last ten minutes.

I trust, Mr. President, that this matter is not to be postponed on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, because he supposes that this bridge is to cost something. Of course it is to cost something; we expect it to cost something. And is it not something appropriate to the armory at Springfield? Can you manufacture guns and cannon without some expense? After having commenced these works upon this island are you to stop?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. We do not want a railroad there.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Do you not want bridges?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Not there.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If there is a necessity to connect the island with the main shore you must have a bridge to do it. The War Department thinks there is such a necessity and an immediate necessity for such a bridge, and any one would know that there was a necessity for it, I should think.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The bridge that was carried away cost $14,000, and I suppose another one could be built for the same money.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont has been there and knows what it will cost. I know nothing except the information communicated here officially. According to the estimate of the engineers of the Government, it is economy to build a bridge that will cost $100,000. The Senator from Vermont says that $14,000 built the old bridge. I am not advised about that, he may be correct; I do not know what it cost; but I do know, according to the estimates of the proper officers of the engineers whose duty it is to inquire into this matter, that the expense of a proper bridge will be $100,000. Now it is proposed not to have a bridge at all, and to postpone this measure until next December. Then you had better sell your Rock Island arsenal and armory. Sir, in my judgment, it would be most miserable economy to postpone the passage of a proper bill to carry out the existing law. This is no new matter. As the Senator from Iowa has already stated, the law made provision before for this bridge, but in carrying into effect the provisions of that law the railroad company and the Government were unable to make a contract which was satisfactory to both parties without some further legislation, and this measure is framed with a view to enacting the necessary legislation. It is the joint result of a conference between the War Department and this railroad company, and it has the sanction of the War Department.

Mr. WILSON. I should be glad to look into two or three points connected with this measure, and with the consent of the Senator having it in charge, I propose that we now go into executive session. By this course we shall have some time to look into the matter.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is no objection to that, certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to make a report from the committee of conference on the bill for the removal of political disabilities.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw my motion to allow that report to be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 164) to provide for appeals from the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 377) to change the times of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the several districts in the State of Tennessee.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following report:

The committee of conference of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1059) to relieve certain citizens of North Carolina of disabilities, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments:
Strike out "George S. Houston, of Alabama," and "George W. Jones, of Tennessee."
Strike out "and Tennessee," where it first occurs in section four, and insert "and" after "Arkansas" where it first occurs in section four.
Also, strike out "Robert Austin," of North Carolina, and insert "Robert H. Austin."
Strike out "Wiley D. Jones," of North Carolina, and insert "Willie Jones."
Strike out "Eugene Grisson," of North Carolina, and insert "Eugene Grissom."
Strike out "John D. Ashmond," of South Carolina, and insert "J. D. Ashmore."
Strike out "John M. Rusty [or Burtz]."

WILLIAM STEWART,
HENRY WILSON,
JOHN SHERMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate,
J. F. FARNSWORTH,
H. E. PAINE,

Managers on the part of the House,

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish simply to express my contempt for the small business that has been accomplished by this committee of conference. I mean no disrespect to the gentlemen representing the Senate, for I believe they have tried to represent the Senate. Selecting two names and striking them out because they are not of a political party to satisfy the House of Representatives! I venture to say that there is no name in the list contained in this bill that has as much support in favor of his attachment to this Union as that of George W. Jones, of Tennessee. I know that before the Committee on the Judiciary there was no such evidence in support of any single name as was given yesterday by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] in support of George W. Jones. For years he stood up against every influence at the South that tended to bring on the conflict, against this party to some extent, against men, that led in the efforts to bring about a clash between the two sections of the Union.

And now, for no reason except that there is no evidence that he has attached himself to a political party, he is to be stricken out of this bill removing disabilities. He has not been in any of the States where the reconstruction policy has been carried out. Of course he has given no opposition to that, because he has not been there. He is a citizen of Tennessee who, so far as I know, has been living a quiet, retired, unobtrusive life, who has participated to no extent in public affairs since the war was over. I have not heard of his taking any part in any of the controversies in the southern States; he has had no opportunity to show any hostility to the party in power; but he has been leading a quiet, retired life. Now he is stricken out of this bill. I do not make an objection particularly to the other name that is named being stricken out. Perhaps the committee have some reason for that in the fact that Mr. Houston was a member of Congress, as I now understand—I did not recollect it before—and withdrew from Congress at the time his State seceded. I knew of him that prior to secession he occupied very much the same position that Mr. Jones did, that he was a conservative man, giving his influence, and all of his influence, against the schemes of the extreme men of the South.

I regret now that I insisted on the name of Mr. Jones being added to the bill; it has to be yielded after the Senate by a unanimous vote put it in—a unanimous vote on the testimony of Senators themselves. The question is whether we shall recede from the position we took. I hope the Senate will not do it. I shall not insist upon the other name, because there is some doubt about it in the fact I have mentioned that was brought to my attention by the Senator from Nevada—a fact not known to him until, perhaps, to-day. I do not insist about that; but in regard to George W. Jones I say there is more evidence in favor of the propriety of his restoration to the full exercise of the right of citizenship than in regard to any other name in the bill.

There is not one of these men that can produce as much evidence. George W. Jones contributed not one particle to bring on this rebellion; he gave all his influence against it; while in this bill there are men who did everything they could to bring it on, whose hands are stained with northern blood, who participated in the war, fought in the battles, were in the secession legislatures, voted to take their States out; and they are to be restored while such a man as George W. Jones is to be kept out!

Of course any man will have feeling about a thing of that kind. Such palpable wrongs every man ought to denounce here and everywhere. I speak, sir, because I like George W. Jones, as every man liked him that served with him in the House of Representatives, not only because of his personal qualities, but because of his devotion to the public service and its integrity. Of all the men of the South I do not know a better man. He is incomparably above the men who went into the strife and now seek to avoid the responsibility of it by political action. Compare him not with the Holdens and that class of men! It cannot be done! I ask the Senate in regard to Mr. Jones to stand by its unanimous vote of yesterday.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have not much confidence in rebels who come in and profess to be Radicals. I would give them very little if any trust except in a very special case. Now, I would suggest that the Senate reject this report of the committee of conference, and that another committee be appointed to confer with the committee on the part of the House, and that they adopt a short, plain comprehensive bill in about these terms:

Be it enacted, That every red-handed rebel who took part against the Government of the United States in the late war, whose hands are still red with the blood of Union soldiers, upon taking an oath that he will support the Radical party shall be, and he is hereby, reinstated in all his rights, civil, political, and social.

Mr. STEWART. Would the Senator from Kentucky vote for that bill?

Mr. DAVIS. I would as soon vote for that bill as vote for the one under consideration. I think that in principle and in justice that would be about equivalent to this.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the report.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Cole, Cragin, Fessenden, Harlan, Henderson, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Doolittle, Hendricks, McCreery, Patterson of Tennessee, Ross, and Van Winkle—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Chandler, Conkling, Connors, Corbett, Dixon, Drake, Edmunds, Ferry, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Saulsbury, Tipton, Vickers, and Yates—25.

So the report was concurred in.

COURTS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. WILSON. I renew my motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow us to dispose of two bills which have been returned from the House of Representatives with amendments? I think the Senate can dispose of them in a moment if the Chair will lay them before the body.

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 377) to change the times of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the several districts in the State of Tennessee.

The amendment was in line five, to strike out the words "March and September" and insert "January and July."

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives. It merely changes the time when a court is to be held.

The amendment was concurred in.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 164) to provide for appeals from the Court of Claims, and for other purposes.

The amendment was to insert the following section after the eighth section of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the clerk of the said Court of Claims to transmit to Congress, at the commencement of every December session, a full and complete statement of all the judgments rendered by the said court for the previous year; stating the amounts therefor and the parties in whose favor rendered, together with a brief synopsis of the nature of the claims upon which said judgments have been rendered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 18, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

VACANCIES ON COMMITTEES FILLED.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. DELANO to fill the vacancy in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and Mr. KNOTT to fill the vacancy in the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BINGHAM moved that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Ames, Axtell, Baldwin, Barnes, Barnum, Boyer, Brouwell, Brooks, Burr, Cook, Covode, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Grover, Holman, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Judd, Kelley, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Mallory, Marshall, Miller, Morrissey, Mungen, Nunn, Orth, Perham, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Kaum, Ross, Selye, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Taylor, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and twenty members have answered to their names, and a quorum is present.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now desire to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House passed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 291) giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service of the Government. But I will first yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

MODIFICATION OF THE LAWS OF NATIONS.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent to present the memorial of insurance companies, ship-owners, and merchants of Massachusetts, praying that action may be had in favor of a modification of the laws of nations, so that whenever hostilities between belligerent nations shall have ceased for the period of one year the state of war shall be deemed at an end so far as other Governments or the citizens thereof are concerned, notwithstanding the absence of any formal treaty or declaration of peace. I ask to have the memorial referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Cannot that come in under the rule?

The SPEAKER. It can.

Mr. BANKS. It is an important memorial.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

Mr. BANKS. I ask to have it printed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. For what purpose?

Mr. BANKS. I withdraw the request.

TERRITORY OF WYOMING.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask to have Senate bill No. 357, to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Wyoming, printed, still remaining on the Speaker's table.

No objection being made, it was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, subsequently entered a motion to reconsider the order to print, saying that he desired to offer some amendment to the bill.

EXTRA PAY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House passed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 291) giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service of the Government at Washington.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio surrender the floor?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not. I call the previous question on the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot speak after that.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not desire to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. ELIOT. I desire to ask a parliamentary question: whether the result of the motion, if carried, will not be to open to amendment the last clause of the resolution. I think it was not understood by many who voted in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider prevails, the bill will then stand as it passed and will be sent to the Senate. If it should not prevail, and the House should then reconsider the third reading of the bill, it would then be open to amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. If the gentleman will agree to allow me to make the motion on the third reading I will withdraw it now.

Mr. BINGHAM. It will amount to the same thing.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. No, it will leave the bill open to amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I cannot make any agreement about it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I then insist on the motion.

The question being put and appearing to be carried,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 45, nays 86, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Calk, Cary, Cobb, Eckley, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grayely, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Johnson, Kerr, Kitchen, Logan, McCormick, Moore, Morrell, Mungen, Myers, Nicholson, O'Neill, Paine, Prunyn, Randall, Robinson, Schenck, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Stone, Taber, Thomas, John Trimble, Twichell, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Henry D. Washburn, and Woodward—45.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bailey, Baker, Beaman, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomall, Buckland, Butler, Chanler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Daws, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ela, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Hill, Hubbard, Judd, Kelley, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koonz, Loan, Loughbridge, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, McCullough, Mercer, Moorhead, Mullins, Newcomb, Peters, Pike, Pile, Plants, Polsley, Price, Robertson, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanks, Aaron F. Stevens, Taffey, Taylor, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernum, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, and James F. Wilson—86.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Arnell, Axcell, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Boyer, Broomwell, Brooks, Burr, Cullom, Dodge, Ferriss, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Griswold, Grover, Holman, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelley, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Lynch, Mallory, Marshall, Miller, Morrissey, Niblack, Nunn, Orth, Perham, Phelps, Poland, Pomeroy, Raum, Ross, Selye, Shellabarger, Sitzgreaves, Van Anken, Burt Van Horn, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, and Woodbridge—58.

So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question on the motion to reconsider.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; being upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred on the passage of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested by the committee of clerks in the various Departments to state to the House that the applause at the passage of the joint resolution a few days since was disapproved by them and by the clerks generally, and they wished the Speaker to state this, fearing that it might have prejudiced them in the eyes of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now move to lay the joint resolution on the table.

Mr. RANDALL. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Ohio withdraw that motion to allow me to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, so that it may be amended.

Mr. BINGHAM. I cannot, for the reason that the amendments would not improve it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that it would be only fair to let the gentleman, who has charge of the joint resolution, have an opportunity to suggest what amendments he desires.

Mr. MULLINS. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Then let us vote down the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BINGHAM. I insist on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. If this motion is defeated, will the joint resolution be open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. A motion can be made to reconsider the third reading, and if that prevails the joint resolution will be amendable.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. Then it will be amendable if this motion is lost?

The SPEAKER. It will be if the third reading is reconsidered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 68, nays 64, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bailey, Baker, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomall, Buckland, Butler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Daws, Delano, Eggleston, Ela, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Hill, Hubbard, Judd, Kelley, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koonz, Loughbridge, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Mullins, Newcomb, Peters, Pike, Polsley, Price, Robertson, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanks, Aaron F. Stevens, Taylor, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernum, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, and John T. Wilson—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Beck, Blair, Calk, Cary, Cobb, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grayely, Grover, Higby, Hotchkiss, Jenckes, Johnson, Kerr, Kitchen, Knott, Loan, Logan, Mallory, McCormick, McCullough, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mungen, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Paine, Plants, Pomeroy, Prunyn, Randall, Robinson, Schenck, Shellabarger, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Stone, Taber, Taffey, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Henry D. Washburn, and Woodward—64.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Arnell, Axcell, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Boyer, Broomwell, Brooks, Burr, Chanler, Cullom, Dodge, Ferriss, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Griswold, Grover, Holman, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelley, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Lynch, Marshall, Miller, Morrissey, Nunn, Orth, Perham, Phelps, Pile, Poland, Raum, Ross, Selye, Sitzgreaves, Smith, Van Anken, Burt Van Horn, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, and Woodbridge—57.

So the joint resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was laid on the table; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN of Indiana, and Mr. ROBINSON, called for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were twenty-seven in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being one fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 57, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bailey, Baker, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Daws, Delano, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ela, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Getz, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Hill, Hubbard, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koonz, Loan, Loughbridge, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Moorhead, Mullins, Newcomb, Peters, Pike, Pile, Plants, Polsley, Price, Robertson, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanks, Aaron F. Stevens, Taylor, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernum, Van Wyck, Ward, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, and John T. Wilson—73.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, Beck, Blair, Calk, Cary, Chanler, Cobb, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grayely, Grover, Higby, Hotchkiss, Jenckes, Johnson, Kitchen, Knott, Logan, Mullins, McCormick, McCullough, Morrell, Mungen, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Paine, Pomeroy, Prunyn, Randall, Robinson, Schenck, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Stewart, Stokes, Stone, Taber, Taffey, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Henry D. Washburn, and Woodward—57.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Axcell, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Boyer, Broomwell, Brooks, Burr, Butler, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Dodge, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Griswold, Holman, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelley, Kerr, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Lynch, Marshall, Miller, Moore, Morrissey, Nunn, Orth, Perham, Phelps, Poland, Raum, Ross, Selye, Sitzgreaves, Thaddeus Stevens, Van Anken, Burt Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, and Woodbridge—59.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GREAT AND LITTLE OSAGE INDIANS.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I have been instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, who are instructed to report at any time not in the morning hour, to submit a report for action at this time. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States and accompanying documents relating to a treaty lately made by the United States with the Great and Little Osage Indians, report as follows:

It appears from information before the committee that the treaty was prepared in Washington before the session of the council with the Osages, and that its terms were agreed upon by various parties in interest before submission to the Indians. The treaty, in substance, relinquishes by the said Osage Indians an exceedingly valuable tract of land lying in southern Kansas, amounting to eight million acres. It does not provide for the retrocession of the said lands to the United States, but transfers the same to a railway company, known as the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company, at a price per acre of about nineteen cents. It transfers said lands upon said terms, with the condition that said company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior within three months from the date of the ratification of the said treaty, by the Senate of the United States $100,000 to the use and for the benefit of the said Osage Indians. The balance of the $1,600,000, the price of said lands, is made payable in annual installments of $100,000 per annum, together with interest at five per cent, per annum, secured only by the bond of the railroad company, and not even made a mortgage on the road.

No provision is made in this treaty for the protection of the settlers upon that portion of the ceded lands known as the diminished reserve, of whom it appears there is a large number, but they are left wholly to be dealt with according to the mercy or cupidity of the parties controlling said railway. Of those settlers upon another portion of the lands ceded, known as the Osage trust lands, comprising about three million two hundred thousand acres, such as occupied a "square quarter section" at the time of the date of the treaty, are allowed one hundred and sixty acres, including their improvements, at the Government price. Inasmuch as these lands were only recently surveyed, it follows, upon the testimony of reliable witnesses, that nearly all of these settlers will be excluded from the benefits of the proviso because very few have located upon "square quarter sections," as surveyed.

It is also in evidence that other propositions more favorable to the Indians, the settlers, and the United States were submitted to the Commissioner, but were withheld from the Indians by them and refused consideration. The following propositions were submitted to the commissioners by the Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fe Railroad Company:

First. A purchase of all their lands for said road at $2,000,000, $100,000 to be paid in ninety days from the ratification of the treaty by the Senate of the United States, and the other payments at the rate of $100,000 per year until the whole purchase money is paid, the whole to bear interest at the rate of five per cent, per annum from the ratification and promulgation of the treaty till paid.

Second. One hundred and sixty acres of land secured, free of cost, to every half-breed Osage, male and female, over twenty-one years of age, who may desire to remain on said lands and become a citizen of the United States.

Third. One hundred and sixty acres secured to such settlers who may be on any portion of said lands at the date of said treaty, at $1 25 per acre, being Government price therefor.

Fourth. Every sixteenth section of said lands to be donated to the State of Kansas for the endowment of her public schools.

Fifth. The interest of said purchase money to be paid semi-annually, and disposed of in the treaty in a manner satisfactory to the Indians, and so as to promote their best interests.

Sixth. Patents to issue to said company for said lands only in proportion to the amount actually paid.

Seventh. Said principal and interest to be paid by said railroad company to the Secretary of the Interior, and the interest disbursed to the Indians by him, through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

This proposal was accompanied by the tender of a reasonable guarantee for the fulfillment by the said company of their part of the proposed compact, and was peremptorily dismissed by the commission. It will be seen that their refusal to submit these or any other propositions to the Indians indicates a singular bias in favor of the parties who by the terms of this treaty obtain these lands at nearly half a million dollars less than the sum offered in the above proposal.

It also appears that the State of Kansas is entitled by the terms of the act admitting that State into the Union to the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each township of surveyed public lands to accrue to the permanent school fund of that State; that in lieu of said sections the State is guaranteed an equivalent therefor; that a large portion of the State has been taken out of the operation of this beneficial provision for schools by the numerous Indian reservations therein; that the disposition heretofore made of these reservations no equivalent has been granted the State for the said sections; that at the session of the said Osage council, while deliberating upon the terms of this treaty, the State superintendent of public instruction for Kansas applied to the said commissioners to obtain some provision among the various terms of the pending treaty for the school fund of the State—representing that the lands proposed to be granted the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company comprised fully one sixth of the whole State, and should contribute their equal share to the permanent school fund, in accordance with the plan upon which public lands in Kansas were disposed of by the act of admission. It appears that he was refused in this reasonable prayer.

It further appears that the said Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company, according to their survey, do not contemplate constructing their road upon or across these lands; that the said lands are amply sufficient in value to richly endow two or three roads if justly appropriated and disposed of; that upward of one half thereof are rich and valuable lands, and such as would readily sell to actual settlers at or more than $1 25 per acre.

There are also charges before your committee that the Osages were improperly influenced to consent to the signing of said treaty; that they were very reluctant to execute it; and that at no time before or since its execution were they satisfied to sell their lands at such a price or upon such securities.

It appears to your committee that the system of bartering immense tracts of Indian lands to railway companies or private parties, without protection to the settlers, and by methods calculated to bar the advance of civilization, or in any way, except by absolute cession to the United States, is too unreasonable to merit serious thought, and if such lands are to be made available for works of public improvement they should so be disposed as to give full protection to present and prospective settlers, and should accrue to the use and benefit of all the roads that they will reasonably endow.

Your committee therefore conclude that said treaty is in violation of the rights of the settlers and of justice to the Indians; that it is unjust to the tax-payers of Kansas, because it places in the power of a corporation the means to prevent the speedy settlement of about one sixth of the State; that it is unjust to the State of Kansas, in that it ignores the school interests as guarded by the act of admission, and operates injuriously upon the prospective growth and settlement thereof; that it is unjust to the nation, because the lands granted are sufficient to endow various roads, and are ample to secure the building of the whole line from Fort Leavenworth to Galveston bay; that it is destructive of the railroad system of Missouri and Kansas, and while of no benefit or advantage to the Government, it accomplishes no result except to extravagantly enrich the persons controlling the company in whose interest it was executed.

Appended to this report are respectfully submitted a protest of the Governor, secretary of State, auditor of State, State treasurer, attorney general, and superintendent of public instruction of the State of Kansas, marked A. Also the affidavit of Z. R. Overman, a representative of the settlers upon the lands sold, marked B; affidavit of Solomon Markham, also representing the settlers, marked C; affidavit of General Charles W. Blair, marked D; affidavit of George H. Hoyt, marked E; together with a copy of the provisions of said treaty.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions, and that copies of the same be furnished for the information of the Senate.

SIDNEY CLARKE,

R. T. VAN HORN,

JOHN P. C. SHANKS,

JOHN TAFFE,

G. W. SCOTFIELD,

W. MUNGEN.

Resolved, (as the sense of the House of Representatives,) That the treaty concluded on the 27th of May, 1838, with the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians, both in its express terms and stipulations, and in the means employed to procure their acceptance by the Indians, is an outrage on their rights; that, in transferring to a single railroad corporation eight million acres of lands, it not only disregards the rights and interests of other railroad corporations in the State of Kansas, and builds up a frightful land monopoly in defiance of the just rights of the settlers and of the people of the United States, but assumes the authority, repeatedly denied by this House, to dispose of those lands by treaty otherwise than by absolute cession to the United States, and for purposes for which Congress alone is competent to provide.

Resolved, That this House does hereby solemnly and earnestly protest against the ratification of said pretended treaty by the Senate, and will feel bound to refuse any appropriations in its behalf, or to recognize its validity in any form.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolutions be transmitted to the Senate of the United States.

The following are the documents accompanying the report:

(A.)

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
TOPEKA, KANSAS, June 9, 1868.

To the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned, executive officers of the State of Kansas, most respectfully memorialize your honorable body against the ratification of the treaty recently concluded with the Osage Indians, whereby they agree to cede the lands now held by them in this State to the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company, on the following grounds, to wit:

1. That the Osages were induced to conclude the treaty by threats and false representations, whereby they were made to believe that it was the design of the State authorities to make war upon them, and either kill them or drive them from their reservation.

2. That the price agreed to be paid is grossly inadequate to the value of the lands; that a much larger price was offered; that the payments are extended over a long series of years; and that the final consummation of the treaty would be a flagrant robbery of the Indians.

3. That no provision is made in the treaty for the benefit of schools, or in the interest of the settlers who have gone upon the lands and made improvements, but that both these interests are remitted to the tender mercies of speculators and monopolists.

4. That the lands thus ceded comprise nearly one fifth of the area of the entire State, the whole of which will be withheld from settlement and development, except upon such terms as the monopolists may dictate.

5. That the success of this fraud will tend to retard immigration, thus militating against the best interests of the State, as well as of the country at large.

6. That the persons who will derive the chief benefits of this treaty are strangers to the State, and in no wise identified with its interests.

7. That they believe the whole system of permitting or encouraging the Indians to cede to private corporations is pernicious; that in extinguishing Indian titles the Government should become the purchaser, permitting the settlers to procure titles at the minimum rate, withdrawing from sale when the aggregate of the purchase-money shall have been realized, and then allowing the preemption and homestead laws to operate as in other cases.

For these and other reasons which might be enumerated, the undersigned respectfully request the Senate to negative the treaty recently concluded with the Osages, and which has been or will be submitted for their consideration.

S. A. CRAWFORD, Governor.

R. A. BAKER,

Secretary of State.

J. R. SWALLOW,

Auditor of State.

M. ANDERSON,

State Treasurer.

GEORGE H. HOYT,

Attorney General.

P. McVICAR,

Superintendent Public Instruction.

The foregoing is a true copy, furnished at the request of Hon. SIDNEY CLARKE.

(B.)

District of Columbia, ss:

Z. R. Overman, of lawful age, first being duly sworn, deposes and says he is a citizen of the State of Kansas, and resides upon a portion of the lands known as the diminished reserve of the Great and Little Osages; that he was selected by the settlers upon the said reserve and by the settlers upon the lands known as the Osage trust lands to attend a council thereafter to be held between the representatives of the several bands of the Great and Little Osage Indians and certain commissioners of the United States for the purpose of effectuating a treaty between the said Indians and the United States; that the said council was held in the month of May last, and a treaty was signed by the chiefs and head men of the said tribe and the commissioners of the United States on or about the 27th day of May last; that prior to and at the signing of said treaty affiant was in attendance upon the sessions of the said council; that he is personally well acquainted with the chiefs, head men, and braves of the said bands; that the commissioners of the United States produced at said council a draft of a treaty already prepared, being the same treaty in form and substance afterward executed by the parties respectively, and which is now pending the action of the Senate of the United States.

Affiant further deposes and says that it was evident from the hearing of the said commissioners, and from their proceedings at the said council, that they intended to make the said treaty exclusively for the benefit and in the interest of the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston railroad, represented by one William Sturges, of Chicago, and disregarding the rights of the settlers, the rights of the Indians, of other railroads, and the State of Kansas; that the said commissioners claimed that the said treaty was agreed upon in Washington before the session of the council, and could only pass and be ratified by the Senate of the United States as drawn and presented.

Affiant further says that the said Indians did not want to sell their lands; did not want to sell to a railroad company, but to the Government of the United States if forced to part with them, or otherwise, to parties making the best and highest bid for the lands; that the sessions of the council were secret, and white men were excluded therefrom unless attached or belonging to the party of the said commissioners; that the Indians wanted certain white men for counsel present at the conferences, but were refused unless they would take such counsel as were assigned them by the commissioners; that Professor P. McVicar, superintendent of public instruction for the State of Kansas, applied to the said commissioners to have certain lands in each township set apart to the permanent school fund of the State, as guaranteed to the State of Kansas in the act of admission, and the said commissioners wholly refused to allow said lands, or any equivalent therefor, to be so devoted to the State.

And affiant further says that the Indians of the said tribe of Great and Little Osages complain that they were forced to sign the said treaty by threats that the United States would withdraw its protection from them, and that their presents, gifts, or annuities would be withheld from them, and by divers other intimidations and influences, and that if they had not so been influenced they would not have signed the said treaty, and are still and remain greatly dissatisfied; that there is a large population of white settlers upon both the diminished reserve and the trust lands of the said Osages; that these settlers entered upon the said lands with the full knowledge and voluntary consent in writing of the chiefs and head men of the said Indians; that there has been no survey of the diminished reserve, and that the trust lands have only been recently surveyed; that very few of the settlers upon the trust lands are located "on a square quarter section" as surveyed, and consequently get one hundred and sixty acres, including their improvements, at Government price; that no protection was promised or guaranteed in any form to the balance of the settlers upon either the trust lands or the diminished reserve; that fully half of the eight million acres included in the said lands bartered by the terms of the said treaty to the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston railroad—controlled by the said William Sturges—are first class and very valuable lands, fully equal to the best lands in Kansas; that the settlers thereupon are willing to pay $1 25 per acre for the said lands; that affiant fully believes from the number of settlers already locating upon said lands that four million acres of said lands could be disposed of by the Government of the United States within four years from the date hereof.

Z. R. OVERMAN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 16th day of June, 1868.

E. M. CHAPIN,

Justice of the Peace.

(C.)

District of Columbia, ss:

Solomon Markham, of lawful age, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a citizen of Kansas, and resides near the Catholic Mission, so called, in Neosho county, Kansas, and upon lands lately belonging to the reservation of the Great and Little Osage Indians; that he was sent by the settlers upon the Osage lands to the city of Washington to secure through the Congress of the United States a sale of such lands transferred or ceded to the United States or other parties by the said Osages to the settlers upon said lands on just and reasonable terms; that the late treaty executed on Drum Creek, in Osage county, by certain commissioners of the United States with the said Osage Indians is a fraud upon the people of Kansas and the whole country; that the said treaty works deep injustice to a large number of worthy and industrious people who have located their homes and families upon the said lands, for the following among other reasons, namely: because the said settlers are left to the mercy of the parties controlling the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company for the location, amount, and price of their lands; that no guarantees are given them that any railway will be constructed through or upon said lands or any portion thereof; that the Osages had agreed and were willing to sell their lands to the Government so that the Government might dispose of them to actual settlers upon terms just and reasonable; that no part of said lands were set apart to the permanent school fund of the State, in accordance with the plan upon which Kansas was admitted. And affiant says that more than one half of the eight million acres bartered away by the terms of this treaty to the railroad owned or controlled by Mr. William Sturges, of Chicago, are valuable lands equal to any in the United States, and ought not to be put in title and possession of any man; that within four years, if thrown open to actual settlement, every acre would be disposed of easily at the price of $1 25; that the proceeds of the lands upon any just and reasonable method would build three railways instead of one, as proposed in this treaty; that affiant is informed and believes that the sale of these lands ostensibly to the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston railroad is in fact a sale to William Sturges, of Chicago, who controls the said company, and who is endeavoring to obtain said lands for the purpose of a vast speculation, and that the said treaty was executed in fraud of the settlers, the Indians, the people of Kansas, and the whole country, and various other railway companies who offered more for the lands than did the said Sturges and company.

SOLOMON MARKHAM.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 16th day of June, 1868.

E. M. CHAPIN,
Justice of the Peace.

Statement relative to the Osage Treaty.

A treaty was concluded on Drum Creek, in the Osage nation, about the 27th of May last, between the chiefs and braves of the Osage Indians and Hon. N. G. Taylor, commissioner of Indian affairs, Hon. Thomas Murphy, superintendent of the central superintendency, Colonel A. G. Boone, and Major Snow, agent of the Osages, representing the Government, with Judge Blackledge as secretary of the commission.

The treaty conveys the whole of the Osage lands, comprising eight million acres, (being fifty by two hundred and fifty miles,) to the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company for $1,600,000, payable as follows: $100,000 in cash within three months from the ratification of the treaty, and the remaining $1,500,000 in the bonds of the company, payable $100,000 each year for fifteen years, and bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum. It is really a treaty by and between the Osage Indians and the railroad company, to which the Government becomes a party by permitting it to be done in the interest of the company, and without protecting the rights of the Indians by providing any security for the payment of the money other than the bonds of said company. These bonds are really the only security the Indians have. It is true that the treaty provides that patents shall be issued only in proportion to the amount paid; but the railroad company does not wish patents to issue until they are ready to sell, which will not be until the road is completed to a point opposite to said lands, and may not be for the next ten years. In the mean time the Indians will hold the bonds, but be utterly destitute of money—their lands sold, but they without means to purchase others in their stead.

It is scarcely to be expected that the Cherokees or Creeks will sell them lands for these bonds, or that the Government will purchase and pay for lands for them, taking these railroad bonds as security for payment. If the interests of the Indians are to be consulted, the representatives of the Government should have provided some tangible security for the payment of the money as it became due, either by the indorsement of the Government or otherwise; and they should have permitted the sale to be made to the company offering the highest price for the lands, other considerations being equal. The subjoined correspondence will show that the commissioners were determined the treaty should be made in the interest of the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company, and on the terms proposed by its representatives or made not at all.

These lands comprise nearly one fifth of the whole State of Kansas, and are the last body of lands out of which railroads can be endowed. There are enough to endow three roads reasonably well; and if they are to be disposed of for the benefit of railroads the interests of the railroad system of the State should be taken into consideration, and the roads of southern Kansas, in which the lands lie, should have their fair proportion. Especially should the Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé railroad be endowed, as it has its initial point at Sedalia, on the Missouri Pacific, and runs southwesterly, via Fort Scott and Osage Mission, through the whole length of these lands, two hundred and fifty miles, in the direction of Santa Fé. This road has no grant or endowment of public lands, while the Lawrence and Galveston road already has eight hundred thousand acres along its line in the State of Kansas, donated to it by the liberality of Congress; and its surveyed line does not run within twenty miles of the lands ceded to it by the recent treaty.

The treaty makes no provision for the half-breed Osages who may desire to remain on said lands and become citizens of the United States. It makes no increase in the State endowment of schools, and makes but insufficient and incomplete provision for the hardy pioneers who are the out-posts and advance guard of the civilization rapidly moving to the West.

The trust lands (so called because ceded in trust by a former treaty) are embraced in this treaty, the former one so far as it applies to them, being abrogated by the new arrangement. They comprise a tract of twenty miles, north and south, running the whole length of the tract; and the treaty provides that settlers on the lands, at the date of the treaty, may have one hundred and sixty acres, including their improvements, at Government price, on a square quarter section. As the survey is just completed, and as nearly all the settlement there was made prior to said survey, it follows that few have their improvements on a square quarter; and as they are not permitted to cross section or quarter section lines to fill out their one hundred and sixty acres, but few will derive any benefit from the provision. Indeed, it seems expressly made with a view to cut off as many of the settlers as possible, under the color and show of apparent fairness.

No provision whatever is made for the settlers on the remaining portion of said land—being thirty by two hundred and fifty miles in extent—but they are left wholly to the tender mercies of the railroad company.

It is proper to add in this connection that the directors of the Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé Railroad Company, besides the protection they offered to the settlers, were and are willing, if their company receive all or any portion of these lands, that an express provision may be incorporated into the treaty to the effect that the price of Government lands shall be the price of these lands—that is to say, $2.50 per acre within ten miles of their road on either side, and $1.25 per acre beyond—the settler to take his lands upon such showing of occupation and improvement as would entitle him to the benefit of the preemption act of September 4, 1841, and its amendments. Justice to the settler imperatively demands that this provision should be made in the treaty, let the lands be disposed of otherwise as they may.

It may be further stated that the Indians knew they had been offered a higher price for their land than this treaty provides—that this higher price was offered them by men whom they knew and in whom they had confidence, with some of whom they had had dealings for twenty-five years, and they were naturally anxious to sell to the best advantage, and to men whom they thought they could trust; but they claim that the commissioners informed them that the Government would not permit them to sell to any company except the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Company. The truth of this is corroborated by the fact that the commissioners, all of them, without exception, stated repeatedly to white men, in reply to urgent entreaties to divide the lands among two or three roads, that no treaty could or would be ratified by the Senate unless the whole of the lands were given to this one company.

It was publicly represented, too, by those who assumed to speak by the authority of the commissioners, that this treaty was drawn up and agreed upon in Washington, before the commission went out; that it was drawn with the approval of leading members of the administration, and leading members of the Senate, of both political parties; that the combination or "ring" was too powerful to be withstood, and that the treaty would have to be made and confirmed as originally drawn.

The chiefs repeatedly asked permission to have certain white men in whom they had confidence, as their counsel, present at their conference with the commissioners, to advise and counsel with them; but the commissioners refused, unless they would take such counsel as they (the commissioners) chose to provide, which they were not willing to do.

It is certain that for over two weeks the Indians refused to sign the treaty, no one, apparently, being in favor of it; and that all at once, apparently without any sufficient cause, they all signed it. They claim that they were forced to do it by threats and intimidation on the one part, and fair promises on the other in case of compliance.

It is more than probable that these threats were made by outside parties in the interest of the railroad company, and not countenanced by the commissioners; but there was so much apparent identity of interest between them that it was difficult for even an observant white man to tell who represented the Government and who the railroad company, and it is, therefore, not at all wonderful that the Indians failed to detect the difference between them. Certain it is, that one commissioner, at least, publicly stated to the Indians that their annuity goods, due them by the provisions of a former treaty, would not be delivered to them till they signed this treaty; and that, seemingly, in pursuance of this threat, said goods were reloaded into the wagons which had brought them to the council grounds; and it is equally certain that said goods were not distributed until after the treaty had been signed.

The Indians claim that they were threatened with the displeasure of the Government if they refused to sign; that they were told that the Government would not protect them against the Arapahoes unless they made the treaty; and Commissioner Boone did state in public council that if the Osages would sign this treaty they (the commissioners) would go out on the Plains and conclude a peace between the Osages and Arapahoes.

The Indians represent that they were told that unless they signed this treaty they would get no presents, no annuity goods; that the Government would not pay them for the land already purchased of them, and that the Governor of Kansas would turn the militia of the State out against them, and they would kill and drive them off their lands, taking them without any payment whatsoever; and when they fled to the Plains they would be decimated by the Arapahoes, and between the two enemies they would gradually be extinguished.

It is not claimed that these threats were made or countenanced in any way by the commissioners—honorable men would stoop to no such miserable subterfuge—but it is susceptible of proof that such threats, and probably worse ones, were made to the Indians by white men who were in daily association with the commission, and who professed to speak by their authority.

It is known to the writer of this statement that outside parties stated that the commissioners had resolved to remove the representatives of the Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé Railroad Company by military force from the Osage reserve, on the pretext of interfering with the treaty; and that this was communicated to the friends of that road with a view of inducing them to intermit their efforts to get from the commission a fair proportion of these lands; but the friends of that road had too high a respect for the commission to believe that they had ever authorized such threats, and therefore gave no credence to them.

Attention is invited to the correspondence cited below.

CHARLES W. BLAIR,
President Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé
Railroad Company.

No. 1.

OSAGE NATION, May 18, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to propose to you, and through you to the commission appointed to treat with the Osage Indians for their trust lands and diminished reserve, that the lands comprised therein be acquired by the United States Government and offered for sale, in a body, to the highest bidder, thus leaving it open to the competition of all companies who desire to purchase the same, hereby pledging myself that the railroad company I represent will offer for the whole of said lands at least the sum of $2,000,000, giving any guarantee of payment that the Government may require, which sum is $500,000 more than that proposed to be paid by the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company.

Should it be against the policy of the Government to purchase lands except under condition of immediate transfer to parties or companies who can make the required payments, we respectfully request your commission to create the trust in the treaty for the benefit of our company, we to pay therefor the sum of $2,000,000. I would also state that our railroad company is properly incorporated, traverses the whole length of these lands from East to West, and is in the hands of men of capital and influence.

We propose, also, to accept all the terms and conditions of the treaty as already drawn and prepared by the commission, and, in addition, to secure the rights of the half-breeds, protect the settlers, and make liberal donations for school purposes, changing the treaty only by substituting the name of the Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé Railroad Company for that of the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company, for which change we offer more than a half million dollars in addition to the amount proposed by Mr. Sturges.

Our company is composed of and supported by men of large capital and influence, (the Governor of the State being one of the directors,) who are abundantly able to give all the guarantees required by the treaty, or which may be imposed by the Government, such guarantees to be given prior to the submission of the treaty to the Senate for ratification.

I also make this proposition: for the purpose of harmonizing conflicting interests and advancing the interest of the North and South, as well as the East and West national thoroughfare, I am content that the treaty may include both roads, giving the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Company two thirds of said lands, and securing to the Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé Railroad Company one third of the same, being equal in proportionate value, and divided by blocks of sections from north to south, two blocks to their road and one to ours, alternately, through the whole length of said lands, east to west, we to take ours by express stipulations in the treaty to our road by name, and on the same terms and conditions of payment and otherwise as are imposed on the other company.

All these propositions seem to me fair and just, and the acceptance of any one of them will secure the cordial cooperation of myself and friends in favor of the speedy completion of the treaty, by the exertion of all the influence we can command in its behalf.

I am, Colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES W. BLAIR,
President Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé
Railroad Company.

Hon. N. G. TAYLOR, Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

P. S.—I would respectfully request that this proposition be filed and preserved with the papers of the commission for further reference.

C. W. B.

No. 2.

OSAGE NATION, May 20, 1868.

SIR: As it is anticipated or feared that representations may or have been made to your commission that the Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé Railroad Company is irresponsible or unable to furnish to the Government the proper guarantees of payment, in case they acquire any or all of these lands by treaty, I have the honor to propose to you, as security for such guarantees as may be required, the bond of S. A. Williams, B. P. McDonald, and C. F. Drake, who are worth over one hundred thousand dollars; or I am willing to give you here, on the ground, as collateral security for such guarantees, the draft of the banking-house of A. McDonald & Brother, on New York, for the sum of $50,000.

This security is offered as a pledge of our entire good faith, as well as our ability to comply with any condition of payment which may be imposed on our company in case said lands are granted to it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CHARLES W. BLAIR,
President Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé
Railroad Company.

Hon. N. G. TAYLOR, Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Reply to Nos. 1 and 2.

OSAGE COUNCIL GROUND.

OSAGE NATION, May 20, 1868.

SIR: Your communication of the 13th instant, addressed to me as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, making various propositions in reference to the purchase of the Osage lands, was received and laid before the commission.

I was instructed by the commission to reply that, for various reasons satisfactory to it, neither of your propositions is accepted.

With sentiments of high personal respect, I have the honor to remain, your obedient servant,

N. G. TAYLOR,
President Osage Commission,
General C. W. BLAIR, President Fort Scott and Santa Fé Railroad Company.

No. 3.

OSAGE NATION, May 25, 1868.

Sir: As you stated, in your public council with the Indians, that all future consultations between the commissioners and Indians were to be private, from which all others were to be rigidly excluded, and thus other parties can only reach the Indians through you, I have the honor to request permission to call them together in council with the representatives of the Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé Railroad Company, with a view of submitting to their consideration a treaty with said company on the following basis:

First. A purchase of all their lands for said road at $2,000,000—$100,000 to be paid in ninety days from the ratification of the treaty by the Senate of the United States, and the other payments at the rate of $100,000 per year until the whole purchase money is paid, the whole to bear interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum from the ratification and promulgation of the treaty till paid.

Second. One hundred and sixty acres of land secured, free of cost, to every half-breed Osage, male and female, over twenty-one years of age, who may desire to remain on said lands and become a citizen of the United States.

Third. One hundred and sixty acres secured to such settlers who may be on any portion of said lands at the date of said treaty, at $1 25 per acre, being Government price therefor.

Fourth. Every sixteenth section of said lands to be donated to the State of Kansas for the endowment of her public schools.

Fifth. The interest of said purchase money to be paid semi-annually, and disposed of in the treaty in a manner satisfactory to the Indians, and so as to promote their best interests.

Sixth. Patents to issue to said company for said lands only in proportion to the amount actually paid.

Seventh. Said principal and interest to be paid by said railroad company to the Secretary of the Interior, and the interest disbursed to the Indians by him, through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

As this council has now been in session about two weeks, and the Indians have thus far declined to treat, although all other propositions have been withheld from them, except that of the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company, it is now but fair that they should have an opportunity of considering another proposition which gives them a larger sum of money for their lands, protects the settlers on the same, secures a home to the half-breeds, enlarges the State endowment for school purposes, and which is quite as fair to the Government as the proposition so long considered and rejected.

If the responsibility of the company is doubted, I again offer, as before, as a guarantee of good faith and pecuniary ability, the bond of men worth $100,000 or the draft of a responsible banking house on New York for $50,000, to be forfeited in case the company fail to comply with the requirements of the treaty. I have also the honor to request that this proposition be filed with the papers of the commission for further reference.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES W. BLAIR.

President Missouri, Fort Scott, and Santa Fé Railroad Company.

Hon. N. G. TAYLOR, Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Reply to No. 3.

OSAGE COUNCIL GROUND.

OSAGE NATION, May 26, 1868.

Sir: Your communication addressed to me, of yesterday's date, was handed to me half an hour since by Colonel Wilson.

I have the honor in reply to inform you that, having, immediately on its receipt, submitted your letter to the commission, it instructed me, unanimously, to respond that this commission, having been appointed and commissioned by the President to treat with the Osage Indians, has no power to transfer that authority to others, nor any disposition to do so. We have pleasure in adding that present indications are entirely favorable to a successful termination of our labors.

With sentiments of high regard, I have the honor to be, very truly, your obedient servant.

N. G. TAYLOR,

President Osage Commission and Commissioner Indian Affairs.

General CHARLES W. BLAIR, President Fort Scott and Santa Fé Railroad Company.

(D.)

District of Columbia, Washington county, ss:

Before the undersigned, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, personally came Charles W. Blair, of lawful age, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says, that the correspondence copied in the accompanying printed statement is a true copy of the correspondence that passed between him and Hon. N. G. Taylor, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He further states that the facts embodied in the printed statement accompanying said correspondence, so far as the same are stated of his own knowledge, are true, and, so far as stated on the information of others, he believes to be true, both in substance and in fact.

CHARLES W. BLAIR.

Sworn to and subscribed, this 16th day of June, A. D. 1868.

JOHN F. CALLAN,

Notary Public.

(E.)

District of Columbia, ss:

George H. Hoyt, being duly sworn, deposes and says he is a citizen of the State of Kansas, and is attorney general of the said State; that since the execution of the treaty between the United States and the Osages of southern Kansas, at Drum Creek, on or about May 27, A. D. 1868, numerous complaints have been lodged in his office relating to the said treaty and the action of the commissioners of the United States. And affiant avers upon information and belief that gross deceit was practiced upon the said Osage Indians by these said commissioners; that these said Indians were informed or caused to be informed by the said commissioners that the United States would not protect them or give them their presents or annuities unless they consented to sign the particular treaty brought by them from Washington; that other inducements were held out to the said Indians, and, among others, the promise to secure peace between them and their enemies, the Arapahoes.

Affiant further avers that the lands conveyed by the terms of said treaty to the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company comprise about eight million acres, equal to about one-sixth of the area of the whole State of Kansas, and nearly double the area of the State of Massachusetts; that he is familiar with that section of the State of Kansas, having frequently traversed it; that more than half the said lands are first class and very rich and valuable lands—well watered and timbered along the waters of the Neosho and the valleys of the Verdigris rivers, together with numerous tributaries; that the said lands are desirable in every respect, and are being fast settled upon by a thrifty and industrious people; that abandonment of those settlers, by this treaty, to the cupidity of speculators and non-residents, has caused a very bitter feeling to pervade the people of the whole State; that a large portion of these lands would readily sell for $1 25 per acre within three or four years; that the proceeds of their sale, upon any just or reasonable terms, would construct not only the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston railway to and beyond the limits of Kansas, but would also build the Fort Scott and Santa Fé and the Union Pacific, southern branch, railways.

And affiant says that Kansas is entitled to the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land in each township, or an equivalent therefor, for the permanent school fund of the State; that a large portion of the State has been absorbed by Indian reservations; that in the retrocession or transfer of these reservations no equivalent has been granted the State for said sections; that Professor McVickar, superintendent of public instruction for Kansas, applied to the commissioners to obtain a portion of said Osage lands for the uses of the school fund, and his application was refused. And affiant says all the above facts, together with various other material evidence, he will be able to produce in case reasonable time is allowed him before the ratification of the said treaty by the Senate of the United States, and further saith not.

GEORGE H. HOYT.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 16th day of June, 1868.

E. M. CHAPIN,

Justice of the Peace.

Articles of a treaty made and concluded at the Osage council ground, on Drum creek, in the Osage nation, in the State of Kansas, on the 27th day of May, A. D. 1868, by and between the United States, represented by Nathaniel G. Taylor, Commissioner of Indian Affairs; Thomas Murphy, superintendent of Indian affairs for the central superintendency; George C. Snio, agent for the Indians of the Neosho agency; and Albert G. Boone, special agent, (commissioners duly appointed by the President of the United States for the purpose,) and the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians, represented by their chiefs, councilmen, and head men duly authorized to negotiate and treat in behalf of said tribe, as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The tribe of the Great and Little Osage Indians are desirous of removing from Kansas to a new and permanent home in the Indian Territory, and of making an advantageous and absolute sale of their lands in the State of Kansas. They desire, moreover, to so dispose of these lands as to aid in the speedy extension of the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston railroad to and through the Indian Territory, it being the only road now in process of construction running directly through the said Territory which is to be the future home of themselves and their race, and for the further reason that it will give them in their new home the means of transit and transportation, and will tend to promote among them and their brethren the arts and habits of civilized life. The Government of the United States is willing that the company constructing said railroad may become the purchasers of said lands on terms favorable to the Osages and the settlers, because said railroad has received from the United States no money subsidies, and only an inconsiderable land grant, and because when constructed it will become a great trunk line from the Missouri river to the Gulf of Mexico, and with its branches will open to settlement vast and fertile districts, now too remote from railroads and navigable waters to be susceptible of advantageous settlement and cultivation.

It is, therefore, agreed that the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Kansas, shall have the privilege of purchasing the present reserve of the Osages in Kansas, and also the strip of land lying along the north border of the present reservation, ceded to the United States in trust by article second of the treaty between the United States and the Great and Little Osage Indians, concluded September 29, 1865, on the following terms and conditions: said company shall, within three months after the ratification and promulgation of this treaty, pay to the Secretary of the Interior $100,000 in cash, and shall execute and deliver to him its bonds for the further sum of $1,500,000, bearing interest, payable semi-annually, at the rate of five per cent. per annum; the interest on said bonds to commence when the Osages remove from their present reservation, which date shall be fixed, and notice thereof given to the company, by the Secretary of the Interior. One hundred thousand dollars of said bonds shall become due and payable each and every year after the date of execution thereof, so that the last $100,000 of said bonds shall become due and payable in fifteen years from the date of execution thereof. And if said company shall pay the said sum of $100,000, and deliver its said bonds, bearing interest for $1,500,000, as above provided, and shall, one year thereafter, pay $100,000 of said bonds, and interest on the whole of said bonds from the date when said interest shall have begun to accrue, and shall have built and equipped not less than twenty miles of said railroad from Ottawa, Kansas, in a southerly direction, then patents shall be issued to it by the Secretary of the Interior for an amount of said lands to be designated under his direction equal in value to one fifteenth part of the lands which are herein authorized to be sold to said company, deducting and excepting, however, from said amount of land the lands which shall have been, between the date of the purchase by said company and that date, purchased by settlers as hereinafter provided.

And if said company shall, annually thereafter, pay $100,000 of said bonds, and interest as thereinbefore provided on all the remaining bonds, and shall, each and every year thereafter, build and equip not less than twenty miles of said road until the same shall have reached the southern boundary of the State of Kansas, it shall, at the date of each of such annual payments, receive patents for a like amount in value of said lands, to be selected under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, deducting and excepting from said amount the lands which shall have been, between the date of the next preceding payment and that date, preempted and paid for as hereinafter provided; and on payment of the last of said bonds and interest, as herein provided, it shall be entitled to receive patents for all the remainder of said lands herein authorized to be sold to it.

The whole of said lands, if purchased by said company, shall be appraised, at its expense, by three disinterested appraisers to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, whose compensation shall not exceed ten dollars per day, in full for services and expenses, and whose appraisal, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall govern in ascertaining the relative value of the amounts of land from time to time selected and paid for, as hereinbefore provided. When said company shall make its first payment and deliver its bonds to the Secretary of the Interior, as above provided, he shall execute and deliver to it a certificate setting forth the fact that it has elected to purchase the lands herein provided to be sold, and is entitled to the possession and use of the same; which certificate shall be evidence of the right of said company to the possession and use of the said lands so long as it shall comply with the conditions of purchase therein prescribed as against all persons except Osages or other persons connected with the nation as may have authority from the Secretary of the Interior to remain temporarily on said lands. But such certificate shall not authorize the taking of any timber or stone from any of said lands, except from such as shall have been selected and paid for as herein provided.

None of said lands shall be subject to taxation except such as shall have been patented to said company, or selected and paid for as above provided. And whenever any patent shall issue to said railroad company for any part of said lands it shall contain the condition that said company shall sell the lands described in said patent, except so much as may be necessary for the operation of said road, within five years from the issuance of said patent. But if the said company shall fail to pay the said sum of $100,000 first above mentioned, and to deliver its bonds for $1,500,000, as above provided, within three months from the ratification and promulgation of this treaty, then it shall have no exclusive right of purchasing said lands, but the lands shall then be surveyed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and appraised by three disinterested appraisers, to be by him appointed, and offered for sale to actual settlers for a period of one year from the promulgation of this treaty, at not less than its appraised value, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may, from time to time, prescribe. And at the expiration of said year, should any of said lands remain unsold, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the same to be sold in a body for cash, at not less than its appraised value. The proceeds of such sales, as they accrue, after deducting the expenses of survey and appraisal, shall be invested by the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of said Indians, as hereinafter provided.

The Secretary of the Interior may proceed to sell the said lands in a body on the most advantageous terms; provided, however, that the same conditions and terms shall be observed as herein stipulated: And provided further, that said lands shall not be sold for less than the price herein agreed to be paid therefor. In the event that after sufficient notice has been given no sale can be made of said lands in the manner last aforesaid, and if the said company shall, after paying said sum of $100,000, and delivering said $1,500,000 of bonds, fail to make payment of any portion of the principal or interest remaining due within thirty days from the date when the same shall become due and payable, said company shall forfeit all its right to any portion of said lands not heretofore selected and paid for. And all of said lands herein provided to be sold to said company which shall remain unpaid for shall thereupon be sold by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner hereinbefore provided. And in case said company shall desire to pay any portion of said bonds before the same shall become due and payable, it shall be permitted to do so, and shall be entitled on such payment to have lands selected and patented to it in like manner as on the payment of the bonds when due. And no patent shall issue to any assignee of said company for any of the lands purchased by it under the provisions hereof.

ARTICLE II.

The right of way is hereby granted to said company through the lands herein authorized to be sold, not exceeding one hundred feet in width, and the right to take from said land such timber, stone, water, and other material as may be necessary for the construction and operation of the road, and for the construction of its stations, culverts, and bridges: Provided, however, That no timber or stone shall be taken by the company or its agents from any of the lands not paid for, except on the payment of the fair value of such timber or stone, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, for which amounts the company shall be entitled to credit on paying, as herein provided for the lands from which such timber and stone may have been taken.

ARTICLE III.

The proceeds of the sales of lands herein authorized to be sold shall be invested for the Osage nation in United States registered stocks, except as herein-after provided, and the interest thereof shall be applied semi-annually under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as follows: (The interest on $100,000 shall be paid in support of schools in said nation;) the interest on $300,000 shall be paid in cash for national purposes; $5,200 thereof shall be paid as compensation to the chiefs and councilors of the nation; $5,000 shall be expended for the encouragement of agriculture, to be paid pro rata to each head of a family in proportion to the number of acres cultivated and improvements made thereon by individual members of the tribe, the object being to encourage real industry among them, and the remaining $4,800 shall be expended under the direction of the council and agent for the tribe in the payment of such other expenses as may be necessary for the benefit and support of their national government; and the interest on the balance shall be paid to the members of the nation per capita, or to the council for distribution in money, goods, provisions, and other articles of necessity as the council of the nation and the agent for the tribe may recommend under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

ARTICLE IV.

All persons being heads of families and citizens of the United States, or members of any tribe at peace with the United States, who have settled on the strip north of the present Osage reservation known as the "trust lands," and are at the date of the signing hereof residing thereon as bona fide settlers, shall have the privilege at any time within one year from the date of the ratification of this treaty, of purchasing from the United States a quarter section, at $1.25 per acre, to be selected in one body according to legal divisions, and to include, as far as practicable, the improvements of each settler: Provided, however, That said quarter section shall not consist of, or be made up from, parts of different quarter sections.

ARTICLE V.

Nothing in this treaty shall be held to impair the rights of half-breed Osages, and of the heirs of Joseph Swiss, under the provisions of article fourteen of the treaty concluded September 29, 1865, and it is hereby declared that the following persons are the heirs, and the only heirs, according to the Osage customs and laws, of the said Joseph Swiss, namely: Phoebe Beyette, Julia Kavellette, Julia Ann Delorin, and Jacob Swiss; and it is hereby provided that the improvements of said half-breeds now on the lands herein stipulated to be sold, shall be appraised by the commissioners appointed to appraise these lands, and the value thereof shall be paid to the owners of said improvements by the parties purchasing them, within six months after the ratification of this treaty.

They shall have an equal right, in proportion to their number, with the full-blood Indians, in all the benefits to be derived from this and all former treaties with the Osage Indians, and shall select from their number one of their people who shall represent them in the councils of the nation, upon an equal footing with the other members of said council.

ARTICLE VI.

As a compensation to the Osages for the stock and farming utensils which the United States agreed to furnish them by the second article of the treaty of January 11, 1839, and which were only in part furnished, the United States agrees to pay the said nation $20,000; and as compensation for the saw and grist mill which the United States agreed by said treaty to maintain for them for fifteen years, and which were only maintained five years, the United States agrees to pay said nation $10,000, which sums shall be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the following manner: $12,000 in erecting agency buildings, a warehouse, and blacksmiths' dwellings, and a blacksmith shop, and the remaining $18,000 in the erection of a school-house and church and the purchase of a saw and grist mill, which mill is to be managed and controlled by the society in charge of the Catholic mission, for the benefit of said Indians.

ARTICLE VII.

The reservation herein authorized to be sold shall be surveyed as other public lands are surveyed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the expenses of survey paid by the said Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company.

ARTICLE VIII.

If the proceeds of the sale of the lands ceded to the United States by the first article of the treaty of January 21, 1867, shall exceed the amount of purchase-money paid therefor by the United States and expenses incident to the survey and sale thereof, then the remaining proceeds shall be invested for the Osages in United States registered stocks, and the interest thereon applied semi-annually as other annuities.

ARTICLE IX.

The Osage Indians, being sensible of the great benefits they have received from the Catholic mission, and being desirous to have said mission go with them to their new homes, it is hereby stipulated that two sections of land, to be selected by the said society at or near the agency, shall be granted in fee-simple to John Shoemaker in trust for the use and benefit of the society sustaining said mission, and it shall have the free use of such timber and firewood as may be necessary for the use of said mission and school on condition that said society shall establish and maintain a mission and school for the education and civilization of the Osages. But if the said society shall fail to avail itself of the provisions of this treaty within twelve months after the removal of said Indians to their new home it shall forfeit all the rights, privileges, and immunities herein conferred upon it, including said lands, in which contingency these same rights, privileges, and benefits so forfeited shall inure to any other Christian society willing to assume the duties and responsibilities, and comply with the conditions herein enjoined on said mission: Provided, however, That in the event no Christian society should avail themselves of the benefits herein provided within two years from the removal of said Indians to their new homes, then all funds herein set apart for said school and missionary purposes shall be applied, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to such purposes as in his judgment will best promote the moral, intellectual, and industrial interests of the Osage nation: Provided, That the annual expenditure for school purposes may be increased at the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to an amount not to exceed $5,000, as in his judgment the educational necessities of the Osages may require, to be deducted from the annuities.

ARTICLE X.

The Great and Little Osage nation of Indians being anxious to relieve themselves from the burden of their present liabilities, and it being essential to their best interests that they should be allowed to commence their new mode of life free from the embarrassment of debt, it is hereby stipulated and agreed that all just and valid debts which may be due and unpaid at the date of the signing of this treaty, either to whites or Indians, by said Osages, shall be liquidated and paid out of the funds arising from the sale of the lands herein stipulated to be sold, so far as the same shall be found just and valid on an examination thereof, to be made by the agent of the tribe and the superintendent of Indian affairs for the central superintendency, whose duty it shall be to examine all claims presented to them within one year from the promulgation of this treaty and to take in writing the evidence in favor of and against said claims, and after having made such examination, they shall submit said claims to the national council of the Osage nation for their approval or rejection, and report their proceedings thereon, with the evidence and decision of the council, and their opinions in each individual case, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose decision, subject to the revision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be final: Provided, That the amount so allowed and paid shall not exceed $40,000; And provided further, That if the amount of just claims shall exceed the sum of $40,000, the said amount of $40,000 shall be divided pro rata among the different claimants whose claims shall have been established and allowed.

ARTICLE XI.

The United States agrees that the agent for said Indians in the future shall make his home at the agency buildings; that he shall reside among them and keep an office open at all times for the purpose of prompt and diligent inquiry into such matters of complaint, by and against the Indians, as may be presented for investigation under the provisions of their treaty stipulations, as also for the faithful discharge of other duties enjoined on him by law. In all cases of depredation on person or property, he shall cause the evidence to be taken in writing and forwarded, together with his finding, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose decision, subject to the revision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be binding on all the parties to this treaty.

ARTICLE XII.

If any individual belonging to said tribe of Indians, or legally incorporated with them, being the head of a family, shall desire to commence farming, he shall have the privilege to select, in the presence and with the assistance of the agent then in charge, a tract of land within said reservation not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres in extent, which tract when so selected, certified, and recorded in the land book, as herein directed, shall cease to be held in common; but the same may be occupied and held in the exclusive possession of the person selecting it and of his family so long as he or they may continue to cultivate it. Any person over eighteen years of age, not being the head of a family, may in like manner select, and cause to be certified to him or her for purposes of cultivation a quantity of land not exceeding eighty acres in extent, and thereupon be entitled to the exclusive possession of the same, as above directed. For each tract of land so selected a certificate containing a description thereof, and the name of the person selecting it, with a certificate indorsed thereon that the same has been recorded, shall be delivered to the party entitled to it by the agent after the same shall have been recorded by him in a book to be kept in his office subject to inspection, which said book shall be known as the "Osage Land Book." The President may at any time order a survey of the reservation, and when so surveyed Congress shall provide for protecting the rights of said settlers in their improvements, and may fix the title held by each. The United States may pass such laws on the subject of alienation and descent of property, and on all subjects connected with the government of the Indians on said reservation and the internal police thereof, as may be thought proper.

ARTICLE XIII.

It is hereby agreed that the first article of the treaty made at Conville trading post, Osage nation, in the State of Kansas, on the 28th day of September, A. D. 1865, by and between the United States and the Osage tribe of Indians, shall be, and hereby is, so amended as to strike out in the second line of the fourth page, (printed copy,) after the word "Interior," the words "on the most advantageous terms;" and in the third and fourth lines, after the word "laws," strike out the words "no preemption claim;" so as to make the clause, of which the words stricken out are members, read as follows: "Said lands shall be surveyed and sold under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for cash, as public lands are surveyed and sold under existing laws, but no homestead settlement shall be recognized." It is also agreed to add after the last word in the amended clause, namely, "recognized;" Provided, That nothing in this amendment shall be construed as to diminish in any way the funds derivable to the Indians under said treaty, or construed so as to interfere with vested rights under said treaty.

ARTICLE XIV.

The United States hereby agrees to sell to the Great and Little Osages tribe of Indians, for their future home, at a price not to exceed twenty-five cents per acre, the following-described district of country, namely: commencing at a point where the ninety-sixth meridian west from Greenwich crosses the south line of the State of Kansas; thence south on said meridian to the north line of the creek country; thence west, on said north line, to a point where said line crosses the Arkansas river; thence up said Arkansas river, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to a point where the south line of the State of Kansas crosses said Arkansas river; thence east on said State line to the place of beginning. It is hereby agreed that the United States shall, at its own expense, cause the boundary lines of said country to be surveyed and marked by permanent and conspicuous monuments. Said survey to be made under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. And it is hereby stipulated and agreed that when the United States has secured a title to the above described lands, the Osages shall be required to move and reside thereon; but nothing in this treaty shall be so construed as to compel the said Indians to remove from their present reservation until the Government has secured said title, and notice thereof given by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the agent of said Indians.

ARTICLE XV.

The Osage tribe of Indians hereby assent to any alterations or amendments which the Senate of the United States may make to this treaty: Provided, That such alterations or amendments do not affect the rights and interests of said Osage Indians, as defined and secured in this and former treaties.

ARTICLE XVI.

The Osages acknowledge their dependence on the Government of the United States, and invoke its protection and care. They desire peace, and promise to abstain from war, and commit no depredations on either whites or Indians; and they further agree to use their best efforts to suppress the introduction and use of ardent spirits in their country.

ARTICLE XVII.

The United States hereby agree to pay to the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians a just and fair compensation for stock stolen from them by whites since the ratification of the treaty of September 29, 1865, and it is made the duty of the agent for the said tribe to investigate all claims of this character and report the same with the proofs in each case to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs within three months from the ratification of this treaty.

ARTICLE XVIII.

It is hereby agreed that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall make an examination of the accounts of the Osage tribe of Indians, and if he finds that the sum of $3,000 due Claimant, a chief of said tribe, under the ninth article of the treaty of 1839, has never been paid to said chief, he shall cause the said sum to be paid to said Claimant for the sole use and benefit of the band of which he is chief.

In testimony whereof the undersigned, the said Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thomas Murphy, George C. Snow, and Albert G. Boone, commissioners as aforesaid, on behalf of the United States, and the undersigned chiefs and head men of the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians, have hereunto set their hands and seals, at the place, day, and year first above mentioned.

[L. S.] N. G. TAYLOR,
President of Commission.
[L. S.] THOMAS MURPHY,
[L. S.] GEORGE C. SNOW,
[L. S.] ALBERT G. BOONE, Commissioners.

A. N. BLACKLIDGE, Secretary of Commission.

JOSEPH PAW-NE-NO-PASHE, or White Hair, Principal Chief.

Gah-he-gah-ton-gah, (chief Clamor's band,) his X mark.

Black Dog, (chief of Black Dog's band,) his X mark.

Dog Thief, (second chief Big Hill band,) his X mark.

Mon-shon-o-lar-ka, (second chief Young Clamor's band,) his X mark.

William Penn, second chief Black Dog's band,) his X mark.

Big Heart, his X mark.

Kan-sa-gah-ne, (first counselor to Big Hill band,) his X mark.

Ch-sha-la-sha, (third chief Big Hill's,) his X mark.

Wa-che-wa-he, (third chief Clamor's band,) his X mark.

Major Broke-arm, (third chief Black Dog band,) his X mark.

Ma-i-ka-ha, (fourth chief Black Dog's band,) his X mark.

Clar-mont, (chief of Carmont band,) his X mark.

Tan-non-ge-he, (chief Big Hill band,) his X mark.

Little Beaver, (second chief White Hair's band,) his X mark.

No-pa-wala, (first chief Little Osages,) his X mark.

Strike Axe, (second chief Little Osages,) his X mark.

Tallers, (second chief Clannor's band,) his X mark.

Wah-ho-pa-wah-no-sha, his X mark.

Wa-sho-pi-wat-tanka, (fourth chief Little Osages,) his X mark.

Wa-ti-sanka, (fourth chief Little Osages,) his X mark.

Thes-a-watanga, (third chief To-nan-sha-hees,) his X mark.

Wy-o-ha-ke, (third chief Little Osages,) his X mark.

Tail Chief, (fourth chief Big Hill's,) his X mark.

Mo-en-e-she, his X mark.

Ho-wa-sa-pa, (Big Chief's band,) his X mark.

Wa-ta-an-ka, (principal counselor of Big Chief's band,) his X mark.

Ne-ka-ka-honey, (principal counselor of Black Dog's band,) his X mark.

Black Bird, (Joe's band,) his X mark.

Non-se-an-ka, (Black Dog's band,) his X mark.

Wa-ko-e-wa-sha, (Big Hill brave,) his X mark.

Sa-pe-ke-sa, (second counselor to Big Camer,) his X mark.

Was-come-ma-nah, (Clarmont brave,) his X mark.

To-tan-ka-she, (Clarmont brave,) his X mark.

Sa-pa-kora, (Clarmont brave,) his X mark.

Wa-sha-she-wat-ian-ker, (Clarmont brave,) his X mark.

Mo-sha-o-ker-shan, (Big Hill brave,) his X mark.

Che-wa-te, (Little Osages,) his X mark.

Wa-ho-pa-in-ka, (Little Osages,) his X mark.

Matthew, (Little Osages,) his X mark.

Hard Chief, (Little Osages,) his X mark.

Wa-ka-le-sha, (Little Osages,) his X mark.

Shiika-wa-ti, (Little Osages,) his X mark.

Wa-sho-she, (Little Osages,) his X mark.

Pa-ne-no-pa-sha, (Little Osages,) his X mark.

Che-to-pah, (principal counselor Little Osages,) his X mark.

Hard Rope, (White Hair's principal counselor,) his X mark.

We-pi-she-way-lap, (Beaver's counselor,) his X mark.

Ke-no-e-nen-ke, (second counselor to White Hair,) his X mark.

Wa-la-ho-na, (counselor White Hair's band,) his X mark.

Ka-ke-k-wa-ti-anka, (little chief White Hair's band,) his X mark.

Ta-pi-gua-la, (little chief White Hair's band,) his X mark.

Yellow Horse, (Big Hill brave,) his X mark.

Go-she-seer, (brave Big Hill band,) his X mark.

No-son-ta-she, (Big Hill brave,) his X mark.

Ne-ko-con-see, (Big Hill brave,) his X mark.

Wa-pe-sum-see, his X mark.

Ne-ko-leverla, his X mark.

Ya-ha-su-she, (third chief Big Hills,) his X mark.

Joseph Paw-ne-no-pashe's braves, his X mark.

Or-le-he-non-she, his X mark.

Cho-she mon-nee, his X mark.

Him-sha-ga-cire, his X mark.

Wa-kon-ta-okke, his X mark.

Wa-shin-pe-she, his X mark.

Gron-na-ta-ne-gah, his X mark.

Ila-gha-nee, his X mark.

Ne-char-you-law, his X mark.

Paw-nee-way-na-taw, his X mark.

Wa-hon-ga-ta-gon-she, his X mark.

War Eagle, his X mark.

Ne-cha-na-shon-tow-ga, his X mark.

Ka-ke-ga-wa-ta-ghe, his X mark.

Non-son-do-she, his X mark.

Wa-mon-cha-na-che, his X mark.

Pa-hou-do-gra-he, his X mark.

Strike Ax, his X mark.

Ka-tum-mo-ne, (White Hair brave,) his X mark.

Pe-she-o-la-ha, (White Hair brave,) his X mark.

Wa-sho-ti-in-gah, (White Hair brave,) his X mark.

Big Elk, (White Hair brave,) his X mark.

Ki-he-ki-na-she-p-she, (Beaver's little chief,) his X mark.

Ka-he-ga-sta-ka, (little chief Beaver's band,) his X mark.

Ve-ne-ka-ka, (little chief Beaver's band,) his X mark.

Wolfe, (little chief Beaver's band,) his X mark.

Wa-no-pa-she, his X mark.

Ne-ko-le-bra, his X mark.

Shin-ko-wa-gah, (Beaver's counselor,) his X mark.

Men-ti-anka, (brave,) his X mark.

O-pon-to-ga, (third chief Clarmont's band,) his X mark.

Wa-he-sa-he, (principal counselor old Lamor,) his X mark.

Ho-ne-ka-she, his X mark.

Night, his X mark.

Wolfe, (fourth chief Clamore's band,) his X mark.

Kob-ka-she, his X mark.

Wa-sha-tun-ka, his X mark.

Her-la-she, his X mark.

Le-he-pie, his X mark.

Pa-hungra-ha-kie, his X mark.

Ne-ka-gone, his X mark.

Me-lo-tu-mu-ni, (12 o'clock,) his X mark.

O-cunse-wa-skun, his X mark.

No-pa-wa-hre, his X mark.

Ka-la-wa-sho-she, his X mark.

Mo-kas-ko-a-la-quah, his X mark.

Kon-sa-ka-a-ree, his X mark.

O-kee-pa-lo, his X mark.

Signed in our presence this 27th day of May, A. D. 1868.

ALEXANDER B. BANKS,
Special United States Indian Agent.

GEORGE W. YATES,
Captain Seventh United States Cavalry.

J. S. KALLOCH,
M. W. REYNOLDS,
Reporter for Commission.

MOSES NEAL,
CHARLES ROBINSON,
W. P. MURPHY,
WILLIAM BABCOCK.

The undersigned, interpreters of the said nation, do hereby certify that the foregoing treaty was read and interpreted by us to the above named chiefs and head men of the Osage nation, and that they declared themselves satisfied therewith, and signed the same in our presence.

ALEXANDER BEYETT,
United States Interpreter.

LEWIS P. CHOUTEAU,
Special Interpreter.

AUGUSTUS CAPTAIRE,
Special Interpreter.

The question was upon adopting the resolutions reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most remarkable transactions that has ever occurred in the whole history of this Government, one which, in my judgment, demands the earnest, serious consideration of this House. It is neither more nor less than the transfer of eight million acres of land, which properly belong to the public domain of the United States, which belong to the landless millions in all parts of the country, into the hands of a railroad corporation, to be subjected to their supreme and unlimited control.

It will be my purpose, in the brief time I shall occupy the attention of the House, to state, as well as I may, the main facts connected with this proposed speculation. This most remarkable treaty now before the Senate, and being pressed upon their attention by the most remarkable and unjustifiable means, was made and framed in all its details and in all its essential features between the high contracting parties here in the city of Washington long before it was transmitted by the commission appointed by the President to the Indian country; it was so framed several months before it was sent to the Indian country by the commission appointed by the President; in fact, it was not made by the commission at all, but by the parties in interest, who design to absorb eight million acres of land which properly belong to the public domain of the United States.

This great body of land is located on the southern line of the State of Kansas, running two hundred and fifty miles from east to west, and fifty miles from north to south, immediately on the northern borders of the Indian territory.

Sir, it is not extravagant to say, looking to the development of Kansas and Missouri in view of the valuable franchises conferred upon the various roads there by the Government, that this body of land, the best land within the area of the whole country, is worth at least at this very moment $12,000,000; $150 per acre. And yet it is proposed by this treaty to transfer this immense tract of land, comprising one-sixth of the State of Kansas, into the hands of one man, Mr. William Sturges, of Chicago, who is in fact the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company. I will say in reference to this corporation that it is a public enterprise in which the people of that whole section of country from Lake Superior to the Gulf of Mexico are immensely and deeply interested. It is one in which the people of Kansas are anxious to aid in a proper and reasonable way. It is one which I, as a member of this House and as a citizen, should feel bound to aid by any proper means in my power.

Sir, as I have said before, this proposition is a remarkable one; it is an unjustifiable one; it is one wrong in principle, and one accomplished, I believe, by improper means. I have said at a moderate estimate this great body of fertile lands is worth at least $12,000,000. In addition to this, up to this time this railroad company has received from the State of Kansas one hundred and twenty-five thousand acres of land through the action of the Legislature of that State—worth at least three dollars an acre—amounting to $375,000. It has also received from the Government five hundred thousand acres of land along the line of the road—land worth at least $750,000. It has also received from the county of Douglas $400,000 in bonds, and from other counties $500,000 in bonds; making in the aggregate $14,025,000 as the amount of franchises conferred upon this road if this treaty pending in the Senate shall receive the sanction of that body. Now, sir, all this railroad proposes to do is to build one hundred and fifty miles of road at the rate of twenty miles per year, which, at a liberal estimate, can be constructed for $25,000 a mile, making $3,750,000; leaving an absolute profit to the company of $10,275,000.

Now, sir, there are many questions affecting the public prosperity, the rights of individuals, and the interests of the State I have the honor to represent upon this floor, and also affecting the interests of the whole country, which demand an investigation in connection with this most remarkable treaty.

Sir, the people of Kansas are anxious to have an outlet upon the Gulf of Mexico. In this anxiety I fully share. But, sir, notwithstanding that, I have abundant evidence in extracts from newspapers and letters that they earnestly protest against this treaty in its present obnoxious form. My constituents demand protection from all systems of land monopoly. They protest against injustice in all its forms. They ask, if this land is to be used for the benefit of railroads, that provision be made to open it to immediate settlement at a stated price per acre, and that the profits accruing be used to construct at least eight hundred miles of different railroads, instead of one hundred and fifty miles, as provided in this treaty. They are willing to encourage the Galveston road to an extent necessary to secure its speedy construction. But they are not willing the whole substance of the State should be absorbed and the rights of the masses infringed by exorbitant and unreasonable demands.

I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read, the following article from the Lawrence Tribune, one of the leading journals in my State.

The Clerk read as follows:

"We are not very familiar with the new treaty, except that we learn that eight million acres of the best lands in Kansas have been contracted by the high contracting parties for twenty cents per acre, on the condition that the Galveston Railroad Company shall construct only twenty miles of railroad per year. This is unreasonable and unjust, not particularly to the Indians, for we do not go much on Mr. 'Lo,' but to the hard-working, honest settlers of Kansas. It is right to encourage railroads and railroad men, but the settlers and all the people of Kansas have rights which white men are bound to respect."

"It is unjust, because Mr. Sturges and his friends agreed to build this road to the south line of the State, without any Indian donation, within two years from the time the franchise was donated to them, and he and his friends have no right to require seven years for what they agreed to accomplish."

"It is unjust to the people, because no limit is made to the price which the railroad company may ask for these lands."

"It is unjust to the tax-payers of Kansas, because it places it in the power of one man to prevent the settlement of at least one tenth of the State, except upon his own terms."

"It is unjust to the State, because these lands are sufficient to secure the building of the whole line of the road to Galveston, by a larger donation to them than is given even to the Union Pacific railroad."

"Either the company should be compelled to build the road through to Galveston, or to construct one hundred and fifty miles of the branch by way of Emporia.

Hon. William Spriggs, who is well acquainted with those lands, told us that they were unexcelled by any lands on which he had ever set his eyes. It is a low estimate to call them worth $8,000,000 more than the company pay for them, and it is not extravagant to say that the company will realize $25,000,000 for them.

"By no means would we say anything to defeat the road; but we would plead for its speedy construction. Let the treaty be so amended as to require a sufficient amount of road to be constructed, first upon the main line, then on the branch toward Emporia. The Neosho valley, that enterprising and prosperous portion of Kansas, on and near which these lands lie, have rights in the public domain. The good sense of the managers of this enterprise ought to teach them that the enormity of this grant requires them at once to suggest such amendments.

Never was such an opportunity presented for the development of a country as is now offered to southern Kansas in this treaty, and our Senators and Congressmen will have a heavy responsibility resting upon them if this $25,000,000 worth of land is not made to construct at least six hundred miles of Kansas railroads."

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I also call attention to the following article from the Lawrence Republican:

"The principle on which this treaty is founded, as we understand it, is the purchase of eight million acres of very choice lands from the Osage Indians by the Government at twenty cents per acre, and a donation of all the net profits arising from the sale of the same to the endowment of railroads in Kansas.

"The net proceeds from these lands have been variously estimated at from eight to twenty-five million dollars; and we think we are safe in saying that $16,000,000 can be realized from that source without seriously retarding the settlement of the country.

"This settled, the next question arising is, how shall this sum be appropriated? The treaty, in its present shape, appropriates the whole sum to the construction of one hundred and fifty miles of the Galveston railroad, amounting to more than $100,000 per mile, which no one can fail to recognize as a reckless waste of resources, and one which, if submitted to, will convict our Senators in Congress of the grossest neglect of the best interests of the State they represent.

"We look upon the Galveston railroad as an enterprise in a national point of view, second only to the Union Pacific; and in the first place this treaty should be amended by the Senate as to secure the construction of that road beyond contingency. This most desirable object can be effected by the appropriation of one half of the sum above named, which would be equal to a donation of $16,000 per mile for a distance of five hundred miles. At that distance from the present terminus of the road, the road now being constructed from Galveston northward would be met. No one can doubt, for a moment, that a donation of this magnitude, and the liberal land grants already made to this road, together with what the Cherokees and the State of Texas propose to give, will make it the most richly endowed road on the continent, and secure its speedy construction beyond a doubt.

"What shall we do with the remaining eight millions, equal to an endowment of $16,000 per mile for five hundred additional miles of railroad in Kansas? We could use one fourth of that sum in the construction of the Emporia and Olathe railroads, of the first importance, and enterprises worthy of the first consideration. This still leaves us six millions for other roads that are alike needy and equally important.

"It is in the power of the Senate so to amend this treaty as to secure the construction of at least one thousand miles of railroad in the place of the one hundred and fifty, as provided for in the treaty, and our Senators thus have an opportunity of conferring benefits on all parts of the State that they represent of the first magnitude. We trust they will not let the opportunity pass without improvement."

The Junction City Union, an influential journal, published in the interior of Kansas, speaks as follows:

"Much indignation has been created throughout the State by the unfairness of and manifest swindle existing in the terms of the treaty made with the Osages. It was made entirely in the interest of the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Company, whose road does not touch the lands. The tract treated for consists of eight million acres on the south border of Kansas, and is fifty miles north and south by two hundred and fifty east and west. It comprises nearly one fifth the State, and is fertile and productive in the extreme. This land all goes to a railroad company for $1,600,000, or twenty cents per acre, no endowment for State schools, and no provisions made for the half-breeds. Other companies desired to purchase the lands, but the commissioners refused their propositions, claiming they were only authorized to treat in behalf of the Lawrence and Galveston Company. There is no security to the Indians for the payment of their money, only $100,000 being paid in money within three months from the ratification of the treaty, and the residue in the bonds of the company, running through a period of fifteen years.

"It is claimed that the land is sufficient to build three or four railroads. While it is manifestly unjust to Government and dishonest to grant such extravagantly liberal donations, the State of Kansas has a far greater interest in the manner of the disposition of the land. The policy of making land grants to railroad companies has become oppressive by the high rates fixed upon the land, whereas if the terms of treaty established that the proceeds of the land should go to railroad companies, the settlement of the country is rapidly promoted instead of retarded. We understand that Congressman CLARKE months ago announced that he would fight the ratification of any treaty which stipulated that the land, instead of the proceeds, should go to a railroad company. Some very bitter opposition has sprung up to this treaty, and we hope for the good of the State it may fail to be ratified."

I might quote from many other journals of my State extracts of the same importance, but this is unnecessary. But not only the press, but the people appeal to us for relief from this threatened injustice. I ask to have read the following letter from a well-known citizen of Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

VERDI, KANSAS, June 7, 1868.

DEAR SIR: I wish to say that the treaty recently made with the Great and Little Osage Indians, including the trust lands, we regard as wrong in principle. The public domain, as far as the title of the Indian is extinguished, should be held sacred to the use of the settler who by his labor improves and cultivates, and by so doing develops the country. The purchase of millions of acres to be owned by one individual or company is dangerous. Place one fifth of this State in the control of one company and you build up monopolies that we cannot but regard as very dangerous. I am living on the trust land here. We supposed the land being treated for we had a right to settle, and by proclamation of sale had a right to think that ere this we would be in possession of a certificate of purchase from the Government. But, instead, there seems to have been a studied effort to drop us in the dark, and now there are various rumors: first, that there is no provision for the settler; second, that there is some kind of partial provision by which some of us must lose largely of our improvement. We learn, also, there is no provision at all for those that were settled on the Osage diminished reserve. This would ruin many families who have expended all their means on the land. What I want is for you to exercise your influence in behalf of the settler, and save our young State, of which we are justly proud, from the clutches of such soulless corporations.

Ever yours,
Hon. SIDNEY CLARKE, M. C.

J. A. BEANE.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. The following letter is but one of many of the same character:

VERDI, WILSON COUNTY, KANSAS,
June 7, 1868.

SIR: Permit me to call your attention to the treaty made with the Osage Indians in favor of Sturges & Co., May 27th last. Every settler here feels that the treaty is a great swindle.

The settlers living on the Indian land are not respected in the treaty, and the settlers on the trust land are not given the privileges that are usually given by the Government in selecting their claims, and, what is still more important, have to settle with a company instead of the Government, and take a bond for a deed and wait fifteen years for a good title. No one here wants to trust a company in this way.

I will not attempt to give any further particulars, but earnestly ask you to look into the matter and stand between the settlers and this great wrong, which I trust you will do.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. H. PARRIS.

Hon. SIDNEY CLARKE.

The following sets forth the facts in reference to the settlers on the trust lands:

HUMBOLDT, KANSAS, June 3, 1868.

DEAR SIR: Knowing you to be the friend of the settler, I would call your attention to a matter of the most vital interest to a large portion of your constituency—the settlers on the Osage trust lands. The treaty just made with the Osages, and soon to be referred to the Senate for ratification, provides that the settler shall purchase one hundred and sixty acres at $1 25, but it restricts the settler to the limits of the same quarter section, which, if ratified in its present form, will be most ruinous to the settler. There are three facts that must be taken into consideration in determining the rights of the settler. 1. A large proportion of the settlements were made prior to the Government survey, and they could not locate their claims in reference to quarter section lines. 2. The entries under the fourth article were irregular in shape, leaving the adjoining claims also in an irregular shape—so the settler cannot enter one hundred and sixty acres in the same quarter section. 3. Also, the settler made his improvements with the view of purchasing his lands at public sale, and of course could have purchased in any shape. In perhaps the majority of instances two or three settlers live on the same quarter section, with their improvements around, so under this provision all but one will be defeated in his entry, and he can enter all the improvements that happen to be on his quarter section without any reference to the owners thereof.

From what I know personally and have heard from all sections of the trust lands as to the location of the settlers' improvements, I know they are in no instances located in reference to section line. Under such an unjust provision three fourths of the settlers would suffer more or less, while many it would break up entirely, for they have spent their all in their improvements, all for what? Just to give the railroad a few more acres of land at sixteen cents per acre, to the ruin of the settler.

I was present at the council and called the attention of the commissioners to these facts, and they assured me that they would so change that article as to give the settler his improvements, which I supposed was done till I saw a statement of it this morning in the Lawrence Journal. Nothing could be done then without consulting Mr. Sturges, and of course he would oppose it and the three commissioners must yield. Such a gross outrage must be checked, and the settlers are all looking to you as their Representative and friend to guard their interests. I know I express the wishes of thousands of settlers, and I most earnestly hope you will give your especial attention to this matter.

Very respectfully,

J. B. F. CATES.

Hon. SIDNEY CLARKE, Washington, D. C.

At this moment the following letter has been referred to me by the honorable gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN:]

LAWRENCE, KANSAS, June 2, 1868.

SIR: A treaty has just been forced from the Osage Indians, whereby they sell all their diminished reserve and trust lands, embracing eight million acres, to the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company for $1,600,000, payable in sixteen semi-annual installments. Three eighths of said land are the finest in Kansas for farming, while the remainder is inexhaustibly rich in mineral wealth. The intention now is to rush this treaty hastily through the Senate upon the false assumption that unless the Osages are at once removed bloody collisions with the whites will ensue. The treaty was drafted some time since at Washington. The settlers and those who shall desire cheap homes for many years to come can rely only on you and such of your associates as are opposed to the usurpations of monopolies for relief. Appreciating your previous efforts in this direction, I now write you in behalf of all poor men who may in the next ten years desire to emigrate West, and request that you will institute an inquiry as to the means whereby so iniquitous a treaty was obtained, and why actual settlers are not allowed to obtain, by the terms thereof, their homes at $1 25 per acre, instead of selling to a monopoly at fourteen cents per acre on sixteen years time.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY C. WHITNEY.

Hon. E. B. WASHBURN, Washington, D. C.

But I must not detain the House with these appeals for justice. I will conclude this testimony with the following:

OSAGE TRUST LANDS, WILSON COUNTY, KANSAS.

DEAR SIR: By request of many citizens of Kansas living upon the public domain, I send you this note, asking your influence in behalf of settlers so located. Many settlers came on these lands treated for by Mr. Sturges this season, and located themselves as permanent settlers of this State. A great number are now raising the necessities of life upon the farms of older settlers, and cannot work their own "claims" until crops are made. Towns have been surveyed and improved. Cannot such settlers and companies rely upon your protection in Congress?

Yours, &c.,

JAMES J. BARRETT, M. D.

Hon. SIDNEY CLARKE.

Mr. Speaker, aside from all this, aside from the great injustice the treaty perpetrates upon the people of my State, it is wrong in principle, wrong in fact, and ought to be earnestly and sternly resisted by the Congress of the United States. I pass, then, to the consideration of the power of this House over this question. Perhaps if we act in accordance with the past policy of the Government in reference to the transfer of these Indian reservations to individuals and private corporations we have little power in connection with this question; but, sir, representing the people of the United States, representing the interests of the whole country, it appears to me it is within the province, and within the just prerogatives and powers, of this House to enter its protest, having the facts before it, on an examination into the case by one of the legally constituted committees of the House. It is clearly within our power to enter a protest against the ratification of this treaty on behalf of the United States; and to say to the Senate that if that remarkable treaty is ratified by that body we will not make the appropriation to carry it out, and will not recognize its validity.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I wish to inquire of the gentleman what provision of the treaty there is that requires legislation to carry it out. Is there any appropriation required by the terms of the treaty?

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I am not able to answer the gentleman only in a general way—that there are some appropriations necessary to be made by Congress to carry out the provisions of some treaty; not the one to which I am now alluding—in regard to the disposition of the land.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas if the title to the land is not now in the Indians, and whether it is to-day a part of the public domain.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. The Indians have a mere possessory right there after all.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. That question has been up before this House heretofore, and I believe this body has repeatedly expressed its opinion that the Indians have only a possessory right so far as this reservation is concerned, and that it is not in the power of the Senate but of Congress to dispose of the land, which, as I said before, properly belongs to the public domain of the United States whenever it shall be transferred from the possessory right of the Indians.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me one moment upon that very question?

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The committee, as I understand, do not undertake to decide the question whether the Indians have a possessory right to the land or a right in fee-simple. But it is conceded on all hands that they cannot alienate the land, whatever title they may have to it, except to the United States. That is the stipulation. The question now is whether a few worthless Indians may be brought to Washington or some men not much more deserving sent out there to treat with them, and a treaty may be made with them in this way, by which the United States are made to consent to the alienation of this land to a body of speculators that may happen to fall in with the Indians and get control of their agent. The committee were of opinion, I believe all who were present—at all events I was of that opinion—that the consent to be given by the United States was not within the treaty-making power; that the President and the Senate could not give that consent to the alienation of this large body of land belonging to the public; that we could not carve out a tract of eight million acres of land, as large as the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island all together, and put it under the control of a few speculators. They may be very good men, and we have no objection to their making a fortune legitimately, but we do object to putting this land beyond the control of the United States and closing it to the right of settlement. The question now is, will the House consent that the control over this vast domain shall, under a wrong interpretation of the treaty-making power, be confined to the hands of a few men, who have in the first place got the consent of the Indian department and of the President, then the consent of a committee of the Senate, and lastly, the consent of the Senate itself. Shall this land belong to the nation or to these men?

Sir, for myself I intend never to give my consent to allowing the treaty-making power to add to or diminish the domain of this country. It has no power either to cede away the State of Maine to Great Britain or to acquire new territory on the Northwest, or to exercise exclusive control of the House of Representatives over the limits of this country either to contract or enlarge them.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words in reference to the settlement of these lands, after which I will yield the floor to others who desire to be heard. When it came to my knowledge that an attempt was made to make a treaty with the Great and Little Osage Indians, I presented to the chairman of the commission the views which I entertained as a Representative from the State of Kansas in reference to the provisions which should be incorporated into the proposed treaty. And I will say here that these Indian reservations, by the permission of the Interior Department and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, are occupied at this moment by thousands of settlers who have gone there in good faith and established their homes, built school-houses and churches, and introduced all the elements of civilization. Now, sir, the Secretary of the Interior ought to have known, if he did not know months ago, these facts. Under this state of facts, when it came to my knowledge that a proposition was to be made to treat with these Indians for this land I presented to the chairman of the commission the views which I entertained upon the subject in the interest of the people of my State, a copy of which I hold in my hand.

In this paper I insisted that right and justice demanded that this great body of land should be opened up to the operation of the preemption and homestead laws of the United States. But I said that if that could not be done, that if this land was to be transferred to a railroad corporation, then I insisted, in the interest of the people I represent, that this land should be opened to settlers at $1 25 an acre, the railroad company taking the profit between nineteen cents an acre and $1 25 an acre, which would yield to the company several million dollars in the course of the next four or five years. At the same time I urged upon the commission the propriety of protecting the settlers upon another portion of this Osage reservation included within the provisions of a bill which has already passed this House, and is awaiting the action of the Senate. I expressed the opinion that unless these essential provisions were incorporated in this treaty in the interest not only of the people of my State but of the people of the whole country who pay the taxes and have an interest in the public domain of the United States, the treaty could not and ought not to receive the sanction of the Senate of the United States:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 1868.

SIR: In a conversation on Friday last you informed me of the appointment of yourself and other gentlemen as a commission to make a new treaty with the Great and Little Osage Indians, with the view of extinguishing the title to their lands in the State of Kansas, and removal to a new reservation in the Indian territory. This result is most ardently desired by the people of my State, in accordance with the will of Congress expressed several years since, and is in harmony with the interests of the Indians and of the Government.

But there is another question in which Kansas, and the whole country, has a deep interest, and to which I desire to call your attention and the attention of your associates on the commission, before you enter upon the duties assigned you. I refer to the manner of extinguishing the Indian title to the diminished reservation, and the opening of the same to the vast flow of emigration now seeking new homes in southern and southwestern Kansas. The land for which you are to treat comprises about eight million acres. It is fertile in its soil, situated in a mild climate, is well watered and wooded, and must be in every way vastly attractive to the multitude of people now seeking homes on the new lands of the continent.

Sound public policy, as well as the interests of the Indians themselves, demands that this great body of land should be opened up for settlement at once, and placed in a position where the settlers can obtain perfect titles, and at a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre.

It would be far preferable, and but justice to our pioneer settlers, to have this land opened up to homestead entry. But if this cannot be done, then the people of my State and the public interests generally unite in the demand that the new treaty shall provide for preemption rights at the usual price per acre. It is estimated that seventy-five thousand people are now on their way to, and are making arrangements to settle in the State of Kansas the present year. Indeed, it is not improbable that the increase of our population will be double that number. Most of these people are seeking for new and cheap lands. In behalf of these hardy pioneers, many of whom fought for the defense of the Government, whose protection they now ask from all systems of land monopoly, I earnestly appeal. As the only Representative of my State in the lower branch of Congress, I shall insist that all future treaties for the acquisition of Indian reserves in Kansas be based upon the principle I have indicated, namely, that the lands be opened up to actual settlers, free from all schemes of speculation and monopoly so disastrous to the prosperity of the new States.

I am advised that proposition will be made by railroad corporation to secure these lands by absolute purchase. To this I have no objection, provided the company making the purchase build the road through the lands, and they are immediately opened to settlement at Government price. There is probably about two million acres east of the Arkansas river and six million acres west of said river. I assume that the purchase can be made from the Indians at a price not exceeding $1,500,000, and certainly not exceeding $2,000,000. The profits derived from the sale of the land to actual settlers during the next five years would yield enough money to build the Galveston road to the Arkansas river, at Fort Gibson, or run a road west or southwest an equal distance. Thus the interests of railroads and of the State and of actual settlers would be all subserved, and a land policy established which would add greatly to the growth and wealth of the State I represent. I do not indicate the details of this policy, but if railroad companies desire to purchase, the principles I have indicated can be easily incorporated in the detailed provisions of the proposed treaty.

There is another important question to which I earnestly call your attention.

The settlers on the land ceded and sold by the treaty proclaimed January 21, 1867, are yet without titles to their homes.

A joint resolution has been passed by the House of Representatives for the relief of these settlers and is now pending in the Senate. I appeal to your commission to meet the settlers referred to in full and free conference, and in the treaty you are about to make, provide for the full recognition of their rights, as you have abundant power to do, and thus settle the question, already too long at issue, in the interests of justice. I also recommend that you insert a clause in the new treaty recognizing the full power of Congress to legislate hereafter.

The importance of the questions to which I have referred to the interests of a large portion of my constituents, and the pressing necessities of immediate solution makes no apology on my part necessary in thus earnestly addressing you, and through you the gentlemen of the commission.

The title to the land of a country is the first question to be considered in any point of view. Especially is this true in a State like Kansas, where the people are devoted to agricultural and pastoral pursuits. It is for such a people I have the honor to seek for justice at your hands, as well as for the landless millions of the country now seeking for new homes where they can add so materially to the wealth and power of the nation.

It is but proper to add that in my opinion no treaty that does not open the lands to immediate settlement, essentially in accordance with the views I have suggested, can or ought to receive the approval of the Senate.

I ask you to make my views known to your commission and to the Secretary of the Interior.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SIDNEY CLARKE.

Hon. N. G. Taylor, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

Notwithstanding that I represent the State in which this large body of lands is situated, no attention has been paid to the views which I presented in the interest of the people of that State and of the whole country; but this treaty has been made in the interest of private parties and in the interest of a corporation. I have strenuously insisted that this land should be open to settlement by some process at $1 25 per acre, so that the people of my State and of all the States, whenever the treaty shall be concluded, shall have the privilege of entering on these lands at the Government price, yielding the homestead privilege, which, on reflection, I think I ought not to have yielded in reference to so large a body of lands and so favorably situated for immediate settlement. But desiring to encourage this great public enterprise, desiring to secure as speedily as possible this outlet to the Gulf of Mexico from the interior of the continent by the completion of this great public thoroughfare now in process of construction, I was willing that this railroad company should receive the profit between the purchase money, nineteen cents per acre, and $1 25, which would yield them sufficient money to make a continuous line of railroad from Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, to Galveston bay, in the State of Texas. But not satisfied with that, not satisfied with this reasonable proposition, the gentleman interested, or rather the proprietor of this road—for one man has furnished all the money for the construction—has seen fit to bring before the Senate of the United States a treaty which strikes down in the most ingenious manner the rights of the State of Kansas as a whole, as well as the rights of the people of all the States, and urges the Senate to indorse such an unjust proposition.

Now, sir, it seems to me that the action proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom this subject has been referred, is just and proper. It seems to me that the House ought not to sit idly by and see eight million acres of the public domain of the United States transferred by treaty into the hands of a corporation or of one individual, this House, representing the people, exercising no control or supervision over the matter whatever. The time has come here and now for us to exercise the prerogatives which properly belong to us, to put a stop to this outrage, this wrong, which is being inflicted upon the people of this country by transactions of this character, which of late have been far too frequent.

This treaty is not alone involved in a proper decision of this question. There are other treaties at this moment pending in the Senate proposing to transfer other Indian reserves—in fact other Indian reserves have been transferred into the hands of railway companies and private parties to the detriment of the interests of the people. And if this House shall, by refusing to exercise its power, by refusing to express its opinion, sanction this course of proceeding, how long will it be before the whole public domain of the United States will be absorbed by these unjustifiable means, and it will be beyond our reach to arrest this great wrong.

The Committee on Indian Affairs have thought proper to report these resolutions and to ask for them the favorable consideration of this House to assert the power which we properly possess in this matter, expressing our opinion as one of the coordinate branches of Congress, presuming that the Senate will respect that opinion, and hesitate before they give their sanction to this flagrant injustice.

I now yield for ten minutes to the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, [Mr. JULIAN.]

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, the measure now before the House involves the disposition of a large portion of land in the State of Kansas, which ought to be dealt with as public land of the United States. I therefore desire to speak briefly upon the question before us.

Some ten days ago I introduced a resolution in this House calling on the President to inform the House by what authority and for what reason the large tract of territory referred to was conveyed directly to a railroad corporation in the State of Kansas, and not to the United States, by which the disposition of it would have devolved upon Congress? The President replied, through Secretary Browning, that the treaty then pending had not been officially communicated by the commissioners, and he could not therefore give the desired information.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CLARKE] thereupon introduced another resolution calling on the President for the same and some additional information relative to this treaty. The President, in reply, informed the House that the treaty had been sent to the Senate, and being a secret document he could not tell us anything in relation to it.

And thus the Representatives of the people are left without any definite, certainly without any official knowledge, respecting this singular transaction; this monstrous project, involving the disposition of so large a portion of the domain of Kansas. To obtain this knowledge and bring it before this House was the purpose of the committee whose report is now before us.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the facts in this case are so very remarkable that I must beg the particular attention of the House to what I have to say. The land referred to consists of a body fifty miles wide and two hundred and fifty miles long, containing, consequently, twelve thousand five hundred square miles or eight million acres, which, divided by one hundred and sixty, will give an aggregate of fifty thousand homesteads of one hundred and sixty acres each; and allowing every head of a family to represent an average of five persons—which is the ordinary computation—it would sustain a population of two hundred and fifty thousand. The territory is larger than either of the States of Rhode Island, Delaware, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Jersey, New Hampshire, or Maryland. It lacks but little of being large enough to enable you to carve out of it three such States as Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Delaware.

Yet, it is proposed to transfer the whole of this domain, by a pretended Indian treaty, to a single railroad corporation in the State of Kansas, in utter disregard of the rights of the great body of the bona fide settlers on the land, in defiance of the authority of Congress over our Indian reservations, the moment the right of occupancy by the Indians is relinquished, and in shameless disregard of the equal rights of other railroad corporations to the aid of the Government. Such a transaction needs no other exposure than its bare statement to secure for it the condemnation of all honest men. All this land is to be sold to this railroad corporation at nineteen cents per acre, on a credit of fifteen years, payable in equal annual installments, and in the stock of the railroad company. And although a proposition was made by another railroad corporation to pay $2,000,000, instead of $1,600,000, and to reserve the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections for school purposes in the interest of Kansas, and to protect the rights of settlers on this land, including the Indian half-breeds on it, yet that proposition was contemptuously spurned by the railroad company and the Indian commission having the matter in charge.

Mr. Speaker, this Indian commission was appointed by one Andrew Johnson some time ago, composed of men who seem to have been admirably fitted for the work they have done. Instead of being an Indian commission it has proved itself to be a thieving commission, whether its action is considered in relation to the Indians or to the settlers on the land or to the Government itself. I mean exactly what I say. I find certain expressive words scattered here and there through the dictionary, and when I meet with a case like this I feel justified in giving them fit employment. It was a thieving commission, organized to cheat the Indians, and aid and abet the cold-blooded rapacity of railroad monopolists.

A VOICE. Who are these commissioners?

Mr. JULIAN. The names of the commissioners are N. G. Taylor, Hon. Thomas Murphy, superintendent of the central superintendency; Colonel A. G. Boone; and Major Snow, agent of the Osage Indians.

Sir, I repeat it, this was a commission for swindling, spoliation, and plunder, and every act of this transaction brands it as I have branded it. In the name of honest people everywhere, I denounce it as the foul job of men who must have been chosen to perform it, and who have done their work with a perfection of skill and workmanship that surpasses anything I have heard of in the way of public plunder.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I ask the gentleman whether he refers to the peace commission?

Mr. JULIAN. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question, for I understand these men are not the peace commission which has gone out on a noble errand, but special commissioners appointed by the President of the United States to negotiate this swindle, a swindle, as I am reliably informed, that was concocted and worked up in the city of Washington a year ago between Mr. Sturges and the men who have acted as his tools under the name of Indian commissioners.

Mr. Speaker, these Great and Little Osage Indians had no power to cede these lands to a railroad corporation. They had, as the gentleman on my right has said, the right of occupancy upon these lands under previous treaties with the Government. The title was in the United States, and their power over the lands was simply the power of cession to the United States, and was exhausted the moment they exercised that power.

Why, sir, has it come to this that we are to sit here and recognize the right of the President and Senate to build railroads and make land grants in contravention of the powers of Congress? If we want to build the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston railroad, and endow that company with land grants for the purpose, it is for the Congress of the United States to do it, and not the Osage Indians or the treaty-making power. The Osage Indians, as this House has repeatedly decided, had no power to transfer these lands to any railroad company. And the Senate has no power to grant away the public domain, certainly not by treating with Indians, who are the mere wards of the United States, and have no title to the land.

Conceding the power referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] the power of the President and Senate to cede away a portion of the State of Maine, it is wholly inapplicable to the treaty with these minor children of the nation who have no title to their lands and no power by treaty, except to cede their right of occupancy to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, since the year 1861 we have had a new Indian policy. As I stated here on another occasion, prior to 1860 all our treaties with the Indian tribes went upon the principle of directly granting to the United States the lands upon which the Indians resided, and of thus giving to Congress, at once, their management. In 1861 we began this policy of special treaty stipulations by which the jurisdiction of Congress over the public domain has been to a very great extent overthrown in the interest of monopolists and thieves; and, sir, this Osage Indian treaty is the crowning flower and fruit, the rich culmination of the system. It has grown worse and worse, and more and more defiant, because it has been unchecked in its course; and this last ripe product of its infernal achievements goes very far to make respectable the ordinary thieves and pickpockets who have found their way into the jails and penitentiaries of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I invoke the interposition of this House, in the name of decency and of common justice, in checking these flagrant outrages, and calling upon the Senate to repudiate them. Let us say to our Senators that we will not recognize the validity of this treaty by paying any of the expenses occasioned by it; that we deny the right of the President to execute titles under it, and that to our utmost we condemn and protest against it.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, when I was upon the floor I ought to have stated that under this treaty it is within the power of this company to break this contract at any time. It may go on until it selects the best lands and then terminate the contract, leaving the poor lands to fall to the Government. It may terminate the treaty at any time without any penalty whatever. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SHANKS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, I am not willing to let this matter pass without at least putting upon record, in addition to the committee's report, my denunciation of the origin, practice, and purpose of this movement. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that if this transaction is permitted to be consummated by the consent of this House another consequence may result. The Cherokee nation, which is organized within the limits of this Government, can as well sell out their whole domain to a set of speculators, either for railroad or other purposes, who may organize within this Government a State in the hands of a few men who would have absolute control of its lands, and of course of its destiny, against the best interests of the country and people. If we permit this to be done in one portion of the territory of the United States now, and we consent to the establishment of the precedent, and allow other parties to do the same thing, the result will be that all the vast region now controlled or occupied by the Indians will become the property of individuals, contrary to the settled policy of this Government, which has been to open all its domain to settlement and improvement. In addition to that it will necessarily require appropriations of money out of the public Treasury to carry out these treaty stipulations.

It should be the purpose of this Government to prevent fraud in all transactions connected with the public lands. It should be its purpose to carry out more extensively than heretofore the great educational interest which it has inaugurated by encouraging the establishment of schools and colleges throughout the great West by the aid of lands donated for that purpose. Now, sir, in all this vast tract there is no provision for a single school if this act is consummated. That whole region of country will be left in the darkness of ignorance for years and years to come, while grasping speculators shall wring from unwilling hands whatever prices they may choose to exact for their lands. The country will be deprived of all those improvements which are necessary to the progress of civilized society. I wish to say, as one member of this committee, that I look upon this as one of the most gigantic frauds ever sought to be perpetrated on the Government or people; and the same foul parties, practices, and purpose are at the bottom of it that stamp with infamy all the proceedings of this most cursed Administration.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at what is represented to be the action of the executive part of the Government of the United States touching the ceding of these lands lying within one of the States to a corporation. What is the nature and extent of this treaty power of the United States? It is the power of one sovereign State—the United States of one part—to make with any other sovereign a contract which becomes the law of the land, and so binding that it cannot be changed either by the United States or by any State; and if by treaty the President and the Senate can dispose of one sixth of the territory of one State of this Union, so as to give these lands to a corporation or individual, then so could they contract with any foreign State that such foreign State might purchase and own and exercise jurisdiction over such lands within such State. This results from the very nature of the power to make treaties. Whatever does come fairly within the power of the United States to make a treaty about it must be a thing touching which the power to contract is complete and unlimited, unless to appropriate money, and in which the contract may in all respects be whatever the parties having the power to contract may choose to make it. If, then, the lands within a State can be ceded by treaty to corporations, through the power given by the treaty to Indians, so can they be so ceded by contract to a foreign State with such power and jurisdiction as the contractors may please.

Now, sir, can this be possible; when, by the Constitution, the United States cannot acquire any land or exercise any jurisdiction over any land within any State except only such as by "the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings?" And even to this limited extent and for these limited purposes, these lands cannot be acquired and perpetually governed except by the authority, not of the treaty-making power, but of the Congress, and with the assent of the Legislature of the State. And can the President and Senate, by treaty, dispose of one sixth of a State or all of a State to whomsoever the treaty-making power is competent to contract with, and confer such rights, jurisdictions, and powers as the United States can give over everything which is within its power to make treaties about. It may be said that this treaty does not attempt to do more than confer title to these lands, a thing the United States clearly may do, and does not withdraw them from the jurisdiction of the State of Kansas, nor to give them to a foreign jurisdiction. The obvious reply to that suggestion is, first, that I have already given. I am not arguing that the United States could not by law authorize this title to be sold to this corporation; but I am arguing that whatever the United States can dispose of by treaty must be a thing as to which the treaty may be made, whatever the contracting parties may deem it wise to make it; and I conclude that, just because it is evident that the treaty could not stipulate with the Indians that these lands should be forever the property of the United States and subject to its exclusive jurisdiction, or that the treaty could not grant these lands to a foreign State, therefore this subject-matter of the disposal of the public lands cannot come within the scope of that treaty-making power which, in its nature, must be so unlimited. No, Mr. Speaker, the power to dispose of the public lands is to be found in that clause of the Constitution which gives to Congress, and not to the treaty-making power, the "power to dispose of and to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States." This clause of the Constitution is plainly a power to dispose of the lands of the United States by providing for their sale and conveyance of title, and to govern them while they are the property of the Government. And obviously this is precisely what is here attempted to be done by the treaty-making power, but which the Constitution expressly intrusts to Congress. Surely, Mr. Speaker, if the action of the Executive in this matter were done deliberately and in full view of the usurpation it seems to me to involve, and is such as described by the gentlemen who have spoken, it would make a proper case for such proceeding as has just failed at the other end of the Capitol. According to my memory heretofore the Congress, and not the treaty power, has disposed of the public land, and this is a new practice.

Mr. JULIAN. I merely wish to correct the gentleman from Ohio on a matter of fact. For some seven years past the President and Senate have been doing exactly such things on a smaller scale as are proposed in this infamous treaty, and it is to check and prevent the continuance of that policy that the proceeding now before the House is directed.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that by treaties we have been giving away lands within the States?

Mr. JULIAN. In repeated cases we have done it within the last few years. I wish to say further, that while I agree with the gentleman as to the power by treaty to accept and receive grants of lands by the United States, I wish to remind him that that does not apply, and cannot apply, to these Indian lands, the titles to which are in the United States, while the right of occupancy alone is in the Indians, who may certainly cede that right to the United States, but certainly could not cede it to any corporation.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I am glad the gentleman has reminded me of what I meant to say touching the anomalous character of our treaties with the Indians, and their anomalous relations to the United States. As to the fact he states that such treaties have been made, though the fact had escaped my memory, it does not make right or sanctify a manifest usurpation of the powers of Congress over the disposal of the public lands. As to the relations which the United States sustain and assume toward Indian tribes in treating with them, what I wanted to say is that we treat with them, not really as foreign nations, but as the inhabitants of our country and as the wards of the United States; and we treat with them generally not in the way of the ultimate and final disposal of the public lands, but only as to their possessory rights, leaving the final disposal of their lands to the action of Congress whenever the Indian titles may be terminated.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I would inquire of the Chair how much time I have left.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. DAWES.) The gentleman has seven minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARY] for five minutes.

Mr. CARY. I regret exceedingly that I can have but five minutes on a question of this magnitude. I am in favor of the adoption of these resolutions. I think it is our duty, as far as possible, to arrest this gigantic swindle, a swindle not only upon the Indians, but upon the settlers who may be there, upon the State of Kansas, and more than all a gigantic swindle upon the whole people of this country.

It is proposed to permit these Indians to convey eight million acres of the most fertile portion of Kansas to a railroad corporation, for a railroad that will cost to build it not to exceed $3,000,000, while the lands ceded are worth to-day $12,000,000, leaving a clear profit of $9,000,000 to a single individual who owns that railroad. The amount of territory proposed to be ceded is one third as large as the State of Ohio, and twice as large as the State of Massachusetts. Gentlemen upon the other side speak of this treaty as an act of "this infernal administration." Sir, the President has had, the Senate have had, and the Osage Indians have had bad examples and bad precedents set them heretofore. This is but another of the swindles that have been practiced upon the people of this country in regard to public lands. This is like the case of the Pacific railroad. In that case a few men organized a railroad corporation and obtained a subsidy from Congress nearly large enough to build the road, and then they obtained a cession from Congress, not from the President of the United States, not from the Senate alone, but from this House of Representatives, of land enough to make four such States as New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana, and have enough left over to make two States like Massachusetts.

Now, no wonder, after such an example as that, that these untutored savages are willing to give eight million acres of land to a little contemptible railroad company, whose road does not go anywhere near this land.

Sir, this whole system is a swindle. I insist that the Congress of the United States are only the trustees of the public domain, and that we have no right to grant these lands to any railroad corporation under heaven. You may give the proceeds of public lands to railroads; but the lands themselves are the inheritance of the whole people. Every man who will settle upon these lands, and open up a farm and cultivate it, is entitled to the privilege of doing so. But I cannot be led into a general discussion of this subject upon this proposition. I think it is the imperative duty of this House to pass these resolutions, to pass other resolutions, to do anything to prevent this swindle upon the people of this country and upon the Indians. This treaty proposes to give eight million acres of our public land to a railroad corporation whose road will not go anywhere near it. It is part and parcel of the whole system of railroad land-grant legislation. The President of the United States, the Senate of the United States, and the Osage Indians are doing in this case only what the Thirty-Ninth Congress did in precisely a similar case.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. The Committee on Indian Affairs have instructed me to offer a substitute for the second resolution, as follows:

Resolved, (as the sense of this House,) That the objects, terms, conditions, and stipulations of the aforesaid pretended treaty are not within the treaty-making power, nor are they authorized either by the Constitution or laws of the United States; and therefore this House does hereby solemnly condemn the same, and does also earnestly but respectfully express the hope and expectation that the Senate will not ratify the said pretended treaty.

The resolution originally reported from the committee was as follows:

Resolved, That this House does hereby solemnly and earnestly protest against the ratification of the stipulations of said pretended treaty by the Senate, and will feel bound to refuse any appropriation in its behalf, or to recognize its validity in any form.

The question was upon the substitute; and being taken, it was agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I now call the previous question upon the series of resolutions as amended.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The series of resolutions were then unanimously adopted.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I move that the report and accompanying documents be printed in the Globe.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I now make the ordinary motion to print the report and papers accompanying it.

The motion was agreed to.

HOGAN VS. PILE.

Mr. COOK, from the Committee of Elections, in the matter of the contested-election case of Hogan vs. PILE, submitted a report concluding with the following resolution:

Resolved, That WILLIAM A. PILE is duly elected a member of this House from the first district of Missouri.

The report was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANLER submitted a minority report, which was also ordered to be printed.

M'KEE VS. YOUNG.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, I wish, as I understood the tax bill will be reported on Monday next, and as it is made the special order from day to day to the exclusion of all other business, to give notice that I will on Saturday call up after the morning hour the case of McKee against Young.

HANNAH MOORE.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, moved that the petition of Hannah Moore be taken from the table, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARGES AGAINST A SUPREME COURT JUDGE.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, moved that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of a resolution referred to them relative to one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back Senate bill No. 377, to change the time of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the several districts in the State of Tennessee, with an amendment.

The bill provides that the circuit and district courts for the district of East Tennessee shall hereafter be held at Knoxville, on the second Mondays of March and September in each year; for the district of Middle Tennessee at Nashville, on the third Mondays of April and October of each year; and for the district of West Tennessee at Memphis, on the fourth Mondays of May and November of each year. All recognizances, indictments, or other proceedings, civil and criminal, now pending or returnable in those courts, are to be entered in court and be heard and tried according to the times of holding the courts as herein provided. The act is to take effect from and after the first Monday in July, 1868.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out "March and September" and insert "January and July."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body insisted on its amendment to House bill No. 1059, to relieve certain citizens of North Carolina of disabilities, non-concurred in by the House and agreed to the committee of conference asked for, and had appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. SHERMAN the managers of said conference on its part.

It further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 440) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency, secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

It further announced that the Senate had indefinitely postponed House bill No. 970, to provide for a temporary and provisional government for Alabama.

It announced, in conclusion, that the Senate had passed without amendment House joint resolution No. 295, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties on certain articles contributed to the National Association of American Sharpshooters.

APPEALS FROM THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back Senate bill No. 164, to provide for appeals from the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The first section provides that an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States shall be allowed on behalf of the United States from all the final judgments of the said Court of Claims adverse to the United States, whether such judgments shall have been rendered by virtue of the general or any special power or jurisdiction of said court under the limitations now provided by law for other cases of appeal from said court.

The second section provides that said Court of Claims, at any time while any suit or claim is pending before or on appeal from said court, or within two years next after the final disposition of any such suit or claim, may, on motion on behalf of the United States, grant a new trial in any such suit or claim and stay the payment of any judgment therein, upon such evidence (although the same may be cumulative or other) as shall reasonably satisfy said court that any fraud, wrong, or injustice in the premises has been done to the United States. But until an order is made staying the payment of a judgment the same shall be payable and paid as now provided by law.

The third section provides that whenever it shall be material in any suit or claim before any court to ascertain whether any person did or did not give any aid or comfort to the late rebellion, the claimant or party asserting the loyalty of any such person to the United States during such rebellion shall be required to prove affirmatively that such person did, during said rebellion, consistently adhere to the United States, and did give no aid or comfort to persons engaged in said rebellion; and the voluntary residence of any such person in any place where, at any time during such residence, the rebel forces or organization held sway, shall be prima facie evidence that such person did give aid and comfort to said rebellion and to the persons engaged therein.

The fourth section provides that no plaintiff or claimant, or any person from or through whom any such plaintiff or claimant derives his alleged title, claim, or right against the United States, or any person interested in any such title, claim, or right, shall be a competent witness in the Court of Claims in supporting any such title, claim, or right, and no testimony given by such plaintiff, claimant, or person shall be used; provided that the United States shall, if they see cause, have the right to examine such plaintiff, claimant, or person as a witness, under the regulations and with the privileges provided in section eight of the act passed March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to amend an act to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States," approved February 24, 1855.

The fifth section provides that from and after the 1st day of July, 1868, the Attorney General of the United States for the time being shall, with his assistants, attend to the prosecution and defense of all matters and suits in the Court of Claims on behalf of the United States. There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two assistant Attorneys General, who shall hold their offices for four years respectively, unless sooner lawfully removed, and whose salaries shall be $4,000 each per year, payable quarterly, and who shall be in lieu of the solicitor, assistant solicitor, and deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims, and of the Assistant Attorney General now provided for by law; and the existing offices of solicitor, assistant solicitor, and deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims, and of Assistant Attorney General, are hereby abolished from and after the 1st day of July, 1868. The Attorney General shall have power to appoint two additional clerks of the fourth class, and one clerk at a salary not exceeding $2,000, in his office.

The sixth section provides that it shall also be the duty of the said Attorney General and his assistants, in all cases brought against the United States in said Court of Claims founded upon any contract, agreement, or transaction with any executive Department, or any bureau, officer, or agent of such Department, or where the matter or thing on which the claim is based shall have been passed upon and decided by any Department, bureau, or officer intrusted by law or Department regulations with the settlement and adjustment of such claims, demands, or accounts, to transmit to said Department, bureau, or officer, as aforesaid, a printed copy of the petition filed by the claimant in such case, with a request that the said Department, bureau, or officer to whom the same shall be so transmitted as aforesaid, will furnish to said Attorney General all facts, circumstances, and evidence touching said claim as is or may be in the possession or knowledge of the said Department, bureau, or officer; and it shall be the duty of the said Department, bureau, or officer to whom such petition may be transmitted and such request preferred as aforesaid, without delay, and within a reasonable time, to furnish said Attorney General with a full statement of all the facts, information, and proofs which are or may be within the knowledge or in the possession of said Department, bureau, or officer, relating to the claim aforesaid. Such statement shall also contain a reference to or description of all official documents or papers, if any, as may or do furnish proof of facts referred to in said statement, or that may be necessary and proper for the defense of the United States against the said claim, together with the Department, office, or place where the same is kept or may be procured. And if the said claim shall have been passed upon and decided by the said Department, bureau, or officer, the statement or answer to be transmitted to said Attorney General, as hereinbefore provided, shall succinctly state the reasons and principles upon which such decision shall have been based. In all cases where such decision shall have been made upon any act of Congress, or upon any section or clause of such act, the same shall be cited specifically. And if any previous interpretation or construction shall have been given to such act, section, or clause by the said Department or bureau transmitting such statement, the same shall be set forth succinctly in said statement, and a copy of the opinion filed, if any, shall be annexed to such statement and transmitted with the same to the Attorney General aforesaid. And where any decision in the case shall have been based upon any regulation of an executive Department, or where such regulation shall or may, in the opinion of the Department, bureau, or officer transmitting such statement, have any bearing upon the claim in suit, the same shall be distinctly referred to and quoted in extenso in the statement transmitted to said Attorney General; provided, however, that where there shall be pending in the said court more than one case, or a class of cases, the defense to which shall rest upon the same facts, circumstances, and proofs, the said Department, bureau, or officer shall only be required to certify and transmit one statement of the same, and such statement shall be held to apply to all such classes of cases as if made out, certified, and transmitted in each case respectively.

The seventh section provides that it shall and may be lawful for the head of any executive Department, whenever any claim is made upon said Department, involving disputed facts or controverted questions of law, where the amount in controversy exceeds $3,000, or where the decision will affect a class of cases or furnish a precedent for the future action of any executive Department in the adjustment of a class of cases, without regard to the amount involved in the particular case, or where any authority, right, privilege, or exemption is claimed or denied under the Constitution of the United States, to cause such claim, with all the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims, and the same shall be there proceeded in as if originally commenced by the voluntary action of the claimant. And the Secretary of the Treasury may, upon the certificate of any Auditor or Comptroller of the Treasury, direct any account, matter, or claim of the character, amount, or class described or limited in this section to be transmitted, with all the vouchers, papers, documents, and proofs pertaining thereto, to the said Court of Claims, for trial and adjudication; provided, however, that no case shall be referred by any head of a Department unless it belongs to one of the several classes of cases as to which, by reason of the subject-matter and character, the said Court of Claims might, under existing laws, take jurisdiction on such voluntary action of the claimant. And all the cases mentioned in this section which shall be transmitted by the head of any executive Department, or upon the certificate of any Auditor or Comptroller, shall be proceeded in as other cases pending in said court, and shall, in all respects, be subject to the same rules and regulations; and appeals from the final judgments or decrees of the said court therein to the Supreme Court of the United States shall be allowed in the manner now provided by law. The amount of the final judgments or decrees in said cases so transmitted to said court, where rendered in favor of the claimants, shall in all cases be paid out of any specific appropriation applicable to the same if any such there be; and where no such appropriation exists the same shall be paid in the same manner as other judgments of said court.

The eighth section provides that no person shall file or prosecute any claim or suit in the Court of Claims, or an appeal therefrom, for or in respect to which he or any assignee of his shall have commenced and has pending, or shall commence and have pending, any suit or process in any other court against any officer or person who, at the time the cause as above alleged in such suit or process arose, was in respect thereto acting or professing to act, mediate or immediately, under the authority of the United States, unless such suit or process, if now pending in such other court, shall be withdrawn or dismissed within thirty days next after the passage of this act.

The ninth and last section provides that all provisions of any act incompatible herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will demand the previous question, after allowing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] to offer an amendment which he desires to make.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend by adding the following section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the clerk of the said Court of Claims to transmit to Congress at the commencement of every December session, a full and complete statement of all the judgments rendered by said court for the previous year, stating the amounts thereof, and the parties in whose favor rendered, together with a synopsis of the nature of the claims upon which said judgments have been rendered.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask the gentleman if this bill has been printed as reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It has not been printed. It is a Senate bill and was printed in the Senate.

Mr. BROOKS. What amendments have been made by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BOUTWELL. None whatever. It is reported just as it came from the Senate. The gentleman from Illinois has just proposed an amendment requiring returns to be made by the clerk of the transactions of the court.

Mr. BROOKS. I have listened with all the attention I could give to the reading by the Clerk, but it is almost impossible to comprehend so long a bill as this. It seems to me it is driving it rather fast to put it through under the previous question.

Mr. BLAINE. It is printed, and has been on the files for a month.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I wish to say that there are one or two words that are ambiguous, and I move to amend by inserting that this bill shall have no retroactive effect.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I cannot yield for that purpose. I think it unnecessary to introduce any such amendment. The bill in the nature of the case is prospective.

On seconding the previous question there were—ayes 36, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. BOUTWELL and BROOKS.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 20.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, was adopted; and the bill, as amended, was read the third time.

Mr. BROOKS. I call the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 27, not voting 74; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Bromall, Buckland, Cake, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ely, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Gravelly, Harding, Highby, Hill, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jenckes, Judd, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koontz, Loan, Loughridge, Marvin, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Moore, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Peters, Plants, Polsey, Pomeroy, Price, Robertson, Sawyer, Scofield, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Twichell, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader G. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Walker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, and Stephen F. Wilson—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Beck, Brooks, Cary, Chanler, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jones, Kerr, Knott, McCullough, Mungen, Nicholson, Pruyn, Randall, Stone, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, and Van Trump—27.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Baker, Barnes, Barnum, Boyer, Bromwell, Burr, Butler, Dodge, Kellogg, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Golladay, Griswold, Halsey, Holman, Hooper, Hopkins, Asabel Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Johnson, Julian, Kelley, Kitchen, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Logan, Lynch, Moorhead, Marshall, Maynard, McCormick, Miller, Phelps, Pike, Morrissey, Niblack, Nunn, Orth, Perham, Moorehead, Pile, Poland, Raum, Robinson, Ross, Schenck, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Greaves, Stewart, Taffe, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Aiken, Burt Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Windom, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—74.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUITS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely on the bill (H.

R. No. 801) relating to suits in the courts of the United States, and for other purposes; and the same was laid on the table.

HABEAS CORPUS ACT.

Mr. THOMAS also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the bill (H. R. No. 1219) amendatory of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases, and for other purposes;" and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. THOMAS also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1261) amendatory of an act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases, and for other purposes, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute therefor.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection the substitute will be considered as an original bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Let the original bill be read.

Mr. THOMAS. I will explain. The two bills on which the committee have just reported adversely are provided for in this bill. In other words, we have consolidated three bills on kindred subjects into one, which the Clerk is about to read.

The substitute was read. It provides that no owner or owners of any ship or vessel or of any railway or of any line of transportation, no persons, firms, or corporations engaged in business as common carriers of goods, wares, or merchandise of any kind between the States, shall be subject or liable to answer for or to make good to any person or persons, firms, or corporations, any loss or damage which may happen to any goods or merchandise whatever which shall have been delivered to any such owner or owners, or to any ship or vessel, or to any railway, or to any line of transportation, or to any persons, firms, or corporations engaged in business as common carriers of goods, wares, or merchandise of any kind between the different States, whenever such loss or damage shall have been occasioned by the acts of those engaged in hostility to the Government of the United States during the late rebellion, or whenever such loss or damage shall have been occasioned by any of the forces of the United States, or by any of the officers in command of any such forces.

The second section provides that this act shall not be construed to affect any contract of insurance for war risks which may have been made with reference to any goods, wares, or merchandise which shall have been so destroyed.

The third section declares that the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," approved March 3, 1863, shall extend to any suit or prosecution, civil or criminal, which has been or shall be commenced in any State court against the owner or owners of any ship or vessel, or of any railway, or of any line of transportation, firm, or corporation engaged in business as common carriers of goods, wares, or merchandise, for any loss or damage which may have happened to any goods, wares, or merchandise whatever which shall have been delivered to any such owner or owners of any such ship or vessel, or of any railway or of any line of transportation, firm, or corporation engaged in business as common carriers, and where such loss or damage shall have been occasioned by the acts of those engaged in hostilities against the Government of the United States during the late rebellion, or where such loss or damage shall have been occasioned by any forces of the United States or by any officer in command of such forces, subject however to the provisions contained in the second section of this act.

The fourth section provides that where any suit is pending, or may hereafter be brought, in any State court for or against any partnership, firm, joint stock company, or corporation, and any member of such partnership, firm, joint stock company, or corporation is, when such suit is pending, a citizen of another State, such member, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, if he will make and file in such State court an affidavit stating that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that, from prejudice or local influence, he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, may, at any time before final hearing or trial of the suit, file a petition in such State court for the removal of the suit into the next circuit court of the United States to be held in the district where the suit is pending, and offer good and sufficient sureties for his entering in such court, on the first day of its session, copies of all process, pleadings, depositions, testimony, and other proceedings in said suit, and doing such other appropriate acts as are required to be done by the act entitled "An act for the removal of causes, in certain cases, from State courts," approved July 27, 1866; and that it shall thereupon be the duty of the State court to accept the sureties and proceed no further in the suit; and the copies aforesaid being entered in the United States court, the suit shall proceed in the same manner as if it had been brought there by original process; and all the provisions of the act referred to respecting bail, attachments, injunctions, or other restraining process, and in respect to any bonds of indemnity or other obligations given upon the issuing, or granting of any attachment or other restraining process, shall apply with like force and effect in all respects to similar matters, process, or things in the suits for the removal of which this act provides.

The fifth section provides that if a suit be commenced in any State court by a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought alone or in conjunction with any other complainants against a citizen of another State solely or in conjunction with any other person or persons, such citizen of the other State shall have the same right to remove the suit into the circuit court of the United States as if he were the only defendant, and as if all the plaintiffs were citizens of the State in which the suit is brought.

The sixth section provides that when the defendant desiring to remove a suit is a corporation created by or under the laws of a State other than that in which the suit is brought, any affidavit required for the purpose of such removal may be made by any officer, director, or agent of such corporation.

The seventh section provides that this act shall apply to suits already commenced, provided that no final hearing or final judgment or decree shall have been had thereon.

The substitute was agreed to.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. THOMAS. I will simply remark that this is a bill analogous to laws of a like character passed repeatedly by Congress. I do not anticipate that the House desires any discussion on the subject, and I move the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland before he calls the previous question a question in relation to some of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw the previous question for that purpose.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not know but that the provisions of the bill may be all correct; but it is a long bill, and it was impossible for me to catch the whole meaning. If there is anything in the bill which takes away the right of the citizen of a State to sue an express company in that particular locality and have the case tried in that locality, I am opposed to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, that is one of the prime objects of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let me state a case. Suppose, for instance, one of my constituents at Galena sustains a loss by an express company of $10,000 or of $100, and sues the express company in the local court, does this bill authorize the express company to take the case out of the local court at Galena and into the United States Court at Chicago to be tried there? If it does, I am against it.

Mr. THOMAS. This law may not precisely fit each individual case that may be conceived of in gentlemen's imaginations as occurring in their own vicinity. It is for general public purposes. It is founded not on any experience derived from instances in the courts of Illinois, but it has its origin in the condition of affairs in the southern States, and instead of indulging in mere declarations on the subject, I will read extracts from two letters that have been put in my possession from gentlemen well acquainted with the condition and sentiment of that country, showing the absolute necessity for legislation of this character on the part of Congress.

In one of these letters I find this declaration:

"I have been a practicing lawyer for forty-five years and upward, and think I can claim some experience in the profession. I have no hesitation in saying that the course of decisions in your cases—"

This includes judges as well as juries—

"forces me to the conclusion that it is next to impossible to defend you successfully, even when the law is on your side."

In another part of the same letter the writer says:

"I will not undertake to say that you can be protected by Federal legislation. But unless some change can be worked out from that or some other source I do believe that an institution so valuable to the public as yours is, will be compelled to discontinue its operations."

Mr. VAN TRUMP. How do those extracts explain the question of jurisdiction between the several courts, State and Federal?

Mr. THOMAS. I will come to that presently. I have other letters of like import, from one of which I will read:

"We feel bound to advise you of the strong and bitter feeling against the express companies in this State. It seems to be confined to no class of people, but to pervade all ranks in all sections, and even among the members of the bar its influence is very marked. Its violence has recently much increased, and in the excitement now prevailing in our country we meet on all sides with passionate denunciations and prejudices."

"The odium in which you are held is political. Your company is usually styled 'a Yankee concern.'"

"The contruction given to the law of carriers in this State by the courts is such that no corporation engaged in that business can live."

These letters all breathe one and the same spirit. I will respond to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VAN TRUMP] by saying that one of these bills was introduced by the distinguished lawyer from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WOODWARD,] another by a distinguished gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL,] and the third by myself at the instance of constituents of mine in the State of Maryland. Now, if it is the determination of this House that those non-residents shall not have a fair hearing anywhere, then let the law stand as it now is. But if, on the contrary, you think that the citizens of the United States ought to have a fair chance before the tribunals of the United States, then pass this bill.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. I would inquire of the gentleman whether or not, under the provisions of this bill, an action against a railroad company or express company or any other company named in this bill may not be removed from a State court to a Federal court; and whether any case can be prosecuted to final judgment in a State court while there is a single stockholder of the company who is a non-resident?

Mr. THOMAS. That is the very thing I am aiming at; I avow it without hesitation. We live in extraordinary times, and with an extraordinary condition of society in one section of our country; and if there be authority in the Government of the United States to rescue its citizens from the wrong done them in the State courts, then it is the duty and the prerogative of this Government to exercise that authority. It is for that purpose that bills are here reported and acted upon day after day.

And let me say to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. TRIMBLE,] that we do not propose to carry citizens of Kentucky or South Carolina before a foreign jurisdiction, but before the courts of the United States, before juries of our own countrymen summoned by impartial marshals, who are sworn to try impartially the cases that come before them. We put all the citizens of the country upon the same platform, and unless the House is disposed to leave my constituents and the constituents of every member on this floor without the means of obtaining a fair trial, they will pass this bill. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 42, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Benton, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomwell, Buckland, Butler, Calkins, Church, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Dawes, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Ella, Elliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Harding, Higby, Hill, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jencks, Julian, Keisey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Koontz, Loan, Loughridge, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Newcomb, O'Neill, Pile, Plants, Polsley, Pomeroy, Price, Robertson, Sawyer, Seofield, Shellabarger, Smith, Spaulding, Starkweather, Stokes, Taylor, Thomas, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Twichell, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, and John T. Wilson—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Baker, Beck, Blair, Brooks, Cary, Chanler, Cobb, Cullem, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Judd, Kerr, Knott, Marvin, McCullough, Mungen, Niblack, Nicholson, Paine, Peters, Pruyn, Randall, Shanks, Stewart, Stone, Taber, Taffe, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, and Elihu B. Washburne—42.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Astell, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Benjamin, Bingham, Boyer, Broomall, Burr, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Gravelly, Griswold, Halsey, Holman, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Kelley, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Logan, Lynch, Marshall, Maynard, McCormick, Miller, Morrissey, Myers, Nunn, Orth, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Poland, Raum, Robinson, Ross, Schenck, Selye, Sitgreaves, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Upson, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, Woodward—67.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. THOMAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAWES in the chair) stated that the morning hour had expired.

IMMIGRANT SHIPS.

The House then resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1100, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, and for other purposes," on which Mr. O'NEILL was entitled to the floor.

The first reading of the bill for information was dispensed with.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state to the House that this subject came before the Committee on Commerce on the joint resolution presented by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHANLER,] which was followed in a few days by resolutions from the Germans of the city of Cincinnati, presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EGLESTON] and his colleague, [Mr. CARY.] I wish to say further that the preparation of the bill did not fall exclusively on me. I was aided by my colleagues of the sub-committee of the Committee on Commerce, the two gentlemen from New York, [Mr. HUMPHREYS and Mr. ROBERTSON,] and also by Captain W. M. Mew, the efficient head of the division of steamship inspection of the Treasury Department, as well as others engaged in shipping interests. The result is the bill before the House, which we consider one eminently fitted for the purposes had in view.

I will state in a few words the object of this legislation. It seeks the enforcement of penalties never before enforced for the purpose of securing proper light, ventilation, and space upon ships carrying immigrants to this country, and to insure for them full protection in morals, health, and comfort. It provides regulations for determining the proper number of passengers each ship is to carry. It imposes the duty upon our consuls abroad of seeing that the immigrants do not come from districts infected with epidemic diseases, thus preventing the importation of pestilence, and upon the collectors of our ports at which they arrive of making thorough and proper examination of the condition of the emigrants and the vessels in which they are brought, as well as for obtaining all other pertinent information. It also attempts to prevent in future the overcrowding of passengers, thus stopping the risks of engendering disease upon the passage. In short, it looks to the entire protection of those who leave their homes abroad to come here and settle among us. Certainly no subject should attract greater attention in an American Congress, representing the territorial vastness of our country; it is dictated alike by the interests of humanity and a sound national policy.

This bill is in many respects similar to the acts of 1855 and 1860. The committee has sought to revise and improve those laws. Our general object is to see whether we cannot enforce the penalties provided by them against those who violate the law in this regard. Since we have taken up the subject a marked effect has been produced in other countries, and it is confidently believed that there will be some joint international action binding all countries from which immigrants come under one law common to all, comprising a system which will end the abuses now existing. The power of the courts has been of no avail to correct evils which have brought misery and death to hundreds of our fellow-creatures enduring the horrors of an Atlantic voyage in pest-ships.

Mr. WELKER. How does the gentleman propose to enforce the provisions of this bill? Does he do it by enforcing the penalties upon the guilty parties after coming to this country, or does he provide for an investigation of the matter before they sail from foreign countries for this country, so as to take care of the immigrants on the passage?

Mr. O'NEILL. Of course we can do nothing until the vessel reaches this country. Then we provide for enlarged jurisdiction, an improvement upon the procedure under the existing laws. We not only give jurisdiction to the United States courts, but extend it directly to the commissioners of those courts, so that there may be full and prompt remedy for the wrongs complained of. We take the power from the officers of the Treasury Department of stopping proceedings and remitting the fines and forfeitures. We also give power to the immigrants to follow the guilty parties wherever they may go within our limits. If they go to Boston, Philadelphia, or Baltimore, we give the poor immigrant who has suffered the right to follow them and sue them in the courts wherever they may be. We provide for every facility for bringing guilty parties to justice.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is there any provision existing for the enforcement of any penalty against the ship itself? Is there any jurisdiction conferred upon any courts for enforcing rights as against the ship itself?

Mr. O'NEILL. The penalty is an alien against the vessel. In section twenty-one you will find the following provision:

That the amount of the several penalties imposed by the provisions of this act upon the owner, agent, or master, shall be liens on the vessels in the employment of which such provisions shall be violated, and such vessels may be libeled therefor in any circuit or district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which they shall arrive.

The House will perceive that this bill, while not putting restrictions impossible to be complied with upon those engaged in carrying immigrants to our shores, is designed to lodge in the hands of the real sufferers abundant means of redress, actually throwing open our courts to them all over the land, thus showing to the world that the moment they embark they are measurably under the protection of our beneficent laws.

The bill may possibly be made more perfect before it passes the other branch of Congress; but so far as we can we have endeavored to perfect this so that immigrants may recover for the wrongs done them. I have a few amendments to offer from the committee, after which I shall yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHANLER.]

Sundry amendments were offered by the committee, which were severally agreed to; so that the bill, as amended, will read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall not be carried on any vessel on a voyage between the United States and foreign territory not contiguous thereto a greater number of passengers than in the following proportion, to wit: On the second deck and lower deck, neither being an orlop deck, one passenger for every one hundred and twenty cubic feet of clear space contained therein, and on the main deck and poop deck, one passenger for every one hundred cubic feet of clear space contained therein, the space in each case to be ascertained in the manner provided by law for the measurement of tonnage. And no passenger shall be carried on an orlop or temporary deck; nor on any deck where the height or distance between decks, or from the deck to the roof or covering of deck houses, measured on the inside, is less than six feet; nor upon any deck not having good and sufficient side lights and ventilation; nor on any sailing vessel except upon the main and poop decks and deck houses, subject to the aforesaid limitation as to space and height between decks. If a greater number of "statute adults" than the number allowable by the proportion aforesaid be carried during a voyage, or be brought within the United States by a voyage, or be taken on board a vessel within the United States for a voyage, the owner, agent, or master shall forfeit fifty dollars for each passenger so carried, brought, or taken on board in excess of the number allowable by the provisions of this section. And if the number of such statute adults in excess is more than twenty-five per cent. of such allowable number, the owner, agent, and master shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof the owner or agent shall be fined not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not exceeding six months, or either, at the discretion of the court, and the master shall be imprisoned not less than six months and not more than one year.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or master shall provide for each statute adult a single berth, not less than six feet in length nor less than two feet in width, or a like space in a double berth, which shall be of the same length and at least four feet in width, divided into two compartments by a suitable partition board not less than one foot high, which berths shall be built of good and substantial material and workmanship, shall be ranged lengthwise with the vessel, against the sides or against a substantial bulkhead or other secure support extending from deck to deck, shall be separated at each end by a like partition of at least the width of the berth from any other berth or structure adjacent; there shall be no more than two tiers of berths if the height or distance between decks is less than seven and one half feet, nor more than three tiers of berths in any case, and the interval or space between the lowest berth and the deck beneath shall not be less than nine inches, and each deck on which passengers may be carried under the provisions of this act shall be divided into at least three distinct compartments, separated by a well-constructed bulkhead, the foremost of which compartments shall be occupied by single male passengers of the age of twelve years and upward; the next abaft shall be occupied by families, that is to say, consisting of husbands and their wives, and children under twelve years of age, the berths or cabins in which compartments shall be effectually separated from each other in such manner as to provide suitable privacy and seclusion for each family, or where any such cabin affords more cubic space than is required for each member of one family the extra space shall be occupied by another or part of another family; and the next compartment abaft shall be for the exclusive use and occupancy of single females of the age of twelve years and upward; and each compartment shall be connected with the deck above by suitable companionways; and in case of a non-compliance with the provisions of this section the owner, agent, or master of the vessel shall forfeit and pay the sum of five dollars for each passenger on board.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or master shall provide for passengers of each sex a separate hospital in a compartment, properly divided off by a partition, in suitable parts of the vessel appropriated for passengers, to be used exclusively as such, properly built and secured, containing not less than eighteen clear superficial feet of the deck for every fifty passengers; and such hospital or hospitals shall be fitted with bed places and supplied with proper beds and bedding and utensils, and throughout the voyage kept so fitted and supplied. And for every failure to comply with any of the requirements of this section the master, owner, or owners of the vessel shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $100 and not more than $1,000.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or master shall provide the passengers in each compartment on each deck, suitable means of communication with the upper deck of the vessel by a substantial stairway furnished with a hand-rail, and covered at the upper deck by a booby-hatch or house over the passage-way leading to the compartments allotted to such passengers below deck, firmly secured to the deck or combings of the hatch, with two doors, the sills of which shall be at least one foot above the deck, so constructed that one door or window in such house may at all times be left open for ventilation. In case of a non-compliance with the requirements of this section the owner, agent, or master shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $500.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or master shall provide for each compartment containing not more than one hundred passengers, at least two ventilators, one of which shall be inserted in the after part of the compartment, and the other in the forward part of the compartment, one of them provided with an exhausting cap and the other with a receiving cap proportioned to the size of the compartment. In a compartment containing two hundred such passengers, the diameter of each shall be twelve inches in the clear, and in like proportion for a larger or smaller number of passengers; said ventilators shall rise at least four feet six inches above the upper deck of the vessel, and be of the most approved form and construction; nevertheless, if it shall appear from the report to be made and approved, as hereinafter provided, that the compartments are equally well ventilated by any other means, such other means of ventilation shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this section. In case of non-compliance with the provisions of this section the owner, agent, or master shall incur a penalty of $500.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or master shall provide for the passengers on the upper deck, housed and conveniently arranged, at least one caboose or cooking-range, the dimensions of which shall be equal to four feet long and one foot six inches wide for every two hundred passengers; and provision shall be made, in the manner aforesaid, in this ratio, for a greater or less number of passengers; but nothing herein contained shall take away the right to make such arrangements for cooking between decks as may be approved by the officers charged with the execution of this act. In case of non-compliance with the requirements of this section, the owner, agent, or master shall incur a penalty of $200.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or master shall, during the voyage, from the time of receiving the passengers on board, and including the time of detention at any place before the termination thereof, issue to each passenger, or, where the passengers are divided into messes, to the head man for the time being of each mess, on behalf and for the use of all the members thereof, an allowance of pure water and sweet and wholesome provisions of good quality, as follows: daily, three quarts of water to each passenger, exclusive of the quantity herein specified as necessary for cooking purposes; weekly, three and a half pounds of good Navy bread, one pound of wheat flour, one and a half pounds of oat-meal, one and a half pounds of rice, one and a half pounds of peas or beans, two pounds of potatoes, one and a quarter pounds of beef, one pound of pork, two ounces of tea, one pound of sugar, two ounces of salt, one half an ounce of mustard, one quarter of an ounce of ground black or white pepper, and one gill of vinegar. Substitutions for the foregoing articles of weekly allowance may be made by the master, as follows, namely: one pound of preserved meat for one pound of salt pork or beef; one pound of flour or Navy bread, or one half a pound of pork or beef, for one and a quarter pounds of oat-meal, or one pound of rice, or one pound of peas or beans; one pound of rice for one and a quarter pounds of oat-meal; and one and a quarter pounds of oat-meal for one pound of rice; three and a half ounces of cocoa, or of coffee roasted and ground, for two ounces of tea; three quarters of a pound of molasses for one half a pound of sugar; one gill of mixed pickles for one gill of vinegar. And there shall be issued to each passenger between the United States and any Asiatic port the following allowance of provisions daily, three quarts of water; and weekly, vegetables or fruit, fresh or dried, three pounds; rice, bread, flour, and taro, seven pounds; fresh or salt meat and fish, two and three quarter pounds; tea, one and a half ounces; China oil, three fourths of a gill; butter, for cooking, three fourths of an ounce; vermicelli, two ounces. In addition to such allowance of water to each passenger, the master shall issue, for cooking purposes, an additional supply of pure water after the rate of at least ten gallons for every one hundred passengers, for every day of the voyage; and shall cause the food and provisions of all the passengers to be well and properly cooked daily, and to be served out and distributed to them at regular and stated hours, by messes, or in such other manner as shall be deemed best and most conducive to the health and comfort of the passengers, of which hours and manner of distribution due and sufficient notice shall be given. If the passengers on board any vessel engaged in carrying passengers, either between the United States and Europe or between the United States and Asia, shall, during the time they are entitled to receive the foregoing allowance, be put on allowance in meat, bread, or water that is short in quantity or bad in quality, the master, owner, or owners of such vessel shall pay one dollar to every passenger for every day and for each particular of bread, water, and meat, in respect to which he shall be put on such allowance, and one half a dollar to every passenger for every day and for every other particular of such weekly allowance, in respect to which he shall have been put upon an allowance which is short in quantity or bad in quality, unless it shall be proved that at the time of leaving the last port from which the vessel set out upon her voyage she had on board, for the use of the passengers, well secured under deck, a quantity of provisions and water sufficient, according to the allowance herein prescribed, for the voyage. If the owner, agent, or master of any such vessel shall wilfully fail to furnish and distribute such provisions, cooked as aforesaid, he or they shall, upon conviction thereof before any circuit court or district court of the United States, be fined not more than $1,000, and shall be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year; but the enforcement of this penalty, or any of the penalties prescribed by this act, shall not affect the civil responsibility of the owner, agent, or master, to such passengers as may have suffered from any violation thereof.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the messes into which the passengers in any vessel may be divided shall not consist of more than ten statute adults in each mess, and members of the same family, whereof one at least is a male adult, shall be allowed to form a separate mess. The provisions, according to the section, shall be issued, such of them as require to be cooked, in a properly cooked state, daily, before two o'clock in the afternoon, to the head person, for the time being, of each mess, on behalf and for the use of the members thereof. The first of such issues shall be made before two o'clock in the afternoon of the day of embarkation or for such passengers as shall be taken on board. And the parents or guardians of sick or nursing infants shall be allowed free access to the cambouse or cooking range, at any time before twelve o'clock noon, or after two o'clock afternoon, and permitted there to prepare food for such sick or nursing infants. In case of non-compliance with any of the requirements of this section, the master, owner, or owners of the ship shall, for each offense, be liable to a penalty not exceeding $500.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the master of every vessel shall maintain good discipline and such habits of cleanliness among the passengers as will tend to the preservation and promotion to health; and to that end he shall, before sailing, cause suitable printed regulations in the English, French, and German languages, for this purpose, to be posted conspicuously in each compartment, and shall keep the same so posted during the voyage, and shall cause the compartments occupied by such passengers to be kept at all times in a clean, healthy state; and the owner or owners of every such vessel are required to construct the decks and all parts of said compartments so that they can be thoroughly cleansed; and they shall also provide two safe, convenient privies or water-closets in suitable parts of the vessel for the exclusive use of the passengers, and each class of compartments in the proportion of one privy or water-closet to every fifty passengers, and such privies or water-closets shall not be taken down until the expiration of forty-eight hours after the arrival of the vessel at the port of final discharge, unless all the passengers sooner quit the vessel; and the passengers shall be entitled to remain on board the vessel till the expiration of such time, and be provided for and maintained in the same manner as during the voyage. And the master of every such vessel shall permit and require the passengers to bring their beds and bedding to the upper deck at least three times a week, in fine weather, for the purpose of airing the same; and the passengers shall likewise be permitted to frequently exercise on the upper deck. And the owner, agent, or master of every vessel shall provide, for disinfecting purposes, a supply of carbolic or cresylic acid, and cause the same to be used in proper quantity and in a proper manner, on the deck occupied by the passengers, and also in the hold, fore-cabin, and bilges of the vessel as the physician, or the master, if there be no physician, may deem necessary. For every violation of the provisions of this section the owner, agent, or master shall incur a penalty not exceeding $500 nor less than $200.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or master of every vessel carrying on board passengers, including the officers, crew, and passengers, and of every vessel of the United States bound on a sea voyage of a thousand miles or more, and carrying one hundred persons, shall provide throughout the voyage a duly qualified physician, whose competency in the case of a domestic vessel shall be determined under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. But an alien employed in a foreign vessel, who, by the laws of the country to which the vessel belongs in which he is employed, is authorized to practice, shall be deemed duly qualified; and every such vessel employed as aforesaid shall be provided, for the use of the passengers, officers, and crew, with a supply of medicines, medical comforts, surgical instruments, and other things proper and necessary for diseases and accidents incident to sea voyages, and for the medical treatment of the passengers during the voyage, including carbolic or cresylic acid for disinfecting purposes, with written or printed directions for the use of the same, respectively, good in quality and sufficient in quantity for the probable exigencies of the voyage, and properly packed and placed under the charge of the physician, when there is one on board, to be used under his direction; and in the case of vessels of the United States bound from a port of the United States, the owner, agent, or master shall have such medicines, medical comforts, instruments, disinfecting agents, and other things, put up by an apothecary or apothecaries designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of the collector, or other chief officer of the customs of the port, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. For any violation of the provisions of this section the owner, agent, or master shall incur a penalty not exceeding $1,000, nor less than $500; and any apothecary who shall supply medicines, medical comforts, instruments, disinfecting agents, or other things, in an adulterated condition, or of inferior quality, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall incur a like penalty; and no such vessel shall be allowed to clear from any port of the United States unless provided as in this section required.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the owner of every vessel of the United States carrying passengers, and bound on a sea voyage of five hundred miles or upward, shall provide for the use of the passengers, officers, and crew, medicines, medical comforts, and other things, with the directions for the use of the same, and put up as required in the preceding section in the case of vessels of the United States. And for every violation of this section the owner, agent, or master shall incur a penalty not exceeding $500 nor less than $100.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That every master or other officer, seaman, or other person employed on board a vessel, who shall, during the voyage, under promise of marriage, or by threats, or by the exercise of his authority, or by solicitation, or the making of gifts or presents, seduce and have illicit connection with any female passenger, shall be deemed guilty of a crime, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, nor less than three months, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both, and the court sentencing the person so convicted may, in its discretion, by an order to be entered on its minutes, direct the amount of fine, when collected, to be paid for the use or benefit of the female seduced, or her child or children, if any. Provided, That the subsequent intermarriage of the parties seducing and seduced may be pleaded in bar of a conviction.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That no officer or seaman, nor other person employed on board of any such vessel, shall visit or frequent any part of the vessel assigned to passengers, except by the direction or permission of the master of the vessel; and every officer, seaman, or other person, who shall violate the provisions of this section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall forfeit to the said vessel his wages for the voyage of the said vessel during which the said offense has been committed, and shall be imprisoned for a term of not less than three months, nor more than twelve months. Any master who shall direct or permit any officer or seaman or other person employed on board of such vessel, to visit or frequent any part of said vessel assigned to passengers, except for the purpose of doing or performing some necessary act or duty as an officer, seaman, or person employed as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of $500 for each occasion on which he shall so direct or permit the provisions of this section to be violated by any such officer, seaman, or other person employed on board of such ship or vessel.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or master of every vessel shall provide one stewardess for every fifty female passengers on board, which stewardess shall be a married woman of good character, and the wife of an employé of the vessel; and one steward for every fifty male passengers on board. And it shall be the duty of the stewardess or steward, and of the physician, if there be one, and master or chief mate, to preserve proper order, decorum, and cleanliness in the female and male compartments respectively, and shall assist the physician in taking proper care of the sick, and generally superintend the police of the passenger decks; and such steward or stewardess shall not be required to assist in navigating or working the vessel, and such stewards and stewardesses shall be regularly appointed employés of such vessel, and shall not be selected from among the passengers on such vessel; and every such vessel so employed shall have on board a sea-faring man for every one hundred passengers, who shall be employed in cooking the food of the passengers; and said cook shall likewise be exempt from the duty of assisting in navigating or working the vessel. For a violation of any of the provisions of this section the master, owner, or owners shall incur a penalty of not less than $500, nor more than $500.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act of August 30, 1852, and the acts amendatory thereof, so far as they relate to boats and life-preservers on board passenger steamers, shall, from and after the time this act takes effect, apply with equal force and impose like penalties for their violation in the case of sailing passenger vessels belonging in whole or in part to a citizen or citizens of the United States.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or master of any vessel carrying passengers to or from the United States shall not carry as cargo horses, cattle, gunpowder, bituminous coal, naphtha, benzine, petroleum, nitro-glycerine, lucifer matches, nor any other explosive article or articles which ignite by friction, gunpowder or green hides, nor any other article, either as cargo, as aforesaid, or as ballast, which by reason of the nature, quantity, or mode of stowage thereof, will be likely to endanger the health, comfort, or safety of the passengers; and the owner, agent, or master, who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall, for each offense, on conviction thereof, incur a penalty of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, and, at the discretion of the court, be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year nor less than one month.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the master of any vessel arriving in the United States, or any of the Territories thereof, from any foreign place whatever, at the time that he delivers a manifest of the cargo, and if there be no cargo, then at the time of making report or entry of the vessel, pursuant to law, shall also deliver and report to the collector of the district in which such vessel shall arrive, a list or manifest of all the passengers taken on board of the said vessel at any foreign port or place; in which list or manifest it shall be the duty of the said master to designate particularly the age, sex, and occupation of the said passengers respectively, the compartment of the vessel occupied by each during the voyage, the country to which they severally belong, and that of which it is their intention to become inhabitants; and shall further set forth whether any and what number have died on the voyage; which list or manifest shall be sworn to by the said master, in the same manner as directed by law in relation to the manifest of the cargo; and the refusal or neglect of the master aforesaid to comply with the provisions of this section, or any part thereof, shall incur the same penalties, disabilities, and forfeitures as are provided for a refusal or neglect to report and deliver a manifest of the cargo aforesaid.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That no such vessel shall take on board at any foreign port or place passengers with the intent to bring such passengers to the United States, unless the list or manifest required by the provisions of section twenty of this act shall have been duly examined, verified, and certified to by the United States consular officer at such port or place. And such consular officer shall use his utmost diligence to ascertain and discover whether such passengers come from any port, place, or district where, at the time of his or her leaving such port, place, or district, any infectious, contagious, or other disease, shall have been raging in an epidemic form; and if he shall find that no such disease was so raging, as aforesaid, he shall duly certify to such list or manifest; otherwise he shall withhold the same, and shall not make such certificate. In such consular certificate he shall fully set forth, in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, that he has faithfully performed the duties required of him by the provisions of this section, and shall transmit, monthly, to the Secretary of the Treasury, a certified copy of each list or manifest made and certified as aforesaid. And if any vessel shall bring any passengers within the jurisdiction of the United States, in violation of the provisions of this section, the owner, agent, or master of such vessel, upon conviction thereof, shall incur a penalty of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, and shall be liable to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, nor less than three months, at the discretion of the court. And any consular officer of the United States who shall fail to perform the duties imposed upon him by the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, incur a penalty of not less than $1,000.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That in case there shall have occurred on board any vessel arriving at any port or place within the United States or its Territories, any death among the passengers, (other than cabin passengers,) the master, or owner of such vessel shall, within twenty-four hours after the time within which the report and list or manifest of passengers is required to be delivered to the collector of the customs, pay to the said collector the sum of ten dollars for each passenger above the age of five years who shall have died on the voyage by natural disease; and the said collector shall pay the money thus received, at such times and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury, by general rules, shall direct, to any board or commission appointed by and acting under the authority of the State within which the port where such vessel arrived is situated, for the care and protection of sick, indigent, or destitute emigrants, to be applied to the objects of their appointment; and if there be more than one board or commission who shall claim such payment, the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine which is entitled to receive the same, and his decision in the premises shall be final and without appeal. Provided, That the payment shall in no case be awarded or made to any board or commission or association formed for the protection or advancement of any particular class of immigrants, or immigrants of any particular nation or creed; and if the master, owner, or consignee of any vessel refuse or neglect to pay to the collector the sum and sums of money required within the time prescribed by this section, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars, in addition to such sum of ten dollars, for each passenger upon whose death the same has become payable, to be recovered by the United States in any circuit or district court of the United States where such vessel may arrive, or such master, owner, or consignee may reside; and when recovered, the said money shall be disposed of in the same manner as is directed with respect to the sum and sums required to be paid to the collector of customs.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That the collector of the customs at any port of the United States at which any vessel shall arrive, or from which any vessel shall be about to depart, shall examine such vessel and ascertain whether the requirements of this act have been complied with. He shall also examine each vessel on its arrival at his port and report to the Secretary of the Treasury the time of sailing, the length of the voyage, the ventilation, the number of passengers, their nationality, their supply of food, the number of deaths; the sex of those who died during the voyage, with his opinion of the cause of the mortality, if any, and if none, what precautionary measures, arrangements, or habits are supposed to have been instrumental in causing the exemption, and such other information as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and shall quarterly forward copies of the manifest or list of passengers herein provided to the Secretary of State of the United States, by whom statements of the same shall be laid before Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations, and cause to be made such special examinations into the practical operation of this act, and of the efficiency of the officers acting thereunder, as he may consider necessary; and the expenses incurred in making such examinations shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That the amount of the several penalties imposed by the provisions of this act upon the owner, agent, or master, shall be liens on the vessels in the employment of which such provisions shall be violated, and such vessels may be libeled therefor in any circuit court or district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which they shall arrive.

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That all the penalties imposed by the provisions of this act may be sued for and recovered in the name of the United States, in the district court or circuit court, or before a commissioner of either of said courts within the jurisdiction of which the offense shall have been committed, or in which the offender may come. One half of such penalties when recovered, unless otherwise provided, shall be to the use of the informer, and one half to the use of the United States. Such penalties may also be recovered in an action of debt, by any person who will sue therefor in any court of the United States. But nothing herein shall prevent the recovery of such penalties in any other form of legal proceedings known to the law and its practice in the respective States.

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That every master shall keep posted during the entire voyage in a conspicuous place in each compartment, and in the fore-castle, at least one copy of a synopsis of the provisions of this act, printed in English, French, and German, to be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury, and supplied in sufficient quantities to the consular officers, and collectors of customs of the United States, who shall, on the application of any master for the certificate required by the eighteenth section of this act, furnish such master with four sets of the synopsis aforesaid. For every violation of this section such master, or the owner or owners of such vessel, shall, upon conviction thereof, incur a penalty of $500, and if it shall appear by the examination to be made by the collector of the customs, as provided in the twentieth section of this act, that the requirements of this section have not been complied with, it is hereby made the duty of such collector to institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of the penalty herein specified: Provided, That a certificate from such consular or consular officer of the United States to the effect that he was not, at the time of the application aforesaid, in possession of such synopsis of the provisions of this act, shall exempt such master or owner or owners of such vessel from liability to the penalty imposed by this section.

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect within thirty days from the time of its approval; and it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of State to give notice in the ports of Europe, and elsewhere, of this act, in such manner as he shall deem proper.

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That whenever any damage is sustained by any passenger in his or her person, or by injury to his or her baggage after he or she shall have embarked in a vessel, either by dereliction of duty or non-observance of the provisions of this act on the part of the owner, agent, master, or other employe on board the vessel, the owner, agent, or master shall be liable to the full amount of damage to every persons so injured or his or her legal representatives, and in any action on the part of a passenger for damages it shall not be a defense that the party injured consented to the act or acts complained of or took passage with the knowledge of them.

SEC. 26. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed. But such repeal shall not effect any security given before this act takes effect, anything done before this act takes effect, any liability accruing before this act takes effect, any fine, penalty, forfeiture, or other punishment incurred, or to be incurred, in respect to any offense committed before this act takes effect, or any legal proceeding or other remedy for enforcing or recovering any such liability, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment as aforesaid; and such repeal shall revive no act heretofore repealed.

Miscellaneous Provisions.

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That for the purposes of this act the following words and expressions, whenever they occur, shall respectively have the following signification, if not inconsistent with the context or subject-matter; that is to say:

"Passengers" shall include all passengers except cabin passengers and infants less than one year old; and no person shall be deemed cabin passenger unless the space allotted to his or her exclusive use shall be in the proportion of at least thirty-six clear superficial feet of deck to each statute adult, nor unless they shall be inducted throughout the voyage at the same table with the master or first officer of the ship.

"Statute adult" shall signify and include one passenger over twelve years of age, or two passengers under twelve years of age.

"Single male" shall signify a male passenger over twelve years of age, unmarried or unaccompanied by his wife.

"Single female" shall signify and include a female passenger over twelve years of age, unmarried or unaccompanied by her husband.

"Owner" shall signify and include the owner or charterer of a "vessel" herein described.

"Master" shall signify the person who shall be borne on the ship's articles as master, or who, other than a pilot, shall for the time being be in charge or command of a vessel.

"Agent" shall signify and include a consignee and any person, other than the master, authorized to act for the owner in matters relating to the passage contract.

"Vessel" shall signify every description of seagoing vessel, domestic or foreign, propelled otherwise than by oars, and employed in the carriage of passengers upon any voyage to which the provisions of this act extend.

"Main deck" shall signify the deck in a vessel immediately beneath the upper or spar deck; the "second deck" shall signify the deck immediately beneath the "main deck;" and the third deck, not being an orlop deck, shall signify the deck immediately beneath the second deck.

"Compartment" shall signify a space on a vessel on any proper deck, kept free of cargo or stores, for the exclusive use and occupation of passengers, extending fore and aft to a substantial bulkhead, built athwartships and firmly attached to the side of the vessel, and having suitable means of ready communication with the upper deck.

"Voyage" shall signify and include a voyage of any such vessel, with passengers on board, from a foreign territory to the United States, or from the United States to a foreign territory.

Unless otherwise expressed or required by the context, any word or expression hereinbefore defined, or other matter not expressed, and requisite in any particular enactment herein to carry out the purposes of this act, shall be supplied on construction.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed severally without amendment bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 44) relative to the sale of the marine hospital at Evansville, Indiana;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 246) directing the Secretary of State to present to George Wright, master of the British brig, J. and G. Wright, a gold chronometer, in appreciation of his personal services in saving the lives of three American seamen, wrecked at sea on board of the American schooner Lizzie F. Choate, of Massachusetts;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) for the relief of Robert L. Lindsay;

A bill (H. R. No. 1120) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the names of certain vessels; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1218) appropriating money to sustain the Indian commission and carry out treaties made thereby.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed severally with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 538) to extend the boundaries of the collection district of Philadelphia so as to include the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia;

A bill (H. R. No. 861) relating to the Supreme Court; and

A bill (H. R. No. 198) to reestablish the boundaries of the collection districts of Michigan and Michilimackinac, and to change the names of the collection districts of Michilimackinac and Port Huron.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the following Senate bills and joint resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 361) for the relief of D. H. Macdonald, late acting United States consul at Capetown;

An act (S. No. 472) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to allow the United States to prosecute appeals and writs of error without giving security;"

An act (S. No. 533) to establish Cambridge, in the State of Maryland, a port of delivery;

An act (S. No. 153) to establish a collection district in the State of Oregon;

An act (S. No. 303) for the relief of P. R. Parrott;

An act (S. No. 442) to amend section one of an act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1863;

An act (S. No. 542) for relief of Thomas W. Ward, late collector of customs, district of Corpus Christi, Texas;

Joint resolution (S. No. 113) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the British-built brig Highland Mary;

Joint resolution (S. No. 36) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Aug. Guardian;

Joint resolution (S. No. 147) for the relief of Jonathan S. Turner;

An act (S. No. 505) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792;

An act (S. No. 209) to incorporate the Evening Star newspaper; and

An act (S. No. 204) to provide for the appointment of a supervising surgeon of the marine hospitals of the United States.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House that all the members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills are absent, and the Chair will, therefore, if there be no objection, appoint two additional members of the committee.

There was no objection; and
The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WILSON, of Ohio, and Mr. GOLLADAY additional members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio, after Monday next, on account of indisposition.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. MULLINS to print some remarks on the bill relieving R. R. Butler from disabilities. [See Appendix.]

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. EGGLESTON. When the bill now before the House is disposed of, the river and harbor bill will come up. It has been suggested by my colleagues on the Committee on Commerce, and by those who are opposed to some portions of the bill, that we should fix on Tuesday next, or some day early next week, for final action on that bill, as some of those interested in its discussion wish to leave the city to-night. I therefore suggest to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. ELIOT,] who has the bill in charge, that he make a motion to postpone, if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. ELIOT. From the best information I can obtain I think the probability is that we shall have the tax bill upon us before it would be possible to mature the river and harbor bill, and by the rule of the House it will then become necessary for us to enter on the consideration of that bill. I do not object to the suggestion made by my colleague on the committee to postpone the river and harbor bill until Tuesday next, with the understanding that it shall be considered immediately after the tax bill is disposed of.

Mr. SPALDING. That will not do. There are other bills waiting to come in. I object.

Subsequently Mr. SPALDING withdrew his objection, and the bill (H. R. No. 1046) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works, and for other purposes, was postponed until Tuesday next after the morning hour.

IMMIGRANT SHIPS.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1100) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, and for other purposes."

Mr. O'NEILL. I offer the following amendment, not from the Committee on Commerce, but on my own motion:

At the end of section twenty-six insert the following:

Provided, That fifty per cent. of the gross amount of the commutation or head-money collected from any vessel bringing immigrants to any port of the United States be placed to the credit of the respective States in which the immigrants settle by a pro rata distribution among said States, and the said fifty per cent. to be made under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, to whom monthly statements of the amounts received in each port shall be made by the individual or association collecting the same.

I will explain the amendment, and I think it will strike the minds of some members, at least, as very appropriate. The object of it is this: in all the ports where immigrants arrive there is collected what is called "head-money." It is collected from the ship-owners technically, but really it is from the immigrants. For instance, in New York the head money amounts to two dollars on each passenger. Large sums of money are thus collected either by commissioners of immigration, boards of health, or by individuals detailed for the purpose by municipal authorities, and the sum realized generally, I am informed, in its full extent is not appropriated to the purpose for which it is paid. Some two or three hundred thousand immigrants arrive in New York yearly, a few thousand in Philadelphia, and perhaps more in Baltimore than in the latter city. Baltimore is now prepared to do a larger business than ever of this kind by the steamship lines to which reference was made the other day by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. PHELPS.] The parties who collect this money pay, I have no doubt, a considerable portion of it for the support and maintenance of some of the poorer immigrants who arrive in the ports where it is collected, but the bulk of the money should go to the States where the immigrants settle, and where, if want and poverty overtake them, they can be benefited by the fund to which they have indirectly contributed, for, as I understand it, though the money ostensibly comes from the ship, it actually is paid by its addition to the charge for passage.

It is well known that some of these immigrants do not come here to work, but they go into our pauper asylums and establishments and remain about our towns and cities. Still I am glad to say that a great many of them do not come within that category. The most of them go out to the West; they remain in New York but a few days. I understand they are usually shipped off within three or four days, often within twenty-four hours. Yet this commutation or head-money remains in the hands of the commissioners or board of emigration, and does not go exclusively to the support of those from whom it is derived.

Mr. BENJAMIN. By what authority is this money collected? By virtue of a law of Congress or by virtue of a State law?

Mr. O'NEILL. I expected that question to be asked, and I am ready to answer it. I presented this amendment not by authority of the committee, as I have said, but upon my own responsibility, with a view to ascertain whether we can enact such a law. This head-money is imposed by State legislation, not by acts of Congress. And yet I doubt very much whether, under the Constitution of the United States, a State has any right to do this.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to know the views of the gentleman upon the right and authority of the Congress of the United States to control a fund raised in pursuance of the legislative action of the various States. Perhaps we have that authority, but I do not see it clearly.

Mr. O'NEILL. The amendment I have offered is intended to raise that question, to see by what right a State imposes this tax upon immigrants arriving in this country. It is not intended so much to get hold of that money as to settle that question. My impression is that there is no right in the States to do it. I am of opinion there is a right in the Congress of the United States to do it, and in it alone is the power vested.

Mr. UPSON. What disposition is it proposed to make of this money?

Mr. O'NEILL. My amendment proposes to take fifty per cent. of it to be distributed among the respective States where these immigrants settle, according to the average number of those who settle in the respective States. Why should the State of New York take two dollars from the pocket of every immigrant who lands there, and authorize these associations to accumulate this fund? I have no doubt they do a great deal of good, in the way of charitable assistance, yet I do not see why they should be allowed to exact this tax from all immigrants who arrive at New York. They do not come merely to the port of New York or the port of Philadelphia, or the port of Baltimore; but their destination is the United States, and they may not settle until they reach the Rocky mountains or the Pacific slope.

Mr. UPSON. How is this money, so distributed to the various States, to be applied for the advantage of these immigrants?

Mr. O'NEILL. By the authorities of the State through those who may be delegated to assist the needy immigrant.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Will my colleague [Mr. O'NEILL] allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. O'NEILL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. I understand my colleague to say that he doubts, perhaps he denies, the power of the State to impose this tax.

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Is not the effect of his amendment to affirm that power?

Mr. O'NEILL. It does to some extent in effect affirm that power. But it will give an opportunity of appeal to the courts, when the question can be determined whether any such right exists in a State.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. O'NEILL. Certainly.

Mr. JUDD. The amendment presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] presents questions of very great importance. It not only involves the legal proposition of the right to levy this tax upon emigrants, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] but the further question, namely, in what manner and by whom the fund thus collected shall be disbursed to accomplish the most good for the class supposed to be benefited by it.

I think I can safely say that a majority of the immigrants to this country have a fixed destination before they leave their homes; that a majority of those immigrants do not intend to remain in the ports of their arrival. This tax is levied by these State associations ostensibly for the purpose of aiding and protecting the poor and the needy on their arrival and during their earlier residence here. If I understand the provisions of the immigrant laws in force in the port of New York, societies organized under the laws of that State collect from each ship a tax of two dollars for each immigrant under the claim of caring for the needy; the charities distributed from that fund do not extend beyond the limits of that State, and the immigrant destined for the Northwest gets no benefit from the fund to which he has contributed after he gets beyond the boundary lines of the State of New York, no matter how destitute and suffering may be his condition.

This levy that is made upon each immigrant, although nominally paid by the owner of the ship, is in reality paid by the passenger, the ship-owners include in the fare of such immigrant. Hence, in the case of immigrants destined for Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, and the Northwest generally, when they get where they are taken ill or their means are exhausted, become a burden upon the citizens at the point where this occurs, and charity takes the place of reliance upon a fund that those parties have helped to create, and this burden, although cheerfully borne by the philanthropic, ought not to be imposed upon them. There is no reason why the mere passer through New York should contribute to a fund that he can never have the benefit of as soon as he passes the State line. The surpluses now accumulated ought in some form to reach the persons who were intended to be benefited.

An instance of that kind occurred in the city of Chicago within the last two years. Nearly a thousand immigrants destined for Minnesota, every one of whom had paid this tax, which had gone into the hands of the commissioners of emigration in New York, were entirely destitute when they arrived at Chicago, without money to proceed upon their journey to support themselves while tarrying there. They were thrown upon our streets; they taxed the capacity of every foreign aid society in our city to support them, until by voluntary contributions, and by the generous charities of the community—and I will add of the railroad companies in the way of free transportation—they were sent to their ultimate destination. That, Mr. Speaker, cost the citizens of Chicago in voluntary contributions $5,000 in money. They ought to have had the privilege of calling upon the societies in the cities where this money was paid to make a contribution to them of a portion of it. Such cases are strictly within the spirit, object, and intent of this kind of legislation. And the laws should be so framed as to provide for these contingencies; and unless some changes are made in the mode of distributing this fund so as to meet the necessities of those for whose benefit it is created controversies will arise that will shake these institutions. The inquiry will very properly be made whether this tax accomplishes the purpose for which it was created. It may create magnificent public buildings that are an honor to the city of New York, but the emigrant may starve after he passes the boundaries of that State. Some mode of caring for those that need aid while they are on their journey should be devised, and then practically the good would be accomplished that the theory of this thing presupposes.

Mr. O'NEILL. I propose now to yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHANLER,] but before doing so I wish to add a word or two to what I have already said. I much prefer the amendment as it stands. If, however, the House does not see fit to pass it, I will only say that at some future time I will prepare and introduce a bill to cover the point.

Mr. JUDD. I did not rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of attacking these organizations in the large sea-ports in any shape or form, but only to call the attention of this House, and the gentlemen representing those cities, to the fact that some arrangement should be made by legislation so the proper equities might be dealt out.

Mr. O'NEILL. I believe the board of commissioners of emigration in New York does a great deal of good. It has been the means of erecting some grand charities in that city. I am here ready to do that organization full justice. All I want is to have the question tested. If the tax is to be collected I do not see why we should not legislate for its distribution at points distant from its collection.

Mr. CHANLER. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will adhere to the intention that he has just stated, and that is to prepare and bring in a separate and distinct proposition touching this matter. It is a question outside of the purposes of this bill. I hope he will draw up and report such a bill to the House at an early day.

Mr. O'NEILL. I withdraw my amendment, and hope the House will act at once upon this bill for the protection of immigrants and pass it. It will result, I think, as I said at the beginning, in securing on this most important subject the joint action of the different nations who are interested in it.

I also hope, Mr. Speaker, when we shall have perfected our immigration laws we may do something for the enactment of a general naturalization law upon such a basis as will protect us and our institutions, and will so enforce the law as to prevent the illegal exercise of the elective franchise by those who have scarcely touched our shores. I have heard that ship-loads of immigrants, within twenty-four hours of their arrival at the port of New York, have been led to the polls by designing men, and many of them, I have no doubt, totally ignorant that they were violating the law, have set at naught the votes of the American-born and law-abiding adopted citizens who have exercised their dearest right in good faith to their country.

Mr. CHANLER. I propose the following amendment to the twelfth section, which I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I yield to the gentleman's amendment. He has been helping us to perfect the bill.

Mr. CHANLER. I move to add to the twelfth section the following:

Any unmarried male passenger, master, or other officer, seaman, or other person over fourteen years of age, on board any vessel carrying passengers to or from any part of the United States, who shall openly live and cohabit with any unmarried woman shall thereafter be deemed the lawful husband of such woman, and they shall be husband and wife, and subject to all the privileges and liabilities of that relation.

Mr. CHANLER. The object of this is to carry out the object of the bill, and to prevent the seduction of female emigrant passengers on their way across the ocean. It is an amendment which is needed. One of the great sources of trouble in emigration is the seduction of women by the officers and men and by passengers pretending to be married to those women, and abandoning them and their children upon reaching the shore. The object of this bill is to embody the spirit of the law of the State of New York regulating marriage. It has been submitted to one of the gentlemen from New York on the Committee of Commerce, [Mr. HUMPHREY,] who approves it as being in accordance with the law of New York. I urge it as a preventive measure, and doing no injury to any one.

Mr. O'NEILL. I suggest to the House that they will adopt the gentleman's amendment. It certainly can do no harm, and it will protect the innocent in many cases.

Mr. COVODE. I would like to have the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANLER] answer this question: if there should be improprieties committed by one man on half a dozen women how are they going to settle that difficulty. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER. Send him to Utah. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANLER. My friend suggests sending him to Utah. [Laughter.] But the gentleman will understand that the compartments of these immigrant ships are separated. They have three kinds of compartments—one for unmarried males, one for unmarried females, and one for married males and females. Therefore it will be very easy for a person claiming to be married to a woman to get access to the cabin of married people, thereby doing great injury to the women in that compartment and great injury to the ship. The immorality, therefore, will be sanctioned by your bill unless you protect these women by some such provision. I ask for a vote.

The question being put, there were—ayes fourteen.

Mr. CHANLER. I demand tellers. Tellers were refused.

Mr. CHANLER. I move to amend by adding at the end of section eighteen the following:

And such consular officer shall on proper and satisfactory proof, be suspended from his office by the President, and on conviction be removed from office, and be thereafter disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under this Government.

I will merely state that the eighteenth section relates to infected ships sailing from European ports to this country, and the object of my amendment is to enforce more strictly the duty of consuls and consular agents of inquiring into the condition of those towns and townships from which the immigrant comes. If he shall omit to protect the ship by proper means he is to be liable to a severe penalty. It is a necessary protection from those infectious diseases which we have seen so frequently prevailing on ship-board in the last few years. The very case which gave rise to this bill, called the pest ships, was one where the ship started without proper precaution and with a number of infected passengers. Had the consular agent taken such proper precautions as are called for in this bill, the great loss of life in that case would have been prevented. I propose simply a more stringent means of securing the discharge of the duties of our consular agents.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the gentleman strike out the last part of the proposed amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. Very well.

The amendment as modified was as follows:

And such consular officer shall, on proper and satisfactory proof, be suspended from his office by the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOMALL. I suggest to my colleague to move to strike out the last clause of the bill, as follows:

Unless otherwise expressed or required by the context, any word or expression hereinbefore defined, or other matter not expressed, and requisite in any particular enactment herein to carry out the purposes of this act, shall be supplied on construction.

Mr. O'NEILL. I have no objection to striking it out. If the gentleman from New York will conclude his remarks now I will call the previous question.

Mr. CHANLER. I will do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] what did he mean by the remark made a few moments ago that he intended at a future time to move some amendment to the present law to prevent immigrants arriving here from voting.

Mr. O'NEILL. I did not yield to the gentleman; but I will reply—

Mr. ROBINSON. If the gentleman does not wish to yield I will take my seat.

Mr. O'NEILL. If the gentleman had listened to me he would have heard what I said. I made no such proposition as he referred to.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman is entirely wrong about that matter.

Mr. CHANLER next addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I now call the previous question.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. O'NEILL. I withdraw the call for the previous question for that purpose.

Mr. BROOKS. The bill is a pretty long one, and I have not had time to read it through. My question is how he proposes in this bill to regulate immigration in foreign vessels—in foreign steamers, for instance? It was stated here yesterday in debate, and is a fact well known that most of the steamers which bring immigrants to this country are foreign steamers, under a foreign flag. How can this bill regulate and control those vessels?

Mr. O'NEILL. I will endeavor to answer the gentleman. The existing laws relating to the carrying of immigrant passengers are very imperfect, and decisions have been made against their application to steamships. This bill seeks to apply the same penalties against the owners or agents or consignees of steamships carrying passengers as former laws applied to sailing vessels. Now, sir, we do not say that by this law we can regulate foreign vessels, but we do say from what we learn from the representative of the Prussian Government, and the representative of the British Government, and the representatives of several steamship lines running from other countries, that many Governments will take action on this subject, and we are now framing what we consider may be the basis of a proper immigrant bill to suit all the countries of the world.

Mr. BROOKS. The apprehension I have is that unless this matter is regulated by treaty, while these severe penalties are imposed on our own vessels and none on foreign vessels, the whole immigrant trade of the country will be carried on in foreign bottoms.

Mr. O'NEILL. The bill, of course, seeks to impose penalties on all vessels which bring immigrants. We can certainly enforce our law when the vessels reach our shores. That right has never been questioned; there is no doubt about that. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BANKS: A memorial of insurance companies, ship-owners, and merchants of New York, asking that measures may be taken to establish the principle, as a part of international law, that after the cessation of hostilities for one year between belligerent nations, the state of war shall be deemed at an end, notwithstanding the absence of a formal treaty or declaration of peace, signed by Francis Skiddy, Grinnell, Minturn & Co., Russell Sturgis, C. H. Marshall & Co., Howland & Aspinwall, Nesmith & Sons, Charles Luling & Co., Howland Frothingham, Snow & Burgess, C. P. Fisher & Co., and others.

Also, a memorial of insurance companies, ship-owners, and merchants of New York, asking that measures may be taken to establish the principle as a part of international law, that after the cessation of hostilities for one year between belligerent nations, the state of war shall be deemed at an end, notwithstanding the absence of a formal treaty or declaration of peace, signed by J. D. Jones, Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company; John A. Parker, Great Western Insurance Company; John H. Lyell, New York Mutual Insurance Company; J. R. Myers, Pacific Mutual Insurance Company, and others.

By Mr. BECK: The petition of Dr. William S. Chipley, of Lexington, Kentucky, praying that his son, William Dudley Chipley, of Columbus, Georgia, and others, now imprisoned at Atlanta, be delivered by the military authorities, by order of Congress, to the civil tribunals for trial, according to the provisions of the Constitution and laws. Said petition is accompanied by a number of affidavits, which are made part of it.

By Mr. BUTLER: The petition of Gilbert Pierce and others, for leave to build a bridge over a portion of the navigable waters of the harbor of Boston.

By Mr. GROVER: The petition of John B. Bland, of the city of Louisville, Kentucky, for compensation for buildings destroyed by fire in said city by Federal soldiers.

By Mr. KERR: A memorial of Simeon K. Wolfe, W. L. Carter, William N. Tracewell, H. S. Wolfe, Alanson Stephens, S. M. Stockslager, Henry Zenor, M. M. Hon, Edward Harbison, Morgan B. Clark, John L. Wolford, and others, for the relief of Jacob Biggs, whose eyes were destroyed in battle in the late war.

By Mr. STOKES: The petition for the relief of James M. Marshal, of La Fayette, Tennessee.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 19, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. A. D. GILLETTE, D. D.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of the construction of a ship-canal connecting Lakes Erie and Ontario; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of the United States Express Company, praying that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to issue to that company United States bonds and compound-interest notes in lieu of bonds and notes destroyed by fire on the 30th of January, 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. POMEROY presented the petition of William Pollard, late a second assistant engineer United States Navy, praying to be restored to the rank in the Navy from which he has been dismissed; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CATTELL. I present a memorial numerously signed by underwriters and merchants of Philadelphia, urging the importance of the coast survey for the preservation and development of the commercial wealth of the country, and earnestly requesting that no means be adopted to lessen the full efficiency of that service. I understand the Committee on Appropriations have reported on that subject, and I therefore move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask leave to present the memorial of a number of insurance companies, praying that Congress will, by resolution or such other action as may be proper in the premises, declare and establish as a principle governing the relations of the United States with other nations at peace with this country, but which as between themselves may have been at war, that whenever hostilities between such belligerents shall have ceased for so long a period of time as to raise the presumption that they will not be renewed (and which period the memorialists would suggest should not, unless in exceptional cases, exceed one year) the state of war shall be deemed to be at an end, so far as the Government and citizens of the United States are concerned, notwithstanding the absence of any formal treaty or declaration of peace. The memorial sets out the evils growing out of the uncertain state of thing existing in reference to the other Powers, the South American republics for example, which having had difficulties among themselves have not come to a condition of peace by formal treaty; and the memorialists ask some action of Congress which will enable our citizens to deal with those belligerents and yet not impinge upon any obligations which they ought to observe. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a similar memorial, signed by a number of leading merchants of the city of New York, and I move that it take the same reference.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. ANN CORCORAN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I submit a report from a committee of conference.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the bill (S. No. 184) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Corcoran, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same.

P. G. VAN WINKLE,

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. VAN AERNAM,

G. F. MILLER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I should like to have the Senator from West Virginia state what the subject is.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. It is a pension bill, and the amendment relates simply to the date at which the pension shall commence.

The report was concurred in.

MICHAEL HENNESSY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. There are two other pension bills which have been returned from the House of Representatives with amendments, and which are now on the table, which I should like to have acted upon. The first is Senate bill No. 280.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 280) granting a pension to Michael Hennessy, of Platte county, Missouri. The amendment was to strike out all after the word "pensions," in line five, and to insert in lieu thereof "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, commencing January 1, 1865."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House. The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE BENNETT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now move to take from the table Senate bill No. 425, which has been returned from the House with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 425) granting a pension to George Bennett. The amendment was to strike out all after the word "pension," in line eight, and to insert in lieu thereof "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, commencing April 7, 1863."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I make the same motion in that case.

The amendment was concurred in.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Sister M. Zavier and Sister De Sales, of Charleston, South Carolina, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Dennis Sullivan, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 538) in addition to an act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 478) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of the Sisseton, Warpeton, Medawakonton, and Warpekuta bands of Sioux or Dakota Indians, and for the disposition of their lands in Minnesota and Dakota," approved March 3, 1863, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William McDonagh, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of True Putney, of Washington, District of Columbia, in relation to paving carriage-ways in the city of Washington, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Rowland Cromelien, praying the right of way on any avenue or main line of railroad in the city of Washington for the privilege of testing his patent for an improvement in railroads; a petition of citizens of Washington city, District of Columbia, praying for the speedy passage of a bill rechartering that city; a petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, praying equal rights with other citizens of the United States; a resolution of the Senate directing the Committee on the District of Columbia to inquire whether any legislation is necessary to secure safety and convenience of passengers on street cars of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, in Washington, District of Columbia; resolutions of the common council of the city of Washington, District of Columbia, in favor of granting an extension of the city charter with such amendments as may be deemed advisable, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

DONATION OF IRON RAILING.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 294) donating to the Washington City Orphan Asylum the iron railing taken from the old Hall of the House of Representatives, have had the same under consideration, and directed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. This railing is of no value to us, and it may be of some value to this orphan asylum; and if there be no objection, I move that the resolution be taken up and passed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to donate to the Washington City Orphan Asylum the iron railing taken from the old Hall of the House of Representatives, now in the Capitol Grounds, on condition that it be taken away in ten days after the passage of this joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EVANSVILLE MARINE HOSPITAL.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (H. R. No. 44) authorizing the sale of the marine hospital at Evansville, Indiana, was passed yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the resolution has gone to the House of Representatives, and it will be necessary to make a motion to request the return of the bill from the House.

Mr. MORTON. Should that be made preliminary to this motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir. The Chair will put the question on a motion requesting the return of the joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ISRAEL T. CANBY'S SURETIES.

Mr. WILLEY. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 428) for the relief of the sureties of Israel T. Canby, late receiver of public moneys at Crawfordsville, Indiana, have had it under consideration, and directed me to report it back to the Senate without amendment and recommend its passage, accompanied with a report which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There are but three of these sureties alive who are responsible. One of them is a very old gentleman, and another is very frail from sickness, and I should like very much to have the bill passed at this session. As it is a very clear case and a very short bill, I should like to have it considered now if possible. I ask that the bill be read, and then, if there be any objection to it, I will not insist upon it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to release the sureties of Israel T. Canby, late receiver of public moneys at the land office at Crawfordsville, Indiana, from all liability arising from any defalcation, omission, or misconduct of his as such receiver; and it directs the proper officers of the Treasury Department to dismiss any and all suits and actions that may have been instituted against the sureties, and to enter the proper discharges on the books of the Department.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will say to the Senate that in 1829 Mr. Canby was appointed receiver at the land office at Crawfordsville, Indiana. In 1831, nearly forty years ago, there was a default. His bond was then a good one. A number of responsible gentlemen were upon it. In settling that default the Government, through the district attorney, took a large quantity of lands, and sold and otherwise disposed of those lands from time to time, and some bonds and some money. The Government considered the securities so good that they returned to Mr. Canby a large amount of lands in the State of Illinois. How those lands were disposed of can never be very well ascertained. The returns in the Treasury are very unsatisfactory. But it has gone on now about forty years, and there are only three sureties left who are responsible—Mr. Stevens, Mr. Palmer, who is a very old man, and Mr. Michael G. Bright, who is very frail and confined to his bed, and it will be a very great hardship to embarrass them with litigation about it. The security was ample at the time it was given into the charge of the district attorney; but it passed from one district attorney to another, so that it is impossible to say just how it does stand in the Department. The committee has made this report entirely from statements derived from the Department, and I ask the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much does the Government hold against these men?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot say. One estimate would be about three thousand dollars, while the interest, perhaps, would bring it up to ten or eleven thousand dollars. These sureties claim that the amount of assets placed in the hands of the district attorney, under a compromise with Mr. Canby, were several thousand dollars beyond the amount of the default. I wish to say that the last clause of the bill is not necessary. I thought a suit had been commenced, but the Department was simply preparing to bring a suit. Since the bill was introduced I received a letter from the gentleman in the Department having charge of the matter to know what action would probably be taken by Congress, so that he might decide whether to institute a suit, and I told him of the pendency of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a written report?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it printed?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir; it was just made this morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the bill had better go over until to-morrow, so that the report can be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Unless we get this bill through very soon it cannot pass the other House, and two of these gentlemen are very frail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They probably will not die before to-morrow. We ought to see the report of the committee in print, so as to know the grounds on which it proceeds.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have stated them correctly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not doubt the Senator's statement, but it is impossible from merely listening here to understand how the case really stands. This relieving of sureties is rather a dangerous business. I move that the bill be postponed until to-morrow, and that the report be printed. I shall probably have no objection to it on examination, but I desire to see the report.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 560) to transfer the Indian Bureau and Indian affairs from the Interior Department to the War Department; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. POMEROY. I have provided in this bill that the bureau for the War Department known as the Freedmen's Bureau shall take charge of Indian affairs. We have provided that that bureau shall cease its operations in the States of the South as fast as they are restored into the Union. I think a measure of this kind at least should be considered by the committee, and perhaps by the Senate. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 561) to incorporate the Citizens' Gas Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 562) for the relief of the United States Express Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 151) to drop from the rolls of the Army certain officers absent without authority from their commands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

NAVAL REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That one thousand copies of the Navy Register for 1868 be printed for the use of the Senate.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That two thousand copies of the Army Register for 1868 be printed for the use of the Senate.

JOHN F. MASCHER'S PATENT.

Mr. CATTELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a little bill introduced by me, which has been reported by the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office with an amendment. It is Senate bill No. 295.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 295) for the relief of Eliza Mascher, widow of John F. Mascher, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Committee on Patents and the Patent Office proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

That Eliza Mascher, administratrix of John F. Mascher, deceased, who obtained a patent No. 9611, for an improvement in daguerreotype cases, dated the 8th of March, 1853, with additional improvement, No. 134, annexed to said original patent, dated 19th of February, 1856, for fourteen years, which expired on the 8th day of March, 1867, be authorized to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of said patent for seven years, under the regulations now in force for the extension of patents, as if she had made application previous to its expiration, as required by law; and the Commissioner of Patents is directed to investigate and decide the application for extension on the same evidence and in the same manner as other applications for extension are decided: Provided, That the application for extension be made within thirty days after approval of this act, and the decision of the Commissioner be rendered within ninety days from the filing of said application in the Patent Office: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be so construed as to hold responsible in damages any person who may have manufactured or used the daguerreotype cases, with the improvement and addition aforesaid, or used cases containing the improvement and addition aforesaid, between the expiration of the patent and the approval of this act: And provided also, That the Commissioner shall be satisfied before granting such extension that it will insure entirely to the benefit of the said Eliza Mascher.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

UMATILLA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. CORBETT. I move that the Senate take up Senate bill No. 215, which was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and afterward recommitted.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 215) to vacate and sell the Umatilla reservation in the State of Oregon.

The bill, on being recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, was reported with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the superintendent of Indian affairs for the State of Oregon is hereby authorized and directed, if practicable, to negotiate a treaty with the Indians now living on the Umatilla reservation in said State, providing for the relinquishment by said Indians to the United States of their right and claim to said reservation, and for their removal to some other reservation to be selected in said State or in the Territory of Washington, and to be described in said treaty, and the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated for the purpose of defraying the expenses of negotiating said treaty.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That provision shall be made in said treaty securing to said Indians the full value of their lands, together with the value of all improvements thereon, and no part of said lands shall be sold for less than $1 25 per acre.

Mr. CORBETT. I move to amend the amendment by inserting in line nine of the first section after the word "reservation," the words "or reservations;" so that the Indians may be divided, a part put upon a reservation in Washington Territory, and a part upon a reservation in the State of Oregon, if it shall be necessary.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

EXPORTERS OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. MORGAN. I move now to take up House bill No. 764, which failed yesterday, and on which a motion to reconsider was entered.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the motion of Mr. SPRAGUE, to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 764) for the relief of certain exporters of distilled spirits was rejected.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as it now stands amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the act of January 11, 1868, entitled "An act to prevent frauds in the collection of tax on distilled spirits," be so construed as to permit rum, which, at the date of the passage of said act, was already distilled or redistilled and intended for export, and actually contracted for to be delivered for exportation, to be withdrawn, removed, and exported from the United States under such transportation and export bonds and regulations as were required therefor immediately prior to the passage of said act, and as shall be provided for hereafter: Provided, That all such spirits shall be actually exported within sixty days from the passage of this act; and that before any such exportation shall be permitted, proof in writing shall be furnished by sworn evidence, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that such liquor was in fact at the date mentioned intended for export, and distilled or redistilled for that purpose or actually contracted for to be so exported. And upon failure to so export the same within said sixty days the tax thereon shall become due and payable, and the bonds given for the transportation and export thereof shall be forfeited and collected as in case of such bonds not canceled according to law.

Mr. SHERMAN. The word "liquor" in the proviso ought to be stricken out and the word "rum" substituted.

Mr. COLE. I would rather oppose this suggestion, for a very good reason which I can state. I suppose the bill ought to include whisky as well as rum.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator that we have already stricken out alcohol, so that the bill is now confined to rum, and the latter clause of the bill ought to conform to the first.

Mr. COLE. It seems to me that that would operate very much against a certain trade which has sprung up on the Pacific coast. Within three or four years past quite a considerable trade has sprung up between San Francisco and the mouth of the Amoor river. The principal article in which this trade consists is whisky; and, as I am well informed, some forty thousand gallons were contracted for prior to the passage of the law of the 11th of January last. It has been manufactured since that time; but the bill that was then passed interfered with its exportation, thus breaking up that trade which is a growing trade and likely to be valuable to the country. If this one article of that trade is stricken out we destroy the trade; the trade itself will probably be broken up. The merchants engaged in it cannot carry on the trade unless this article is included. Now, if this bill is to be passed relieving any parties from the operation of the act of the 11th of January, I think it should be so broad as to include those persons who entered into contracts for the exportation of this liquor.

I will state further that there is no probability of any fraud being practiced on that coast. There has not been at any time any charge of fraud in connection with the whisky trade on that coast. I do not know what liability there may be to fraud on the Atlantic coast; but if there should be some little liability here, it will only be a liability that must exist very generally at present.

I ask, therefore, for the reason I first stated, that the bill be so amended as to allow the exportation of whisky. It is only for the accommodation of this one trade, this new commerce which is springing up between our coast and the Amoor river, which will in a few years become a very extensive and valuable branch of commerce. I hope that that will not be excluded from this bill, and that the merchants who have made contracts there will not be cut off entirely by the use of the word "rum" instead of the word "spirits" or "liquor," which was originally in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask my friend from California if he had not better wait until the bill which the Committee of Ways and Means are now preparing comes up. It will provide for the trade to which he alludes. I presume that bill will be before us in the course of a week or ten days.

Mr. COLE. The suggestion would be forcible if it were not for a singular circumstance. These supplies must be put into the Russian possessions at the mouth of the Amoor river early in the season, and it is very important that this restriction be removed speedily; else the whole trade for this entire season will be utterly broken up. If they are not allowed to export this whisky immediately, or very soon, it will be altogether too late for the season, and the trade will be broken up, and will go into the hands of the other countries. That is the reason why, as I believe, this should be included now; there should be no delay.

Mr. SUMNER. Does the Senator reduce his motion to form?

Mr. COLE. It is not necessary—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on striking out the word "liquor" and inserting "rum."

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me that is a merely verbal question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is merely to make the bill consistent with itself.

Mr. COLE. If the bill needs other amendments to make it broad enough to accommodate this particular trade, I move to amend it in that respect by inserting after the word "rum"—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order to amend the bill now, except in some verbal respect by common consent, because it has been read the third time, and the question is on its passage.

Mr. STEWART. The third reading can be reconsidered.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest to my friend from California whether he had not better wait for the other bill. There is an urgent necessity for the passage of the present bill. There are considerable interests that are now in jeopardy from this delay, and if the Senator presses his proposition on this bill I fear he may endanger the whole.

Mr. COLE. It may be a matter of necessity and urgency on the part of manufacturers of rum in Massachusetts; but it is a matter of equal necessity and urgency on the part of those gentlemen who are manufacturing whisky in California. They do not manufacture rum there, but whisky to supply this particular trade. I assure Senators that these contracts had been entered into before the law of January 11 was passed. To enforce that law against them will result in very great disadvantage to those persons who have engaged in the trade and entered into these contracts. I do not wish to jeopardize the passage of the bill; but time is certainly all-important so far as these contracts in San Francisco are concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to strike out the word "liquor" and insert "rum," to make the bill consistent with itself. That amendment can be made by common consent. The Chair hears no objection, and it is made.

Mr. COLE. Now I move to insert the words "and whisky" after the word "rum" where ever it occurs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not in order, inasmuch as the bill has been read the third time.

Mr. COLE. If the amendment I have suggested cannot be made by unanimous consent, I will move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. SHEKMAN. The motion to reconsider involves the question whether we shall repeal the act of January last, because, as a matter of course, if you allow the exportation of rum and whisky under rules and regulations now provided or hereafter to be provided, it is a repeal of the act of January last, no more, no less. That act was intended to prevent the exportation of whisky and prevent its being moved from distillery to distillery, and has stopped off certain frauds, so that there are now held in Government warehouses something like twenty or thirty million gallons of whisky.

The Senators from New England have represented that a trade to a small amount in New England rum is still carried on with Africa, and they have made pretty strong appeals all around the Senate, as I see, to relieve that trade at this particular season. For myself, I think it wrong to pass the bill, even limited to rum, and I shall vote against it in any form in which it is put. But certainly the proposition of the Senator from California will open wide the door to fraud in regard to all whisky now on hand. It is utterly idle to attempt to restrain frauds in whisky if you allow the exportation of it, in the face of the repeated cases that have occurred in this country of fraudulent exportations at New York and elsewhere. Merely because they are carrying on a small trade between San Francisco and the Amoor river is no reason why we should endanger the revenue from the vast bulk of spirits now held in the warehouses of the country. It is a very delicate subject to interfere with, and I trust Senators will avoid anything like changes on a subject of this kind without the most careful consideration.

Mr. COLE. I do not understand that this repeals the law of the 11th of January any further than as it may apply to contracts made prior to that time for the exportation of liquor. It does not repeal the law; it leaves it as it is except as it applies to those particular contracts then entered into. It is for the sole purpose of relieving persons who make those contracts from the dilemma in which they were placed by the passage of that law after they had made their contracts. I cannot see how it will jeopardize the success of the bill if the word "whisky" is included with "rum;" and I therefore move the reconsideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was opposed to this bill in its original form, and when it was under consideration at a prior day I made some objections to its passage; and I shall now oppose its passage if whisky is inserted in the bill, though I am willing, under existing circumstances and upon the information that I have received, to vote for the bill if its operations are confined to contracts made for the exportation of rum. I should be very willing to so amend this bill as to accommodate the particular traffic to which the Senator from California refers; but he must see that if the word "whisky" is inserted in this bill it opens wide the door to the commission of fraud everywhere in the United States, and it allows those frauds to be committed in all the States everywhere, and in undertaking to benefit that particular interest, or that particular trade, we break down all restrictions upon the whisky traffic, and enable persons who are so disposed to evade the revenue laws of the country.

I was informed, when this bill stood in its original shape, that there were persons in Cincinnati and elsewhere in the large cities of the country, with hundreds of barrels of whisky, who were ready to avail themselves of the provisions of this bill by defrauding the revenue, as this enabled them to transport the whisky under pretense that it was for exportation. It is under that system that the great frauds, or many of them, have been committed, and it was found necessary to repeal absolutely the law allowing bonds for transportation to be given so far as whisky was concerned.

It is represented that there is rum in the New England States, which is an article exclusively manufactured there, I believe, for which contracts were made prior to the passage of the act to which this bill refers, and this simply allows those persons who contracted to sell that rum to send it out of the country by giving transportation bonds. It is a fact, also, that there has been no fraud, or at least few, if any, frauds committed upon the revenue in the exportation of rum; but all the great frauds have grown up out of the whisky traffic, and if we insert "whisky" in this bill we simply open up transactions which we have undertaken to prevent by the act of 11th of January, to which this bill refers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] has very correctly stated this case; and I must say that I hope the bill will not be opened to amendment. I do not mean to express any opinion on the question raised by the Senator from California; but I do think that this present bill had better be kept by itself without any embarrassment from the larger question of whisky; you cannot name the word without embarrassment.

Now, this bill meets a specific case. There is a well known commerce, being the commerce with Africa, which at this moment centers in all parts of Boston and Salem. There is also a little of it in Providence, but its main home on this side of the water is in Boston and Salem. An essential element of that commerce is the New England rum. I am sorry to say so, but so it is; without that the commerce must fail. I understand that at this moment there are several vessels that for months have been lying idle in the harbor of Boston, and there is one also in the harbor of Salem waiting for this act of justice on the part of Congress, so that they may export this article in pursuance of the contracts which they had actually made before the act of Congress in January last.

This bill is simple; it is precise; it applies to that single case; it relieves a commerce that stands by itself, and it affects the distillers and also the ship-owners, both of whom must suffer largely without this relief.

I do hope that the bill will not be embarrassed by any extraneous question. The parties who are to be benefited by this bill are entirely blameless; they have never fallen under any suspicion of fraud or of fraudulent attempt to violate the laws; they are not involved in the "whisky ring;" they have nothing to do with it; they stand apart from all that extensive transaction. They are associated with what is known as the African commerce; and I beg to assure the Senate from what I learn from my correspondence—I have here a dozen letters from excellent persons, merchants and others, in Massachusetts, who are interested in this commerce, who assure me that without the relief of this bill, that commerce must suffer very much, involving very serious loss to individuals.

Mr. COLE. I beg to assure Senators that there is no disposition on my part to embarrass the passage of the bill; but when the bill was originally reported it was broad enough to cover the case to which I have made allusion. I was not in my seat yesterday when the bill was first called up. I was here in time to vote for its passage. I supposed, as reported, it would be applicable only to such contracts as were made in good faith for liquor to be exported prior to the 11th of January. I do not appreciate the statement made by the Senator from Oregon, to the effect that it will open the door for fraud. I do not know how any liquor can be exported under this bill, except such as was contracted for like that to which I have made reference in California, before the law of the 11th of January. I have been watching for this bill a long time, and urging the committee to act upon it for the benefit of the trade from San Francisco to the Amoor river. A great deal of delay has taken place necessarily in bringing it up, from the pressure of other business; and now when it is brought up, I assure the Senate it will work great disappointment, and will be ruinous in its effects on persons in San Francisco if it is passed in the form to which it has been changed, to include only rum instead of liquor. I regret very much that that change has been made. I hope that the bill will be so modified as to permit these contracts in San Francisco to be fulfilled, as well as the contracts made in Boston and Salem.

Mr. NYE. When this bill was under consideration yesterday I opposed it, and should do so to-day but for the fact that I have consulted thoroughly with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts now absent, [Mr. WILSON,] and he assures me that it is all right. I think when we get a certificate from him that African rum is all right that will be sufficient for the rest of the Senate. [Laughter.] Therefore I shall cease to further oppose the bill. I sympathize strongly with my friend from California, and shall vote at the proper time for the privilege which he asks, to allow the manufacturers and traders of San Francisco to trade with the Amoor river. But that cannot be delayed more than a week, and I am apprehensive that it will embarrass the bill now. I think we had better let these merchants go, and especially I appeal to my friend from California, upon the certificate of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts that the traffic is right, not to interpose. It will form a good precedent, one of which I shall avail myself in assisting to pass the proposition of the Senator from California when that comes up. I think we had better let this bill pass as it is. I think it is the best first step that can be made toward the success of that which he and myself both desire.

Mr. HOWE. I voted yesterday against the passage of this bill, and I believe I shall vote against the reconsideration.

Mr. SUMNER. It has been reconsidered.

Mr. HOWE. I understand the question to be on the reconsideration.

Mr. SUMNER. The question now is on the reconsideration of the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand the state of the question, if the Senate should refuse to reconsider the previous votes the question will then again recur on the passage of the bill. We have already reconsidered the vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOWE. So I am just now reminded. I was not aware of the state of the question.

The question now is on reconsidering the third reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question. Unless that is done no amendment can be made to the bill.

Mr. HOWE. Well, sir, as I was opposed to going back at all, of course I am logically opposed to going back any further. The trade for which the Senator from California wishes to provide, I apprehend, is not of any very essential importance to the country, though it may be to the parties engaged in it. Looking at the last report we have on the subject of commerce and navigation I cannot find that any distilled spirits of any kind were exported to any part of the Russian possessions in Asia. As to the rum traffic, which it is said the Senator from Massachusetts sitting by me [Mr. WILSON] certifies to be all right, I think that is of less importance than is generally supposed. I tried yesterday to ascertain what it did amount to. I have consulted the same authority to which I just now referred, the returns to the Treasury Department, and I find that the whole amount of spirits distilled from molasses exported to all the ports of the world was but one million seven hundred thousand gallons, which is not a very heavy export; and of that quantity one third was exported to Turkey; about eight hundred thousand gallons were exported to the British possessions in Africa, and thirty thousand to Liberia. That is not, I submit, a very important trade to provide for; and if it be true that the export of one million seven hundred thousand gallons imperils, endangers the collection of not less than $150,000,000 of internal revenue which we have lost for the last two years on this article of whisky, I think we can well afford to sacrifice the whole trade. We ought to have at least $175,000,000 of revenue from this one article of whisky. We consume in this country beyond all question one hundred million gallons of spirits of all kinds.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will allow me—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday, being the joint resolution (H. R. No. 201) in relation to the Rock Island bridge, is before the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. HARRIS,] who has charge of that measure, will allow it to be laid aside informally, I should like to take up the bill that was discussed some time yesterday informally on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD.] If there be no objection, I trust it will be laid aside, and that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 256.

Mr. HARRIS. If it can be done informally, so that the unfinished business shall not lose its place, I shall not object.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senate will proceed with the consideration of this question until it is settled. We can close it in ten or fifteen minutes. I do not wish to debate it. Let us bring it to a close.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business can be passed over by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be done without a motion.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that it be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is objected to.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the joint resolution No. 201 before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is, being the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the unfinished business be postponed for an hour, in order that we may proceed with the consideration of the pending question.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. Now I move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill that was under consideration at the expiration of the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill is before the Senate, and the question is on reconsidering the vote by which it was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. STEWART. I merely wish to remark to the Senator from Wisconsin that if his objection to this bill is predicated on the ground that by not passing it we shall get any more revenue I think he has not familiarized himself with the workings of the department. I do not think it makes much difference what amount of distillation we have so far as getting anything into the Treasury during the next six or eight months is concerned. There does not appear to be anything gained in that way in any event. If he can show whereby this would make any change in that regard, the argument would be good.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to inquire of my friend whether he rose to put a question to me or to tell me something?

Mr. STEWART. To tell you something.

Mr. HOWE. I wish the Senator had done that before I started. I want to have the benefit of all the information I can get on the subject before I commence to discuss it. I am much obliged to him for his information. I am inclined to think I cannot rely upon it very safely, and it will not do for the revenue department to rely upon it.

I was about saying that I think we ought to have $175,000,000 per annum from this article. We consume one hundred million gallons of distilled spirits in this country annually. If two dollars a gallon were paid on it it would give us $200,000,000. I do not think we ought to be irrational enough to exact payment on all that is distilled, until we get purer than we are to-day. We are now getting about a million a month. The rest of it goes out without paying anything. One of the grand contrivances, as we are told on all hands by those who are familiar with the workings of the revenue laws, which I am not and do not profess to be, for getting this article into the market is this pretense of exporting it, putting it aboard ship free, and bringing it back and landing it somewhere and throwing it on the market.

Mr. STEWART. There is where you are mistaken. It is a mistake to suppose that because that is one of the grand contrivances if you stop that you prevent frauds. Since we have stopped that they have contrived some other mode to accomplish the same result and get it out.

Mr. HOWE. This stops one of the modes; and the question I wish to present to the Senate, without spending any time in the argument of it, as the friends of the measure want a vote upon it, is whether we can afford to imperil this great revenue for the sake of fostering this trade which amounts to so insignificant a sum.

Mr. SUMNER. If I thought that the present bill, if passed, would imperil by a hair's breadth the revenue to which the Senator refers, I would not vote for it, nor utter one word in its favor.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask of the Senator from Massachusetts an explanation upon another point. We have laws prohibiting the introduction and sale of whisky and rum to our own savages, and I understand this is a bill to open the trade with a similar class of people in Africa. I should like to know if, in his opinion, it would be good policy for a Government like ours to foster a trade which can be carried on in no other way, as we have heard here during the discussion of this bill, than by the introduction of rum?

Mr. SUMNER. I do not propose to foster it at all. I simply propose that the Government should repeal a law by which it interfered on the 11th day of January last with existing contracts for the exportation of this article, it being in the main exported to the African coast and the Mediterranean. It is an essential article in that commerce, for what use, for what purpose, I do not know; I have never inquired. I only know, on the reports of merchants and others who are interested, that this article has been regarded as essential to commerce. I have here among the letters before me one from the superintendent of exports and drawbacks in Boston, from which I will read a passage, as follows:

"The joint resolution of 11th January bears very heavily on the merchants engaged in the African and Mediterranean trade. Not a vessel has sailed for the coast of Africa from this port since, and the business is becoming very much deranged.

"Spirit, though by no means the whole, is so important an article in a cargo for the African coast that on the trial of Ames Oaksmith for piracy, testimony was introduced to show that he had no spirit on board, and therefore that it could not be a legitimate African voyage.

"Boston has now almost a monopoly of the African trade, but if it is crushed out and killed for a time, when it revives, if it ever does revive, it will not be in Boston. Messrs. Jussig, Goddard & Co. told me a few days since that they should load a vessel for the Mediterranean, shipping American cottons largely, if they could only ship some five hundred barrels alcohol at the same time."

Alcohol, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] remarks, is struck out. I have another letter here from a person who is engaged in the manufacture. He says:

"Please do not consider my case individual; for I assure you that it is representative; and that there are other material interests suffering from the law of which I complain. I am a distiller producing New England rum only; and that entirely for export.

"Now, sir, the law of January 11, 1868, prohibiting the export of spirits in bond bears heavily upon me and very heavily upon my patrons. My warehouse is full of rum; my distillery closed; my workmen with their families dependent upon me for support; my patron's vessels lying at their wharves month after month; their contracts with foreign merchants unfulfilled; their agents in foreign countries at great risk and expense idle; and their business here dying. All this and much more my space will not permit me to write in consequence of an unconstitutional law which benefits no one, except manufacturers and dealers in illicit whisky. Neither myself nor my patrons have ever been engaged in traffic in distilled spirits in the United States; nor have either ever been accused at law of any fraud or attempted fraud upon the Government."

He then proceeds to give several reasons, and he adds at the end:

"The law of January 11, passed for the avowed purpose of preventing frauds, and thereby increasing the revenue from distilled spirits, has failed in both purposes, and has had the effect to kill the only legitimate traffic in spirits existing to any noticeable extent in this country at the time of its passage, namely, the distillation and sale of rum in bond for export.

"The rum in warehouse, to which I have before alluded, was made on contracts entered into in good faith with well known exporters previous to January 1, 1868."

There is the whole case. The rum to which this is applicable is held now under contracts made anterior to the act of Congress which it is proposed to repeal.

As to the inquiry of the Senator from Iowa I will add another word. There is a plain distinction between the two cases to which he calls attention. The Indians are our wards, and directly under our influence. Here is a commerce extending along the coast of a continent and entering the Mediterranean. One of its essential articles is now in question. In return for this article we receive palm oil, ivory, coffee, and ground-nuts. What is done with the rum I cannot tell. I know not that it becomes the destructive agent which it is unquestionably when in the hands of the Indian. If the Senator would impeach the present trade with Africa, so far as it embraces this article, I do not see easily where he will stop. Our revenue is now increased by duties on foreign brandies. Shall these be abandoned? Our railroads transport whisky and rum. Shall we forbid the transportation? In putting these questions I present the difficulties involved in the inquiry of the Senator. For myself I regret this commerce. I wish that it did not exist. But it does exist. Considerable interests are embarked in it under the expectation of good faith on the part of the Government. I am unwilling to see these sacrificed; and this is all my present object.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to correct the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] as to this trade being entirely without value or consideration. If he will examine the reports prior to the war he will find that the trade was very considerable. I have before me the commerce and navigation report for the year ending June 30, 1860, which shows that the spirits made from molasses that were exported amounted to two million eight hundred and fifty-five thousand gallons; and in some years it will be found that it was more than double that. But the trade, although not of large aggregate amount, is quite important in relation to palm oil and ivory. Ivory is an article that is growing exceedingly scarce and dear for the last few years, and Great Britain and other countries are very eager to obtain a monopoly of it. This trade picks up a very considerable amount of ivory, which they must obtain from England unless we get it ourselves. - It is important in that respect that we should be able to continue this trade.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I entered this motion for reconsideration at the instance of gentlemen from the other House, without a thorough and full investigation. I did it somewhat upon the idea that it was beneficial to New England that the bill should be reconsidered, and that it should pass. The important consideration is simply this: the bill of January last was enacted to prevent frauds, and so that the Government should obtain a larger revenue from whisky and spirits than it otherwise would be able to obtain. The question with me is, whether or not, after the passage of that law, the Government, in fact, has obtained a larger revenue from spirits. The contrary is the fact. You are obtaining no more revenue, I understand, from the tax on whisky to-day than you were in January last, or prior to that time. Therefore, it is quite clear that the law in fact is a dead letter, so far as regards obtaining a larger revenue for the Government.

Mr. HOWE. Will my friend allow me to suggest what may possibly be an explanation of that fact, that we do not get any more revenue now than we did before the repeal of the bill?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. Is not this the explanation: since the repeal of that law, there has been greater difficulty experienced in getting these spirits on to the market, and, as a consequence, these spirits have not been put on the market nor exported, but are piled up in the warehouses. The Senator from Ohio stated yesterday that the lowest estimate of the amount now in the warehouses was twenty million gallons. That is one fourth of a year's distillation. He said other estimates placed it as high as forty millions. That is half a year's distillation. Now, having accumulated this whisky in the warehouses while this law has been repealed, is there not great reason to fear that restoring the law will simply provide the means of putting this accumulation on our own market?

Mr. SPRAGUE. You restore the old law, as I understand, for only a period of sixty days, and I believe the bill is now confined solely to the article of rum. It is clear to me that during this short space of time there can be sufficient watchfulness on the part of the revenue officers in a general way or in shipments to other countries than Africa. This African trade is about the tail-end of the foreign business of New England. She had a little business with the West Indies, but Canada now takes that. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] by the purchase of Alaska, has about used up our ice business. [Laughter.] We had a little export business to Africa, from which we got some palm oil and dates; but by the law of January last we shall lose that. I enter my protest, as usual, against any such legislation. I hope the Senate will consider that point and not consider the fact of the inability to execute the revenue law. I think it is a spectacle not well to be assented to and acknowledged that this Government is unable to execute its own laws and that in consequence of that inability it will go on from step to step cutting off the business and the trade of its people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which this bill was ordered to be read the third time.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if the bill is now confined to rum that is manufactured for the particular purpose of exportation?

Mr. SUMNER. It is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to know whether, in such a case, it conflicts with the existing law?

Mr. SHERMAN. Rum undoubtedly is ardent spirits, and comes within the law of January last. As I said before, the only objection I have to the passage of the bill is not to interfere with the existing trade, but because I do not believe it will be possible to prevent the fraudulent exportation of spirits under this bill. I know that the gentleman to whom the Senator from Massachusetts refers will not do it, but others will do it under cover of the law.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not think any such trouble can arise under this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is for the Senate to determine for themselves.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Cattell, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Cragin, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Hendricks, Howard, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Tipton, Van Winkle, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Doolittle, Ferry, Harlan, Henderson, Howe, McCreery, Morton, Patterson of Tennessee, Ross, Sherman, Trumbull, Wade, and Wiley—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Conness, Drake, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Thayer, and Vickers—14.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, the title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill for the relief of certain exporters of rum."

EVANSVILLE MARINE HOSPITAL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LYON, Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate the joint resolution (H. R. No. 44) relating to the sale of the marine hospital at Evansville, Indiana, in accordance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. MORTON. As the joint resolution (H. R. No. 44) relating to the sale of the marine hospital at Evansville, Indiana, has now been returned to us, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON. I now move to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Commerce, and I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

The motion was agreed to.

GREAT AND LITTLE OSAGE INDIANS.

The message also announced that the House had directed certain extracts from its Journal to be transmitted to the Senate; which were transmitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the House of Representatives, transmitted as extracts from its Journal:

Resolved, (as the sense of the House of Representatives,) That the treaty concluded on the 27th of May, 1868, with the Great and Little Osage tribes of Indians, both in its express terms and stipulations, and in the means employed to procure their acceptance by the Indians, is an outrage on their rights; that, in transferring to a single railroad corporation eight million acres of lands, it not only disregards the rights and interests of other railroad corporations in the State of Kansas, and builds up a frightful land monopoly in defiance of the just rights of the settlers and of the people of the United States, but it assumes the authority, repeatedly denied by this House, to dispose of those lands by treaty otherwise than by absolute cession to the United States, and for purposes for which Congress alone is competent to provide.

Resolved, (as the sense of this House,) That the objects, terms, conditions, and stipulations of the aforesaid pretended treaty are not within the treaty-making power, nor are they authorized either by the Constitution or laws of the United States; and therefore this House does hereby solemnly condemn the same, and does also earnestly but respectfully express the hope and expectation that the Senate will not ratify the said pretended treaty.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolutions be transmitted to the Senate of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What order will the Senate take on these resolutions?

Mr. SUMNER. Those resolutions of the House of Representatives relate to a matter which properly comes before the Senate in executive session. They do not properly appear here in the course of legislative business. I should desire, therefore, that they should be transferred to the executive business of the Senate and then referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope they will be printed.

Mr. HARLAN. Why not refer them directly to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. SUMNER. That can be done. I preface that motion, however, by expressing my regret that they were not presented to the Senate in executive session, as they concern the executive business of the body and not the legislative business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions were considered in public session in the House of Representatives, and of course were sent here in public session.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that that they be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope they will be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and printed, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, inclosing copies of letters from General Sherman relative to the treaty with the Sac and Fox Indians, now before the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1100) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, and for other purposes;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 1261) amendatory of an act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 867) for the relief of Jonathan Jessup, postmaster at York, Pennsylvania; A bill (H. R. No. 1120) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the names of certain vessels;

A bill (H. R. No. 1218) appropriating money to sustain the Indian peace commission and carry out treaties made thereby;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 246) directing the Secretary of State to present to George Wright, master of the British brig J. and G. Wright, a gold chronometer, in appreciation of his personal services in saving the lives of three American seamen, wrecked at sea on board of the American schooner Lizzie F. Choate, of Massachusetts;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) for the relief of Robert L. Lindsay;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 295) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties on certain articles contributed to the National Association of American Sharpshooters;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 294) donating to the Washington City Orphan Asylum the iron railing taken from the old Hall of the House of Representatives;

A bill (S. No. 164) to provide for appeals from the judgments of the Court of Claims, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 280) granting a pension to Michael Hennessy, of Platte county, Missouri;

A bill (S. No. 377) to change the time of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the several districts in the State of Tennessee; and

A bill (S. No. 425) granting a pension to George Bennett.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1100) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 1261) amendatory of an act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CENTRAL BRANCH PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWARD. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 256.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will inquire what will be the effect of that motion when the hour of two o'clock arrives. Will the joint resolution, which was the order of the day, then come up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I can hardly answer this question satisfactorily to myself. It was postponed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. For an hour, to enable the other bill to be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I suppose when that hour has expired the unfinished business will be before the Senate again.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If that joint resolution comes up at the end of the hour, I shall not object to this motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I suppose it does under the rule, as I understand it. The question is on taking up the bill mentioned by the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 256) relating to the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. POMEROY. When this bill was before the Senate on a previous occasion, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] was addressing the Senate, and was broken off in the middle of a speech by the expiration of the morning hour. I suppose he desires to finish his remarks on that question.

Mr. HARLAN. So much time has elapsed since this bill was before the Senate—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the debate proceeds, the amendment pending, offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was in lines twenty-four and twenty-five, to strike out the words "for any greater length of road than one hundred and fifty miles from" and to insert the word "beyond;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That no subsidy in United States bonds shall be allowed to said Central Branch Company beyond the termination of the one hundred miles on which bonds are already authorized to be issued on said line of railroad.

Mr. HARLAN. I was about to remark that it has been so long since this bill was before the Senate that it will be very difficult for me to begin now where I left off; and if a vote can be taken without further discussion I would much prefer to have the vote taken on the bill than to submit any further remarks myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose I am not foreclosed by the observations of my friend from Iowa from saying something. I believe I was broken off, six or eight weeks ago, much in the same manner as the Senator from Iowa; and in order to make myself understood, I shall have to begin at the beginning.

Mr. President, I have desired to investigate this subject with entire impartiality, and so far as I am conscious of my intellectual operations, I have done so. If I have failed to see the merit which the friends of this bill suppose it to contain, it is not because I have not listened to those friends in doors and out of doors, "in season and out of season," to their heart's content. Every suggestion that ingenuity could provide which should induce one to go for the bill has been made to me. Every sentiment which sympathy sometimes permits us to express has been appealed to. And so if I have felt obliged to come to a conclusion which differs from that of the Senators who advocate this bill, it has not been for want of investigation and for want of teaching.

But, Mr. President, the truth is, nevertheless, I believe, that any fair man who merely desires to do his duty in protecting the Treasury of the United States, and protecting the taxpayers whom he represents, must conclude that this claim has no just or legal foundation. This company may have been unfortunate under the circumstances that have taken place. It appears from their own statement, and I believe it, that they have been; that they find themselves with a hundred miles of railroad built from the Missouri river westward in the State of Kansas, not in any Territory of the United States, which does not pay running expenses. In a State that is rapidly filling up with population, as we are told; a State that is the garden of the West, that should support its population of millions, and will in due time, I dare say, this company finds itself now, after having received $1,600,000 of the money of the United States in aid of the construction of its road, with a hundred miles of railroad and with expenses in running it so great that they are not met or satisfied by the income of the property. Now the company wish the United States to give them $2,500,000 more of its bonds, its credit, in order to enable them to prosecute that enterprise one hundred and fifty miles, as the bill provides, so as to connect with the great Pacific line which is to terminate at Omaha or somewhere near the one hundredth meridian west.

If we are in a condition to subsidize all the branches which are authorized by State authority, converging westward to the one hundredth meridian, from Iowa, from Kansas, from Missouri, and from all that great region of country, then this application comes to us with as good a ground for support as any application could. Those who are engaged in it are respectable men unquestionably. I dare say they have spent their money economically; and they have that natural desire for a reasonable margin of profits that all business men have. But the question is whether we can take the step of adding to our already somewhat large stock of bonds of one kind and another, $2,500,000 more in aid of what is really, and nothing else, a State enterprise, a company chartered by the State of Kansas, the length of whose whole line is in the State of Kansas, subject to the laws of Kansas, and to the laws of no other government or community on earth. That is the question.

Senators all know perfectly well that the theory of this Pacific railroad business was to have one grand trunk line from the one hundredth meridian west to the borders of California, and to permit as many branch lines in the States running from the Mississippi or the Missouri, or wherever else State authority might grant them, to connect there, as chose to do it. It is true that afterward, by the act of 1864, the line through Iowa, I believe, which comes out at Omaha or somewhere there, became practically a part of that great trunk line. And now we have the application of this company to become another part of this great trunk line. It appears to me, I am sorry to say, that there is no justification for such an application.

It is said, I know, and it is pressed with great pertinacity, that there is a legal obligation arising out of our previous statutes which compels us, in the exercise of legal good faith as well as moral good faith, to grant this subsidy; that is to say, that by force of the act of 1864 this company was permitted, with the subsidy, bonds as well as lands, to extend its line to the one hundredth meridian under the circumstances which that law provided for, although the express letter of the law declared in so many words that it should only have a subsidy in bonds for one hundred miles in length from its eastern termination. Of course it would require a pretty strong degree of argumentation to convince a fair man who had no motive or interest to subvert except just to do right that when the statute of 1864, as well as that of 1862, declared, in words, that the amount of subsidy this company should have should only be for one hundred miles, the real meaning of the law, after all, was that in a certain contingency it should be for two hundred and fifty miles. It would require, I say, a pretty large degree of ingenuity to do that.

It is claimed, I know, that the opinion of Mr. Curtis, employed by this company to give an opinion for a proper compensation, argues us out of that result. Sir, I do not believe it. I think that Mr. Curtis, with a great deal of skill and ingenuity, has evaded the precise point, and has dealt in what an eminent orator of his own town once described to be "sounding and glittering generalities."

The ground upon which that claim is made (and I must be excused for referring to the statutes) is supposed to be this: that by the act of 1864 these various lines were permitted to consolidate with each other, and one section of the act of 1864 provided, it is said, that in case any one of these lines that were to consolidate should fail to build its road according to the obligation that the law imposed so as to make a complete connection with some of the other lines, then the line with whom such a connection might be made should have an opportunity to take up the right of the other defaulting company and to extend the road over the line which had been previously granted to the other; and they say that inasmuch as the company with which this was to connect—the Union Pacific, eastern division, I believe it is called—has not built in the direction and to the extent that the act of 1864 authorized it to build, this company is now, therefore, lawfully authorized to go on with the construction of the road, and is entitled to receive the subsidy in bonds for doing it. I entirely dissent from that proposition as a matter of law. I have studied the statutes with the utmost care, and have listened, as I have said, to the personal argument of one of the gentlemen connected with this line, which was certainly very ingenious, and one which, I do not doubt, he believed in himself, to show that that was its construction; but I cannot bring my mind to see it in that light.

The Union Pacific Company, eastern division, was authorized by that very act of 1864 to connect its line with the Union Pacific proper west of the one hundredth meridian by an express authority; and so was any of the other companies that were to connect with that line. They were authorized by the act of 1864 expressly to connect west of the one hundredth meridian at any point they might choose, somewhere in the vicinity of Denver, I think it was. Perhaps there was no limitation at all; I am not sure about that. All that the act of 1866 provided, which is the act these claimants now complain of, was, that the time within which the eastern division line should file its location and survey, and I do not know but begin its work—I am sure about that—should be extended a certain length of time.

Mr. CONKLING. No; file its map.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all the act of 1866 provided. So that by the act of 1864, under which this claim of right on the part of these claimants is made, the very company that they now complain of as having diverged its line to their injury was authorized to select any route that it pleased to select, so that it connected anywhere west of the one hundredth meridian with the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Now, therefore, there can be no equity, there can be no grant which can ever operate so long as the Union Pacific, eastern division, is going on, in favor of these parties, under the very section that they claim under, for the reason that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, down to to-day is doing precisely the thing that the act of 1864 authorized it to do; that is to say, building westward with the authority to connect, and with the obligation to connect, as the law stands, with the Union Pacific railroad proper at some point west of the one hundredth meridian; so that the Eastern Division Railway Company, using the language in this section under which this claim is made, has not defaulted in the slightest degree. It has not failed to do any one thing that the act of 1864 required it to do. It is exercising now whatever authority it does exercise under the power and authority that this very act of 1864 gave to it. And, as I have said, this same act declared, in express terms, when this authority was conferred upon the Eastern Division Company, that in no event should this particular line have more than its hundred miles of subsidy.

The gentlemen who are interested in this line knew, of course, of the law of 1864. The act of 1864 was passed before this particular Central Branch Company—if that be the name of it—had begun any operations at all. If I am correctly informed, (and if I am not the chairman of the committee will correct me,) the operations of the Central Branch Pacific Railroad Company had not commenced on the passage of the act of 1864. Am I right?

Mr. HOWARD. I am not able to furnish the Senator from Vermont with exactly the facts as to the state of the work on the branch road now under consideration at that time; but I think he has been misinformed with regard to the fact of no work having been commenced on the Central Branch at that date.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the chairman of the committee does not seem to know, and believes I am misinformed, I must give my authority. My authority is the very officers of this company who are now here pressing this claim. Unless I am very much mistaken—and if I find that I am I will take the earliest possible moment to correct it—when they were attempting to convince me that this was a just claim—and I was willing to be convinced, I must confess, because they are gentlemen of rectitude and sincerity apparently—when they were endeavoring to convince me what the state of this case was, and why I ought to go for this bill, in order to ascertain what their equities were, I made the usual inquiries that any body who wished to understand the subject would. What was your company about when this act of 1864 passed? Let us ascertain whether there was anything in that act which did you injustice. Were you a party to it? Were you satisfied with its passage? Were you one of the promoters of it? I understood these gentlemen to reply that they were. And then, when I asked them what was the state of the work on your road at that time; had you invested any money in the construction of that road, I understood them to reply that they had not. They, therefore, did not claim that there was anything in the act of 1864 which they had any right to complain of or any disposition to complain of; but, taking the act of 1864 as it stood, they claimed that in order to carry out its provisions in their favor, on account of the subsequent conduct of Congress in 1866 and of the Eastern Division Company, they were authorized to receive this subsidy. I think, then, I am not mistaken when I say that, referring to the act of 1864 amending that of 1862, we find this company in a condition when they not only have no right to complain of that legislation, but were actually one of the parties who promoted it and obtained it to be made, having no money invested, having no work done; and therefore, referring to the act of 1864 as the foundation upon which their subsequent operations were taken, as well as those of the eastern division, we have a right, and we must, indeed, look at the fair meaning of that act as we construe it, having no fee or interest to misconstrue it, in order to ascertain what their rights are as respects the eastern division.

When we come to see what those rights are, it does not seem to be capable of being misunderstood. I agree that it is very easy to employ counsel to make up an opinion and give a statute any construction you may wish for it. If I go to my counsel and tell him that I want an opinion made out which will give me a right under a statute, and he looks at it with the ingenious eyes of a skillful man, he can write an argument that will be at least very confusing, as that of Mr. Curtis is. That is what he is employed to do, to present that side of the question, and so it will be with every statute, because human language is not sufficiently exact and particular to be entirely incapable of being misconstrued or misunderstood.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont, if I understood him correctly—but perhaps I only understood part of what he was saying—did he say that the central branch or its officers assisted in the passage of the act authorizing a change of the route of the eastern division?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of the act of 1864 now; I have not yet come to the act of 1866. I understand the officers who are now representing the central branch to say that the act of 1866 was passed injuriously to their rights and interests, without their knowledge or consent.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And they protested against it, as I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They protested against it in the House of Representatives, as they say; but I will come to that presently.

In what I say about the construction of these statutes I wish to be borne out by the judgment of the Senate, and therefore I shall refer in all cases where I can to their exact language. The ninth section of the act of 1864 provides:

"That any company authorized by this act to construct its road and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the initial point aforesaid—"

That, you will perceive, related to the Union Pacific, eastern division, the one which this company is now complaining of, as one of the companies included in that act—

"That any company authorized by this act to construct its road and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the initial point aforesaid, may construct its road and telegraph line so as to connect with the Union Pacific railroad at any point westward of such initial point, in case such company shall deem such westward connection more practicable or desirable; and in aid of the construction of so much of its road and telegraph line as shall so be a departure from the route heretofore provided for its road, such company shall be entitled to all the benefits and be subject to all the conditions and restrictions of this act: Provided further, however, That the bonds of the United States shall not be issued to such company for a greater amount than is heretofore provided if the same had united with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude: nor shall such company be entitled to receive any greater amount of alternate sections of public lands than are also herein provided."

Here, Mr. President, by this section, as the Senate will perceive, was an express authority, in language absolutely unmistakable—at least as much so as language is capable of being—to the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, whose action is now the sole subject of complaint on the part of this Central Branch Company, to extend its road westwardly to any point of connection which it might choose beyond the one hundredth degree of longitude.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not like to interrupt the Senator; but, if he will allow me, I wish to ask why they came in 1866 to get the right to go there if they had that right in 1864?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not the keeper of the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division; in fact I know less about it than I do about the central branch, because I have not been subjected to that kind of attention from its officers that I have been from those of the central branch—no offensive attention either.

Mr. POMEROY. Perhaps the Senator may not be aware that they had applied to go up where he says they had a right to go when the Senator from Iowa was Secretary of the Interior, and that construction was not put upon it by the Secretary of the Interior, and therefore they came to Congress.

Mr. HARLAN. The question was referred to the Attorney General, and the Attorney General thought that they had not the right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Had not what right?

Mr. HARLAN. Had not the right to change their location.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What do you mean by changing their location? Do you mean to say that the Attorney General decided that, under the act of 1864, the Union Pacific, eastern division, had not a right to construct its road and telegraph line so as to connect with the Union Pacific railroad proper at any point west of the initial point?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, I mean this: under the act of 1862 and the act of 1864 this Eastern Division Company had located their line of road with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, my predecessor; and the Attorney General held that they had no right to change the location, that the rights of other parties had vested, and that they had no right to make the change. The Senate will remember that under that law it is provided that each branch shall be so located as to enable each other branch to make its connection within the limits specified in the law, and the location of the several branches having been made under that provision of law, the law also provides that this shall be done subject to the approval of the President of the United States; and this having been done, and the rights of other parties having vested, it was held that they could not make the change.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know what change they want to make with the Secretary of the Interior; and I am unable to ascertain from my friend from Iowa now whether the Attorney General decided that this statute was in force or was not. I have the impression that if we had the Attorney General here, and could cross-examine him, we should discover that he was then of opinion that this statute was in force, and that its language meant exactly what it says: that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, might extend its line to any point of connection with the Union Pacific railroad proper, west of the one hundredth meridian, that it pleased. It says so in terms that are incapable of being misunderstood. What the Senator from Iowa says as to their being bound to permit other companies to connect with them eastward of the one hundredth meridian is perfectly true; and if the Union Pacific, eastern division, was to connect with the Union Pacific proper at the eastern boundary of California, this company could connect with it on the eastern side of the one hundredth meridian, if it wanted to do so. There is no difficulty about that. It has a perfect legal right, if my friend from Iowa is correct, to connect with the Union Pacific, eastern division, if it goes around by South America to reach California, anywhere this side of the one hundredth meridian. But inasmuch as the statute did not provide that any of these connecting companies should connect west of the one hundredth meridian, of course the company that my friend from Iowa is speaking for must comply with the statute and connect east of the one hundredth meridian; and there is a line of road for it to connect with east of the one hundredth meridian, or five hundred miles west of it; and it is a mere question of convenience and of profit between the two companies at what point east of the one hundredth meridian the central branch shall connect with the eastern division. The real point of complaint, however, is, I suspect, that the central branch people wish to go northwest to make a connection. whereas, according to the direction in which the Eastern Division Company are now building their road, they would have to go southwest. It is perfectly easy for them to connect east of the one hundredth meridian; but they wish to compel the eastern division to bend their road to the northwest, so that they can connect with it in that direction, instead of being obliged themselves to bend their own line to the southwest. It may be a matter which would produce no profit at all if they were to connect in the southwest; but that is a matter with which the law has nothing to do.

So we find, Mr. President, that the act of 1862 gave this State company authority to build one hundred miles of line in its own State, and a right to have $1,600,000 of our bonds to do it with, with the express proviso that it should not have in any event—and I use, I believe, the exact language of the statute; my friend, the chairman of the committee, will correct me if I am wrong—receive a subsidy in bonds for more than the first one hundred miles. Is there any ground of misconstruction about that? Could this company have misunderstood what that meant when they set out to undertake to build this line, the law declaring to them that in no event should they receive this subsidy in bonds for more than one hundred miles? Sir, it would be an insult to the sense of the Senate to suppose that that language could have been misunderstood by anybody. Then, coming down to the act of 1864, we find that the company with whose line this was to connect, were, if they chose, authorized by an act of which this company was a promoter, a company which at that time had not expended a dollar to extend their line to any point of junction with the main trunk west of the one hundredth meridian, still leaving the company making this claim to make its connection with the eastern division east of the one hundredth meridian at any point that it might choose, having "in no event" again a right to a subsidy for more than one hundred miles.

As I have said, Mr. President, after having listened to all the ingenious persuasions of these gentlemen—and they have been ingenious—and having had my sympathies appealed to, because this road does not pay, I have been unable to even see a doubt under the act of 1864 as to what its plain meaning is; and I may add that I have yet to hear from the officers of this company, or from anybody else, any complaint as to what the act of 1864 provided as an amendment to the act of 1862.

They do not go back to that; they claim that the act of 1864 is all right, and they say that all they ask for is such rights as the act of 1864 gave to them. They claim that under the sixteenth section of that act, inasmuch as the eastern division swung its line to the south with a view of connecting at Denver, as that same act by the ninth section gave it authority to do, they are, therefore, entitled to build an independent line to the northwest until they shall strike the Union Pacific at the one hundredth meridian. I have no objection to their building that line; but when they undertake to convince me that my conscience is bound or my sense of law is bound, under the construction of these statutes, to make the Treasury of the United States a contributor to that road, I say they make a great mistake, because the law is not capable, as it appears to me, under any fair or even under any exact and technical construction, of being wrested to any such purpose. They were only authorized by that sixteenth section, as I said, and as the language of the law is, to build on the line where the eastern division should or might have built, in case that company made default in constructing the line where the act of 1864 authorized it to construct; and as I have shown by the very language of the act of 1864, it did authorize the eastern division to construct according to its own free will and pleasure to any point that it might choose west of the one hundredth meridian.

Taking these two sections together, what is the meaning of the law? One section authorized the eastern division to construct at its own discretion to any point of connection west of the one hundredth meridian. Then putting the very construction on the sixteenth section which the claimants do, the sixteenth section authorized the claimants, in case the eastern division should make default in constructing that line within the time that the act provides to a point of connection west of the one hundredth meridian, to take it up and construct it; but it so happens, as we all know the fact is, that the eastern division has not made any default in constructing its line to a point west of the one hundredth meridian. That company has chosen, under the authority of this act of 1864, to swing its line further to the south than it had intended to do, it is said, in order to connect at a point more suitable to its own notions of the traffic and profits which would arise from its constructing the line, and that is all it has done.

But, suppose, Mr. President, for the sake of the argument, that under this act of 1864 this Eastern Division Company had been guilty of a violation of their duty in swinging their line so much to the south, does that give this Central Branch Company any right to ask Congress to make it good? Do we stand as the guarantors or sureties of every railway company to whom we give a subsidy that they shall perform all their other obligations in favor of everybody else? Are we the ultimate residuary of reimbursement to every railroad company whose undertaking is interfered with by another? Is that the sense of equity that is to be appealed to in a body like this? Why, suppose, Mr. President, that in your own State the Legislature of Ohio should have chartered two lines of railway and authorized one to connect with the other, and upon the faith of that authority one of those companies should have gone on and expended money with a view to make the connection, and the other company does not choose to comply with the law, or the Legislature itself chooses to repeal the charter entirely from motives that commend themselves to its own sense of what its public duty is, what then? That is one of the chances of business which all business men who have sagacity foresee are possible to happen. There can be no obligation on the part of a State that charters an incorporated company and gives it certain privileges and makes it its duty to submit to certain burdens and easements that belong to another; there is no equity which compels that State to uphold and compel performance by that corporation of its duty unless it chooses to do so. It may repeal the charter the next day if it sees good reason for it; and while, if it acted grossly, unjustly, and corruptly, it might give the party injured a right to appeal to its sense of returning justice for reimbursement, it could scarcely give such a corporation a right to demand of it that it should take up the whole business that the other company had abandoned and carry on an entirely new and independent line of operations. That could scarcely be contended.

Now, Mr. President, what is the act of 1866, which, as it is said, is the real ground of complaint? The equity which is set up against Congress is that in 1866 it passed this law:

An Act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, is hereby authorized to designate the general route of their said road, and to file a map thereof, as now required by law, at any time before the 1st day of December, 1866; and upon the filing of the said map, showing the general route of said road, the lands along the entire line thereof, so far as the same may be designated, shall be reserved from sale by order of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That said company shall be entitled to only the same amount of the bonds of the United States to aid in the construction of their line of railroad and telegraph as they would have been entitled to if they had connected their said line with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude as now required by law: And provided further, That said company shall connect their line of railroad and telegraph with the Union Pacific railroad, but not at a point more than fifty miles westwardly from the meridian of Denver, in Colorado.

You will notice that by the act of 1864, which I have read, the Eastern Division Company had an unlimited right to connect at any point west of the one hundredth meridian. The only change in the act of 1866 made as to that connection was that it imposed a limitation upon the Eastern Division Company by which it prohibited their making this point of connection more than fifty miles west of the meridian of Denver. All the rest that it declared was that the time, which was running out, for their complying with the law, filing their maps, and going on with their operations, should be extended until the 1st day of December, 1866. Within that time this statute in express terms declared that they should do whatever they were to do "as now required by law;" that is to say, in accordance with the provisions of the act of 1864. That is all they are to do; they are to file their maps and designate their line of route before the 1st day of December, 1866, as then required by the existing laws of the United States. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time has now expired for which the order of the day was postponed.

Mr. HOWARD. I move that the order of the day be further postponed, that we may continue the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like for my own information to ask the Senator from Vermont a question upon the construction of these statutes. I do not know whether I have understood his argument correctly. Suppose the act of 1866 had not passed, authorizing a change of the route of the southern branch, when that branch had failed to construct its road so as to connect with the northern line, and thus by its failure prevented the connection of this particular road with it, would that have given this company a right under the act of 1862 and the act of 1864 to have continued its construction so as to make the connection itself either at the one hundredth meridian, or west of that, and to have received the bounties provided in the law?

Mr. EDMUNDS. In answer to my friend from Indiana, I will say in the first place that this little road that we are now speaking of was not apparently, from the whole scope of the acts together, expected or intended to be a branch of the Union Pacific proper, but it was a local road, intended to run from the Missouri river to tap this eastern division at a point about one hundred miles distant from the river; and whether this particular local road was one that came within the consolidation acts of 1864, they are so confused, I am not certain. In what I have been saying I have taken it for granted that that was so, and that if the Union Pacific, eastern division, had made default within the language of the sixteenth section of the act of 1864, and had failed to build their road under that act entirely, this company would have been authorized to go on and connect at the one hundredth meridian, taking the subsidies that otherwise would have belonged to the eastern division. I take that for granted in what I am saying, although in looking at the statutes it is open to some doubt whether that is so or not; but the matter upon the other point seemed so plain to my mind that I did not trouble myself to settle definitely in my own judgment how this point would be. In what I am now saying about this bill, I take that for granted for the purposes of whatever views I have to give.

The result of that would be, if we are to proceed and give this company the subsidy to the one hundredth meridian, that we shall have reversed exactly the policy that we laid down in 1862 and 1864 as to these subsidies, because in both those acts we expressly declared that we would only give one subsidy to the one hundredth meridian to both these companies, and that subsidy should belong to the eastern division, and we would give this particular local company a subsidy for one hundred miles and no more; and whereas the eastern division were to be permitted to go to the one hundredth meridian by the act of 1862, and were to have a subsidy the whole way, now the effect is, if we have to come to that by the result of these operations, instead of giving one subsidy to the one hundredth meridian, we give two for the whole distance for two independent lines. Of course that is a matter of very serious detriment and injury to the Treasury, as far as any of these subsidies may be thought to be so, because we are obliged to pay just double the money that when we set out in aiding these roads we expressly declared we would pay; and in order to have no mistake as to what we meant, as to how much we would give, because it is all a bounty, we declared in both those acts that we would not give a subsidy for more than one hundred miles, in any event, to this line, and that we would not give to the eastern division more than to the one hundredth meridian, in any event, upon that line; and so when we gave this permission to the Union Pacific, eastern division, to file its map up to the 1st of December, 1866, and limited its connection to the point of Denver, we again expressly declared, in explicit terms, that that should not authorize it to receive any subsidy beyond the one hundredth meridian; that is, any more than it was entitled to before.

The hardship to our Treasury, if the poor old thing has not got so paralyzed that hardship does not affect it at all, is that we are giving a double subsidy to parallel roads that are, so to speak, in that western country, within a stone's throw of each other, to do the same business. If we have the art of manufacturing money as rapidly as some financiers suppose we have, if it is a mere question of printing, it would not be so serious; but if it ever becomes a question of paying, a question of a sound condition of Government credit, which, I take it, like all other credit, must be measured by the amount of its debt as compared with its resources, then it is a very serious question, indeed; it is a question that we are bound to consider whether we can take another step in any direction, as we are now situated, in the aid of any line of railroad by way of subsidies in money. We can give them the lands, because, if we do not, either the Indians or somebody else will get them, as we discover, and I do not know that there is any great choice as to what shall be done with the lands.

Mr. CONKLING. We have given them to another company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But when we come to another part of it, when we come to giving our credit in bonds, that we and nobody else are bound to pay to the holder, it is a matter of very serious concern how far we ought to go. As I said, when we set out we gave notice as distinct as language possibly could to these companies, that this particular company which is now a claimant for our bounty, or upon our justice, as my honorable friend from Missouri would represent it, that they should only have $1,600,000 of our credit; that is, bonds for one hundred miles, and no more in any event; and we said to this other company that they were to tap at the distance of one hundred miles, "You shall only have subsidies of our credit to the one hundredth meridian," probably three hundred or three hundred and fifty miles from the Missouri river. Now, it is said that by some hocus-pocus or other that nobody could understand in the time that it took place, all this is entirely upset, and that while the Union Pacific Company, eastern division, has made no default at all, is carrying on its work and receiving its bonds to connect at some point in the meridian of Denver—a long way from it yet, I suppose, but it will get there some day or other—it has become a defaulter, and that by force of the act of 1864 the central branch is entitled to keep up the franchises that we gave it, and which it has lost under the act of 1864, and build its line to the one hundredth meridian. That would be a very singular conclusion to come to; and the fact is it shocks your common sense when you look at the whole of that statute together. The only ground upon which, with any plausibility at all, with even the thinnest and shadowless plausibility this company can make any claim against us would be the ground that we had acted in bad faith in permitting the eastern division to swing its line so far to the south that they would have to go further, east of the one hundredth meridian, to connect than they otherwise would, and that therefore we ought not to give them the privilege of going to the one hundredth meridian, but to make good before the Committee on Claims the damages they have sustained in consequence of that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly. As I am now debating this matter for my own information and that of the Senate I should like to have any questions put.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am very anxious to get the Senator's opinion on a law question that has struck my mind with a great deal of force. Suppose the southern road had without any authority of Congress, after following the line prescribed in the statute for a certain distance, turned in a southwestern direction, so that it should become impossible for this particular road to make the connection contemplated by the statute, would that have been such a default under the act of 1864 as would have authorized this company to make the connection with the main trunk at the one hundredth meridian, or east of it, and to have given it the benefits provided in the statute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Most clearly not, for the reason that if the eastern division had done what the act of 1864 authorized it to do, as it has done so far, plainly to my mind there could be no default under the same statute in the company's exercising the discretion that that statute gave to it. That cannot be a default within the meaning of the statute, plainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the statute required the road to run in a northwestern direction, so as to connect with the northern line and so as to enable this road to connect with it, and instead of thus constructing its road the company had turned in a southwestern direction so as to make a connection impossible, and that without authority of law, would not that have been a default in constructing the line contemplated in these laws?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that, as an abstract question, my friend may be answered in the affirmative as to that. If the act of 1864 authorized and required the eastern division to build a particular road in a particular direction to a particular point, and declared that in default of its doing that another company might take up the line and build it, and it did make that default, the other company's rights would attach, unquestionably.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Now, I will ask the Senator one further question; and if he will answer that satisfactorily it will remove some trouble on my mind. After the act of 1864, does it disturb the rights of this company thus to extend its line so as to make the connection and enjoy the subsidies, and does the consent of Congress to this departure of the southern road from the prescribed line so as to defeat the connection, impair the legal or equitable rights of this particular line?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Most unquestionably the act of Congress would impair any legal rights this road derived from an act of Congress if Congress chose to change it, because Congress has sole control over its own legislation; and if this company, by the act of 1864, had an express right to connect with the eastern division at a particular point, and an act of Congress in 1866 chose to repeal all the rights of the eastern division, this company would not have a right to go on. I think that must be clearly so, inasmuch as Congress is the master of its own actions; and if it has granted a right to one, and those rights are dependent upon a right which it has granted to another, if it chooses for good reasons to take away the right it granted to the other this right would fall. That would be one of the misfortunes of this state of things, and they happen in State legislation, as my friend knows, almost every day.

But the trouble is that my friend from Indiana has suggested a hypothetical and not a real case, because the act of 1864 did not declare that the eastern division should go to the northwest and should connect at the one hundredth meridian; it declared that it might extend its road to any point west, and connect at any point west of the one hundredth meridian that in its discretion, as I have read the language, it should choose. That is what it declared in express terms. It gave a discretion to the eastern division to extend its road and connect at any point west of the one hundredth meridian it might please. This is the language:

"That any company authorized by this act to construct its road and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the initial point aforesaid, may construct its road and telegraph line so as to connect with the Union Pacific railroad at any point westwardly of such initial point, in case such company shall deem such westward connection more practicable or desirable."

It therefore, by unmistakable language, reposed a discretion in the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, to so adjust the latitude, if I may use that expression, of its line as in its judgment would best conduce to its own interests, and connect with the Union Pacific proper at any point west that it might choose. That was thought to be, in 1866, a discretion a little too unlimited, and therefore when they came to us to get the time within which they might do that extended, we declared that that point of connection should be limited to within fifty miles of Denver, so as not to give it an unlimited sweep across the whole continent; and the act of 1864, in that connection, in express terms declares that no company should have any greater right to a subsidy on account of that western extension than they had by the original act of 1862, which expressly declared, as I have said, that the one company should only have a subsidy to the one hundredth meridian and the other, the one before us, for one hundred miles.

Mr. HARLAN. That the Senator may not spend more time upon that point than is necessary, I suggest to him that admitting his construction of the statute of 1862, from which he is now reading, the members of the Senate who take an adverse view to him contend that the statute of 1864 remedied that difficulty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am much obliged to my friend from Iowa. It happens to be the statute of 1864 that did remedy the difficulty, and it is that very statute that I have been reading from. I have just been reading from the ninth section of the act of July 2, 1864.

Mr. HARLAN. As it is recorded in the volume which I have before me, it is the act of July 1, 1862.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am reading from the thirteenth volume of the Statutes-at-Large. The act from which I read at the commencement of it is stated to have been passed on the 2d of July 1864, and at the end of it there is the declaration in the usual way, "Approved July 2, 1864."

Mr. HARLAN. What page?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Page 360; and the ninth section is the one which I have been reading. I agree with my friend from Iowa, that the act of 1864 must be taken to have superseded the act of 1862 as far as it went, and it was for that reason, not to take up his time unnecessarily, that I was endeavoring to have the Senate understand how clear and plain this language of the ninth section of the act of 1864 is. If that company had not a discretion before that time, but were by the act of 1862 bound to go up the Republican river—if that is the name of it, and I believe everything is Republican in Kansas, certainly its politics are—then the act of 1864 removed that obligation and gave them discretion in express terms to exercise their own judgment as to how and where that line should go and strike the Union Pacific west of the one hundredth meridian. And there it stands in black and white, and no amount of ingenuity of my friend from Iowa or my friend from Michigan can wipe it out. It does not need a lawyer to understand it. A man who is accustomed to read his Bible can understand what that ninth section means. There is no contrivance of words that can possibly be adopted which would make it more plain than that makes it, that there was given to this Eastern Division Company a discretion which was only limited by its own judgment of what its interest required, as to whether it should go up the Republican or down some other river, because in the language of that act that discretion was confided to it in terms; it was to its judgment that the central branch and Congress and everybody else was to submit. We gave the central branch power to connect with the road of that company, but to connect with the road of that company as we had given it the discretion to locate it, and not as the wishes of the central branch might dictate its location.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the greatest pleasure. I am only desirous to get at the truth.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the Senator from Vermont hold that this discretion, about which he says so much, contained in the ninth section of the act of 1864 would authorize the eastern division to take up its map and change its location from time to time, notwithstanding it may have filed its map formally and legally, and fixed its location, thereby fixing its rights. Did the discretion of which he speaks authorize all this to be done even after the lands were withdrawn from sale by the formal order of the Secretary of the Interior? Certainly, it seems to me, he cannot carry the idea of discretion so far as that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do, Mr. President, carry it as far as that. We will say that under the act of 1862 this company was required to build on a particular line to a particular point, as it was. Both these companies came to Congress to get the act of 1864 passed to change that, and they inserted the ninth section in order to make a new provision as to this eastern division for one, and what did they say? They said that that company, so authorized, might construct its line so as to connect with the Union Pacific at a different point far to the west. How could they connect at a different point far to the west unless it could change its location, if it had located a point of connection at the one hundredth meridian, the eastern terminus of the Union Pacific? It would either have to locate further west to connect with it at another point by running over the very line of the Union Pacific and on its very track, or else it would have to swing its line more to the south at a point further east, would it not? Therefore, if you take it for granted that at the time of the passage of the act of 1864 the Eastern Division Company had located its line to the northwest with a view of striking the Union Pacific at the particular point of its termination on the one hundredth meridian, then you can put no other construction upon this ninth section of the act of 1864 than to give it a meaning which would confer an authority upon the Eastern Division Company to extend its line to some other and more western point: and in order to do that it must make use of those incidents which belong to such an extension, of course. My friend from Michigan says, "Suppose the lands had been withdrawn from market?" Could not Congress by this act permit them to be restored? Could they not remedy any injury received from it? Most certainly it could. You must give some force, you must give some effect to the plain language of this act; and when you find—because it would really rather strengthen the argument than otherwise—that under the act of 1862 the situation of the line of the eastern division was not such as it desired it should be; that it did not, at all events, wish to connect at the very terminal point of the Union Pacific, but wished to have authority to swing its line further to the westward to the neighborhood of Denver, and see that that being the situation Congress speaks in the way that it does in this ninth section, I submit to any fair man that you must give it a reasonable and fair construction to enable the company to exercise the authority that Congress had bestowed upon it. If, therefore, there was a location, this was a plain authority on the part of Congress for it to change its location and connect at another point, because the act of 1862 says that it shall connect at the one hundredth meridian, and the act of 1864 says it need not connect at the one hundredth meridian, but may connect at any point that, in its discretion, it may deem best calculated to promote its interests; and that was a wise and proper thing when the subsidies were not increased. Why? Because the men who were investing their capital in that line, who were to control its business, ought to be permitted to judge at what point it would be most advisable to their interests that they should connect.

Let it be borne in mind that all this was done with the knowledge and approbation of the company that is now making this claim on our bounty, and that in the same act we said to that company, "While you may connect with this other company that we are authorizing to stretch westward to Denver, you shall connect inside of the one hundredth meridian, and you shall not have in any event more than one hundred miles subsidy in bonds." In that state of the case it seems to me to be trifling with language to turn over to this sixteenth section and say that under it the eastern division company has made a default, because it has not; it has done exactly what the ninth section permitted it to do; and in doing that, of course, unless you say that the statute is nonsense, that the sections are contradictory, they cannot have made default.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one further question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I want to see if I understand the Senator's position correctly. The act of 1862 required the southern line to be so located as to enable this road to connect with it at a point one hundred miles from the Missouri river, or near that. Now, does the Senator claim that the ninth section of the act of 1864 relieves that road from the obligation to make such a location as would permit that connection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I do not claim either way upon that. I claim that the act of 1864 permitted the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, to do exactly what it has done; that is, to locate its line upon such a route as best pleased it to reach Denver, and that it still gave authority to the company now making this claim to connect with it east of the one hundredth meridian. If it is not for their interest to connect with a line going to swing so far to the south, they are not bound to connect with it. My friend seems to misunderstand the situation of the question by supposing that we were imposing an obligation in respect to this connection on either of these companies. We gave one permission to build on a route of its choice to Denver by the act of 1864 and the act of 1866, and we gave the other permission to connect with that route anywhere east of the one hundredth meridian. This company can connect with the line of the eastern division now if it does go to Denver on the route it is building. The trouble with this company is that it will not be so profitable to them to connect with this southwestern bend as with a northwestern bend as it supposes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This is the provision I referred to in the question I submitted to the Senator in the ninth section of the act of 1862:

"And said railroad through Kansas shall be so located between the mouth of the Kansas river, as aforesaid, and the aforesaid point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, that the several railroads from Missouri and Iowa, herein authorized to connect with the same, can make connection within the limits prescribed in this act, provided the same can be done without deviating from the general direction of the whole line to the Pacific coast."

Now, I had supposed that in this general plan this law made it obligatory on the lower company so to locate its road that the company now under discussion might make a connection. The question which I asked the Senator was whether the ninth section of the act of 1864 relieved that company of that obligation, allowed it to swing its entire line westward as far as it pleased, and thus defeat one purpose of the act of 1862—the purpose of a connection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend comes to a conclusion in putting his question which is not warranted by the fact. He says you thus defeat the connection that the act of 1862 authorized this present company to make. The fact is that it does not defeat the connection. The act of 1862 authorized the company now in question to connect at any point east of the one hundredth meridian, not at the end of one hundred miles. It might connect anywhere between the Missouri river and the one hundredth meridian. Now, the eastern division company stretches from the Missouri river to the one hundredth meridian, just as it would have done after the act of 1862, only it does not strike the one hundredth meridian at the same point of latitude that it would have done under the act of 1862, but it strikes it at a point further south. This company making this claim therefore has a perfect right, undoubtedly, by force of all these acts together, to swing down to any point east of the one hundredth meridian that it wishes to do, and connect with the line of the eastern division. There is nothing in the world to prevent it, except the fact that it will not pay.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The act of 1866 gives that authority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the act of 1864, I repeat to my friend from Indiana. The act of 1862, which he has correctly read, required the eastern division to connect with the Union Pacific on the one hundredth meridian; and, inasmuch as the location of the Union Pacific was at a certain point on the one hundredth meridian then, or was expected to be, just about where it is now, west of Omaha, it authorized this other company to strike this northwestern line, as it then would be connecting at the one hundredth meridian, at any point it pleased east of that, not at the limit of one hundred miles, or two hundred, or three hundred, but wherever it pleased. It gave a discretion to the central branch to connect anywhere. Now the act of 1864 comes in and declares that the principal branch line, the eastern division, need not connect with the Union Pacific at the end of its line, on the one hundredth meridian, but may swing on further west, and, therefore, it authorized it to cross the one hundredth meridian at any point it pleased, but it still gave the company my friend is speaking for the right to connect, and it has the right now. Nobody is trying to defeat that right; but the trouble and the cause of grievance is, that under this authority of the act of 1864 the eastern division has located its road so far to the south that the people who are making this claim upon our bounty do not find it to their advantage to make any connection. There is nothing in the law which hinders their connecting with it on the present line.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But the trouble is that the law and the geography taken together do not allow it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; but I do not know that we have in any of these acts undertaken to guaranty the geography of Kansas. All we have guarantied by the acts of 1862 and 1864, taken together, is authority for this eastern division to connect at Denver, or at any point west of the one hundredth meridian. And we, in the same act, have given authority to the central branch to connect with this eastern division at any point east of the one hundredth meridian. Now, it so happens that the principal line, under this authority, has located its road in such a condition that in point of geography, my friend says—but rather in point of profit, because there is nothing in geography that will hinder it except the fact that it will not be a paying enterprise—the central branch people do not want to connect, but they want to take up under the sixteenth section of the act of 1864 the privileges which they say, by the act of 1862, were granted to this other company of going northwest and having a double subsidy over the whole line. That is the sum and substance of it. I do not deny—because I have not the least feeling of hostility to these people, but the contrary; I only speak from a sense of duty to my constituents as a portion of the people who bear the burdens of this country—I do not deny that the result of the act of 1864 which all parties agreed to, and the location under it, has been unfortunate to the Central Branch Company; because by force of this act of 1864 the Eastern Division Company have located their road on a line where by the act of 1862 they could not have gone. But the answer to all that is, as far as it applies to us, very plain, that by force of this statute of 1864 we did not guaranty to the central branch people that the eastern division should go to the northwest rather than to the southwest. We only guarantied to the central branch people that the eastern division should exercise its own discretion as to where it would make its connections west, and therefore as to the route over which it should make its own connection west. That is all we did. And then there is this further answer—and I beg my friend from Indiana to bear it in mind—the fact is, as I get it from these people, that at the time the Central Branch Company were parties to the passage of this act they had invested no money, and would have had no right to complain if we had made any change that we pleased, and left them out entirely by the act of 1864. Their rights had not attached as they tell me.

Mr. HENDRICKS. When did they make their investment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Some time in the year 1865, unless I am very much mistaken. If I am informed afterward that I am mistaken I will correct it at once; but I am sure I cannot be, although it is some time ago since I was told about it. These are facts that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad ought to have furnished us with. I will say, with all respect to my friend from Michigan, that a matter of this importance ought not to be brought forward here and, when we are applying for information, we be told by the chairman that it is a subject on which they are not advised—matters that are material to us. I dare say it is not the fault of the chairman, but it is a mere oversight; but we ought to have known authoritatively from this committee, by a written report, the history of this work, so that we could judge whether there was any injustice done by the act of 1864; the history of it, so that we could judge what was done at the time of the passage of the act of 1866. I do not know how much money was spent then; we shall come to that. Sufficient for this present purpose is the fact that I state on information from the officers of this company, subject to correction if I turn out to be wrong, that when the act of 1864 was passed this company had not invested a dollar; that it had not lifted a spade; that it had not done anything which could have given it any rights against us if we had chosen to sweep away whatever of privileges we had given it before. Then we again begin with the act of 1864.

Mr. HOWARD. Does it make any difference as to the rights of the central branch whether it had commenced its work in 1864 or not?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should think it would make a great deal of difference. I think when an act of Congress provides, as all these acts do, that it shall be the subject of modification and repeal, having a just regard to the rights and interests of the persons upon whom it is to operate, it would make a great deal of difference with the propriety of our legislation in changing those rights, whether any of the privileges we had granted had been acted upon and money invested on the faith of them or not. I know it would in Vermont, and I think it would everywhere else; I think my friend from Michigan will agree that it should everywhere. No principle of law is plainer than that as it respects these corporation grants as to repealing or changing them. When a right has become vested and acted upon, and money invested upon the faith of it, it is unjust to make any change. If you have granted a mere naked right or license to go over the public lands or to receive subsidies from you, can you not revoke that right and revoke that subsidy if the party has not acted upon it? Most clearly you can, and nobody is injured and nobody has a right to complain.

So it stood in 1864; and now I will return to what I was saying when my friend from Iowa undertook to shorten my lucubrations by referring to the act of 1862. This was the condition of things when the act of 1866 was passed. Then the Eastern Division Company had authority already to make their connection at any point west of the one hundredth meridian. All that they applied for, and all that the act of 1866 gave them, was an extension of time within which they should file the designation of the route and the map of their road, as the law then required them to do. It says so in terms: "it is hereby authorized to designate the general route of their said road and to file a map thereof, as now required by law;" and in order to comply with the then requirements of the law, that is, the act of 1864, it gave them until the 1st day of December, 1866, putting on the careful proviso again that this should not in any sense be construed as giving them a right to claim any more bonds, but limiting, as I have said, their unlimited right to connect west of the one hundredth meridian, to a point fifty miles west of Denver. That is all the act of 1866 did. It did not authorize the Eastern Division Company, unless they had authority before, to swing their line anywhere. A great deal of talk has been made about the bad faith of the passage of the act of 1866; about its giving the right to the eastern division to run away from this central branch when they had no right to run away before, about its authorizing them to violate the sixteenth section of the act of 1864, so as to give the central branch the right to a subsidy for the whole three or four hundred miles.

When you turn to the act you find that there is nothing of the kind there, and that all the act does is to grant a mere extension of time for filing the designation of their route on the map of it as the law of 1864 required them to do in express terms. Then, so far as Congress is concerned, inasmuch as the act of 1864 was one to which all the parties agreed, and one which, at the time of its passage, did not act injuriously to this company, because it had not done anything or got any rights. I say that all the act of 1866 did was to leave the law of 1864 just as it stood except in the single particular that it extended the time of the Union Pacific, eastern division, for a few months and limited what was before an unlimited right to connect west. There is no bad faith in that.

It is an entire misconstruction to say that by the act of 1866 we gave up any right or obligation which we had as against the Union Pacific, eastern division, or which the central branch had. It is only, as I have said before, a misfortune of events, and not of legislation, which has injured this central branch company. It is the fact that the principal company that had the discretion by the act of 1864 found it wise to exercise that discretion in a way that was injurious to the central branch; but we cannot make that good, and it is preposterous to ask us to do it.

There is a little more about the passage of this act of 1866, Mr. President. It was shortly after I had the honor to become a member of this body, and I paid more attention to the debates at that time than I have done since, because they were fresh to me, and I confess that when the subject was under discussion at that time I had a little suspicion that there was something about the measure which in point of results would produce a schism afterward. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. POMEROY] I remember offered an amendment to the bill of 1866, which I will read. On a certain day in June of that year the bill was taken up on motion of the Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and the Chair stated the question to be on the amendment proposed by Mr. POMEROY, to add to the first section the following proviso:

"And provided further, That should the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, under the provisions of this act, file their map locating their road upon a different route from that indicated in their map heretofore filed in the Department of the Interior, then and in that event the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company, or their assigns being authorized to connect with the said railroad under the several acts to which this is an amendment, may be, and are hereby, authorized to continue their road westwardly from the point provided for in the aforesaid acts to a connection with the Union Pacific railroad at some point east of the one hundredth meridian of longitude, and for that purpose may have the same provisions and be subject to all the restrictions and limitations of the said Pacific railroad acts."

There was a distinct proposition to add to the bill of 1866 exactly what this company now asks for; that is in effect a double subsidy, leaving one subsidy to the Union Pacific, eastern division, to the one hundredth meridian, and giving by that amendment another subsidy in express terms to this company for the same distance. That was the proposition. The honorable chairman of the committee [Mr. HOWARD] said, in reply to that:

"It was intimated yesterday that the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Kansas required a further appropriation of money or of subsidies in order to carry it out. The amendment itself was never before the Committee on the Pacific Railroad; and that committee is in no sense responsible for the measure. If that be its effect, I most respectfully and earnestly suggest to the honorable Senator to withdraw the amendment, so far as this bill is concerned, because it must surely give rise to considerable discussion and loss of time, and present his amendment in the form of a separate measure, and let it be passed upon on its merits, if it has merits. It is quite sure that in the present state of things in this body there is danger of losing the whole bill if the Senator insists upon that amendment."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. POMEROY] responded:

"I did not suppose that this amendment would endanger the bill. My point was this: the road having been located in one valley in my State, and the land withdrawn from market, and parties having acquired interests there, great injustice would be done them unless some company were authorized to build a road there. I thought I would submit the matter fairly to the Senate. If the Senate conclude that no injustice will be done anybody, then, of course, they will vote the amendment down; but I wish it distinctly understood that parties have acquired rights under that location that they cannot be divested of, either by Congress or any other body, without repairing the damage. I thought that was so, and I believe it is so. If the Senator has read the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, which was submitted to the Attorney General and approved by him, he will see precisely the point I am aiming at."

The debate went on:

"Mr. HOWARD. I think I apprehend the point. The Senator cannot doubt that Congress will be entirely willing to do complete justice to all those individuals who may suffer pecuniarily in consequence of the passage of the bill now under consideration. I should be quite willing at all times to grant any relief which justice requires to those persons who have thus located in that region."

"Mr. POMEROY. If Congress is ready to make up for all those losses, there will be no difficulty."

"Mr. HOWARD. But I do not see the propriety, exactly, of incorporating such a provision as that in the bill now under consideration. It is in itself a separate and distinct proposition, and it ought to be so treated, as it strikes me."

"Mr. POMEROY. The Senator may not understand that this amendment is germane to the bill; but I do not agree with him on that point. This bill now proposes to change the location of the road—nothing else; but that is not the point I am objecting to. The point I am objecting to is, that when that is done, justice ought to be done to the parties who have taken it for granted, under the previous bill, that this road was to be located in the valley of the Republican."

"Mr. CONNESS. The provision of law now is, that the Pacific railroad, eastern division, shall be located through the valley of the Republican river, and the Senator from Kansas says that because of that provision many persons have bought the even sections of land of the Government, and paid the enhanced price of $2 50 an acre for them, and that if this bill shall pass authorizing the company to vary the route, to change the location to the valley of the Smoky Hill river, those settlers ought to be compensated by the Government, and not required to pay $2 50 an acre for their land."

"As suggested by the honorable chairman of the Pacific Railroad Committee, of course the Government will make such a provision if we pass this bill."

"But the best part of the proposition of the Senator from Kansas now comes in. He says that in lieu of the benefit that would thus be conferred upon the settlers, it is but fair to allow a company that the honorable Senator or his people have up there to extend their line so as to authorize them to join the Union Pacific railroad, and also to have bonds of the United States, at the rate of $16,000 per mile, in addition to lands. If there is any proposition settled, at least for this session, so far as the Pacific Railroad Committee of this body can settle it, it is that they will authorize no addition of bonds to be paid to any company building or engaged in building a branch of the Pacific railroad. That question has been deliberately examined upon a bill presented by the honorable Senator and urged by him, and the committee have reported upon it. Now I submit to him that the Senate cannot—of course he has a right to get a vote, and I hope he will get a vote upon it—the Senate cannot, at this session at least, authorize an addition of bonds to branches of the Pacific railroad such as is contemplated by his proposition."

Then the matter went over for awhile, but it came to be discussed again, when Mr. KIRKWOOD, of Iowa, said:

"I move to strike out the first section of the bill. I wish to correct the remarks of the Senator from Kansas. Do I understand him to say that if the bill as reported shall pass his understanding is that the road of which he spoke, running west from Hannibal, will have the right, under the existing law, to connect with the main trunk at the one hundredth meridian?"

"Mr. POMEROY. No, sir; not under the existing law. They have the right to connect on the Republican where this company filed their map, not at the one hundredth meridian."

"Mr. KIRKWOOD. Do I understand the Senator to say that they will have the right to connect at some place within the main stem of the road?"

"Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. KIRKWOOD. Where?"

"Mr. POMEROY. At a point on the Republican river about one hundred miles west from the Missouri river. They have located their line to that point and filed their map and issued their bonds."

"Mr. HENDERSON. Who has done that?"

"Mr. POMEROY. The assignees of the Hannibal and St. Joseph road."

Then the thing was further debated, pro and con, and we finally come to this result: Mr. POMEROY again said:

"Though the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company had the right to build a branch under the provisions of the act, they had to use a charter to be obtained from the Legislature of Kansas, from the fact that a company in one State could not be authorized even by an act of Congress to build in another State except with the consent of the State and by using a charter of that State. The laws say that they shall have land and bonds for only one hundred miles. It does not say that they shall not build any further, as the Senator seems to claim. This company located its road and filed its plat on the Republican. The Hannibal and St. Joseph road had notice then, and all the world had, that this company was going up the Republican."

He then proceeds to state the case, that they had gone out to connect, and then he says:

"That is why that company have been opposed to any change, because they were satisfied with the legislation as it was; and if the other route is taken, the Smoky Hill route, it requires further legislation to enable them to connect somewhere else."

Again, the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. POMEROY] after this debate that I have recited, withdrew the amendment that he offered, voluntarily. I have been informed, and it appears in fact from a remark that fell from the Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS], that at that time, in July, 1866, my friend from Kansas was the president of this very company. He represented the company on this floor. I do not speak of it in any offensive sense; it was perfectly proper that he should be the president of the company; but what I mean is, that my friend from Kansas was acting, as he rightfully might be so far as the debate went certainly—voting might be another question—for the interest of the company of which he was the president. He brought forward this question.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator means to say, I presume, that I was acting as a Senator from the State of Kansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I mean to say—and my friend will correct me if I am wrong—that in July, 1866, he was president of the Central Branch Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, I think I was nominally president of the company until a month or two after that. Since then I have had no interest in it whatever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not complaining of what my friend from Kansas did, because he did right as to presenting this question to the Senate then; but what I say is, that if there was a doubt on the construction of these statutes, if it was claimed by the Central Branch Company that this legislation of 1866 was going to operate injuriously to them in such a way as to give them a claim upon our justice or bounty, it was the duty of my friend from Kansas who had the interests of the road at heart and who had a knowledge of all its affairs, to propose the very amendment that he did. Now, what I complain of is—after having stated that my friend did his duty, I now come to my complaint—that that Senator, being the responsible organ and agent of the company, having stated what he claimed its rights to be at that time on this floor, voluntarily withdrew any objection to the passage of that bill of 1866 and withdrew his amendment, which provided for the very thing they want now, so as to let that bill pass, without telling us either that he gave up for the company the claim that they had or else that he should demand of us in the future this justice that he thought was denied.

Mr. POMEROY. For some reason, the Senator says, I withdrew the amendment. I will read the reason assigned at the time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What page is it? I was trying to find it.

Mr. POMEROY. Page 8256 of the Globe:

"I believe the pending question is on the amendment that I submitted. I have conversed with very many of the members of the Pacific Railroad Committee, and as they desire to report upon this proposition separately, not connected with this bill, I do not desire to press it against the wishes of the friends of this measure and of our railroads. I will therefore withdraw the amendment."

Mr. CONKLING. What day of the month was that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. June 19, 1866.

Mr. POMEROY. I will only add that when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] shall make his remarks, he will state to the Senate that he, as Secretary of the Interior, instructed me that the rights of this company would not be impaired by my withdrawing the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will take the evidence of the rights of the company from the officers of the Government in some more official way. If we can get at that, I should like to see that opinion of the Attorney General and the report of the Secretary of the Interior on this subject. It would be well worth studying, perhaps.

Now my friend from Kansas says that he withdrew this amendment, acting in the interest of his company, because, as he stated, the committee desired to report upon it separately. Let me read a little further in the same connection.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator will not say that in doing it I was acting in the interest of the company. I was acting as a Senator in the interest of my State. I was not here acting in the interest of any particular company; but I thought, for the interest of my State, it was best not to embarrass a bill which had for its object to build a line through the whole length of that State, and learning that it would not interfere with the rights of anybody else, I did withdraw the proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think if the Senator had told us on the 19th of June, 1866, that he had offered this amendment in the interest of the company of which he was president, and as a matter of justice to them, and that he withdrew it at the request of the committee, but that if that bill passed, his company whom he represented would demand the same justice of Congress that they are now demanding, there would have been quite a different result in the action of 1866. I say the members who voted for that act of 1866, or acted upon it at all, (and I do not remember which way I voted,) when this question was raised would have been very slow, as the chairman of the committee said, and as the Senator from California said, to report or recommend any bill which would have given any company a pretense of claiming any further subsidy in bonds. That was what appeared in the debate.

My friend says that he withdrew this amendment, acting in the interest of his State, in order to let the bill pass which could not have passed with it, because the committee were going to report upon it separately. Let me read what was said on that subject.

"Mr. POMEROY. For that reason, if that meets the concurrence and views of the friends of this measure and of the Pacific Railroad Committee, as I understand it does, I withdraw the amendment."

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment before the Senate is withdrawn."

"Mr. GRIMES. Am I correct in understanding the Senator from Kansas to say that the members of the Pacific Railroad Committee have informed him they will report back his proposition in an independent bill?"

"Mr. POMEROY. No, sir. I said they preferred to consider it as an independent measure. I did not say what they would report for, I do not know; they have not made their report yet. They may make it, and when they make it we shall be able to tell what it is."

Mr. POMEROY. They have made it now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes. Now, what I am complaining of, as I said before, and I trust gentlemen will not feel uneasy about it, is this extraordinary state of things: we had the other day, if I remember correctly, when the chairman of the committee got up this bill, a speech in its support from him, in which he characterized the legislation of 1866 as a gross outrage and injustice upon the rights of the company of which my friend from Kansas was the president, and it was to repair that injustice, to make amends for that outrage and wrong upon their rights that this legislation of 1868 was asked for; not that the general good of the country required that we should subsidize this local road, but that through the almost criminal misconduct of Congress in impairing the vested rights of the company of my friend from Kansas, we were bound to make it good as damages, compensation, restoring to them the rights that we had unjustly deprived them of; and then when I asked my friend from Michigan if he did not report this very bill of 1866, and if it did not go through under a debate managed by him, he coolly replied to me that he did not see what that had to do with the question!

I say we have a right to complain. I do not complain that a report of this kind was made in 1866 by my honorable friend from Michigan, because, as far as I can see, it was a report that did not alter the state of things, and was a proper and correct report. All that I complain of, in the proper and parliamentary way, is the fact that my friend is urging this bill with so much zeal to atone for the "outrage" of 1866! In that he is mistaken. There is the trouble about it. I say that when my friend from Michigan reported a bill from this same committee in 1866, which passed into a law, and the president of the company that is now supposed to have been affected by that, proposed an amendment which would have remedied that entirely, but which would have cost the Government $2,500,000 to do it, and voluntarily withdrew that amendment and suffered the bill to pass, it is with bad grace that that company come forward to demand compensation for an injustice done to them, because we cannot come to any other conclusion than that that injustice, if it was one, was done by their voluntary consent. It is true my friend from Kansas is a Senator and represents his State. It is also true that as the president of the company he must have had knowledge that that bill was under consideration. Of course he had, and as such his company was charged with knowledge of it; as such he rightfully and properly brought forward an amendment which would do all that he now claims the company have a right to ask. That is all perfectly right; but what I say is that it is unjust now to insist upon our passing this bill and giving this company $2,500,000, when the other bill which they complain of as an outrage was suffered to go through this body by the voluntary assent of the responsible organs and officers of the company. That is the proposition, and I think it will be difficult for Senators to answer it.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator may not have understood me. I said that after consulting with the committee and the Secretary of the Interior, being informed first that the committee desired, as I said, to report the measure in a separate bill, and being informed by the Secretary of the Interior that that bill did not deprive this company of their rights, I withdrew the amendment. That is the point. The committee have now reported a separate bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not alter the question at all, so far as this bill is concerned. We find that the Kansas company, the local road of which my friend is the president and responsible organ, for reasons that are satisfactory to itself, induces its Senator, the Senator of its State, who properly represents its interests as one of his constituents, to withdraw any objection to the passage of the bill of 1866 that is now characterized as an outrage. I say if it is an outrage now it was an outrage then. That is my proposition.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the Senator is not intending to make any mistake or to say that I in any measure represent this company. Thirty or thirty-five days after that another president was elected, and I have no connection with it; that is, I have no material interest in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You mean you are now only a director, and not the president.

Mr. POMEROY. Yes; I own one share I believe; but I mean that I have no personal interest in the matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That perhaps is quite immaterial, except of course on the mere voting question, though my friend will judge for himself about that. But so far as the interests of the company are concerned, I am sure they have a sufficient number of friends who will protect them. The Pacific Railroad Company has become the friend of this company, although it was not in the year 1866.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one matter which I suppose the Senate would like to understand; and that is, when this act of 1866 was passed, how many miles of this railroad had actually been built, and how much money had actually been expended on this road.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I tried to ascertain that from the chairman of the committee when the bill was up before, but without success.

Mr. POMEROY. I can tell you.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it.

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me—

Mr. SHERMAN. I mean at the time when the "outrage" commenced.

Mr. HOWARD. At the time of the passage of the law of 1866, I understand the Senator from Ohio to say—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Howe in the chair.) Does the Senator from Vermont yield the floor; and if so, to whom?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not yield. I will hear an explanation from the chairman of the committee. Such as my friend from Ohio wants.

Mr. HOWARD. I am not able to give any precise information as to the amount expended at that time; but I am credibly informed about a million dollars; I think between one and two million dollars at the time of the passage of the act of 1866—not at the time of the passage of the act of 1864, which was the question the Senator from Vermont put. They had been at work for two years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many miles had been built in 1866, when this act passed?

Mr. HOWARD. I am not able to say.

Mr. POMEROY. Forty had been accepted by the Government at that time, I understand, and about sixty built. I think that was about it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On that point I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan, if the Senator of Vermont will allow me, whether this $1,000,000 of which he speaks was $1,000,000 expended by the company of their own money or $1,000,000 which they realized from the Government bonds and subsidies?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly they could not have realized it from the subsidy, because the subsidy papers had not yet been issued to them. They probably raised it by first mortgage bonds in part. I do not know how much stock they had actually paid in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask of my friend from Michigan how much stock money has actually been paid now into this company?

Mr. HOWARD. As I am not a member of the company, and have nothing to do with it at all in its private matters, I do not see that that is a very reasonable question to put to me. I am not presumed to know how much stock has been paid in by each individual stockholder.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you know, whether you presume to know or not?

Mr. HOWARD. I will not answer the question, because I think it is one I cannot be expected to answer.

Mr. POMEROY. I will answer it. I can tell.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I decline to yield to my friend from Kansas, as I have not finished with the Senator from Michigan. This is a singular state of things. Here is a committee, one of the most influential and respectable and responsible of this body, that report a bill here based upon an equity, as they say, in favor of this company, on account of its having been led into an expenditure which now will go for nothing unless we can relieve them, on account of our legislation in 1866. In the course of the debate it becomes material to inquire how much this company have been led in; how much they have expended really of money that the United States have not furnished them with, or they have not got on the strength of property the United States granted to them in land; and we ask my honorable friend, the chairman of the committee, and he says that is a matter foreign to him, and he declines to answer the question. There is no power, certainly, in any individual member to compel my friend to answer the question; and I should be the last man to try to exercise it if there were.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator desires to know, I can tell him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not just yet. I want to ask a question which I think the chairman of the committee will answer. May I inquire of him, if he is willing to answer, how much money has been raised upon the bonds of this company, upon the road?

Mr. HOWARD. I am not able to say how much has been raised upon the bonds of the road.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much has the road cost altogether?

Mr. HOWARD. I will answer in part these specific interrogatories which the Senator from Vermont puts to me. He seems to act as if he was interrogating the committee on a bill of discovery in which there was some fraud hidden or some concealment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; I merely want to know the facts.

Mr. HOWARD. I refer to the general air and manner of the Senator. Now, sir, the amount of Government bonds issued to this company, as certified by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 15th of June instant, is $640,000. They had the right under their charter to issue precisely the same amount of first mortgage bonds. Whether they have actually done that, I do not know; but the presumption would naturally be that they had done so. That is all I can say in answer to the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are not likely to get much information, evidently, from the committee as to the condition of this company.

Perhaps the committee are right, or the chairman is right, in supposing that the condition of this company, what it has done with its means, how much it has advanced on the credit of our bonus, is entirely immaterial to this question, and that this equity that is now pressed on our attention is one that depends upon some more fanciful and imaginative theory than the hard and naked fact of money advanced upon the strength of this legislation; and so we must endeavor to get along in the dark, so far as the committee is concerned, as well as we can. I should have supposed, when a company came before the committee and desired legislation of this character, that one of its first steps under the direction of the committee would have been to make a plain, straightforward, and honorable showing of what it had done with the $1,500,000 that it had received from the United States; how much money it had raised upon the Government bonds; how much stock it had actually paid in; how much money it had expended in the construction of the road; and generally what its financial condition was, in order to show fairly to those who were to pass laws for its benefit that it had an equity; that it had expended money in good faith under this legislation; that it had taken all the steps that the law authorized it to take, and had made no improper use of the funds that had been bestowed upon it; and to show that without this legislation it would be left in a condition in which it might justly complain. But it appears that the committee did not take any such view of it; perhaps the company is not to blame for it; and all that we are favored with in the way of information is exactly what is contained on the face of the bill; and that is, a bill to give to this company $2,400,000 of United States bonds for a supposed outrage—and I think I use the very language my friend from Michigan did the other day—that we committed by the act of 1866 in authorizing the Eastern Division Company to file its designation of route and its maps by the 1st day of December, 1866; because that is all we did.

Mr. POMEROY. Does the Senator desire any information about what has been paid in by this company? I will answer at any time, if he desires it; but I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that my friend from Kansas is a member of the committee.

Mr. POMEROY. No, sir; but the Senator asked, "Can any one tell?" I say I can.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it, certainly, as I do not wish to do this company any injustice.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to state in a single word what was true up to 1866. For the last two years I know nothing about it. But on their own stock, on the stock subscribed, the amount paid in then was three hundred and sixty-odd thousand dollars. What they have done since, I do not know. I know they pay in a great deal. But up to that time, that is two years ago, when I did know something about it, they had paid in three hundred and sixty-odd thousand dollars of their own stock subscribed by the company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it would be much cheaper if there were an equity here, a demand on our justice, to refund this $360,000 or $500,000, if that be the amount these gentlemen have now really advanced, and let the Government take the railroad for a Government military one, to carry supplies out to the Kansas Indians and the troops, than it would be to authorize the building of two hundred miles more, and giving $2,500,000 for that. If the business of that country, in the State of Kansas—for Senators must bear in mind the road is there and nowhere else—is not enough to warrant the building of a line of railroad where this line of railroad wants to go, then it appears to me that it is rather an unwise business for Congress to undertake to prop it up by subsidizing it. The theory of these subsidies is that Congress has a second mortgage on the property for the amount of the subsidy, and that therefore the road—inasmuch as the company may make a first mortgage for the same amount—ought when done to be worth double the amount of the subsidy; and if the road will not pay expenses when built, if it will not pay a profit on its stock when built in the interest of its stockholders in the State of Kansas, how can we be asked to furnish subsidies for building it? The theory upon which we have furnished subsidies so far has been that we were aiding in the construction of a line of immense magnitude, which was to bind the distant parts of the country together; and as such that theory was probably sustainable. But here, without undertaking to stop any of the lines we authorized to build westward for this connection, it is proposed to add one more branch from the one hundredth meridian, entirely in the State of Kansas, subject to the laws of Kansas, existing under the laws of Kansas.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator may not be aware that if this road is built any further it will be built in the State of Nebraska, and not in Kansas; it is now up to the Kansas line.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It goes into Nebraska. I do not see that that helps it. If this line of road in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, going out to the main line, in addition to the lines already existing, will not pay, if it is not worth anything, why is it that we are asked to put up our money in aid of its construction? It is not a national line, if it does go into both of these States; it is not a Pacific line; it is a local line, to which we were induced to give a subsidy for one hundred miles in the first place under the condition that we should never be called upon to give any more; and now it comes forward and says that, because we extended to the 1st of December, 1866, the time of this other line to file its designation of route and its plat of survey, there has thereby been committed an outrage upon the company, in the language of the chairman of the committee, that we are bound to make good with $2,500,000 more.

As I said, Mr. President—and I do not want to take any more time about this matter—I began to investigate this case, listening to the accounts of its friends, who are gentlemen of respectability; and I do not blame them for getting the money if they can. I began it with a sincere desire, because they were persons introduced to me by friends of mine, to help them if I could justly and conscientiously; but the more I studied, the more I looked at it in one aspect and another, listening to the very accounts that those who urge it proceed upon, the more I am convinced that it has no ground of equity or law or justice upon which they have a right to claim it. If they can satisfy the Senate that great public considerations, such as induced these other subsidies, should lead to our aiding in the finishing of this line, that is one thing; but all I have said upon it depends upon the claim upon which it is made to rest by the chairman of the committee as merely a remedy which we are bound to apply for the outrage that we committed two years ago, when, if we committed any outrage at all, we did it with the eyes of the company wide open, in the presence of its president here assenting to it without any protest.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, I am very much gratified that the Senator from Vermont has informed the Senate that this is a subject that can be comprehended by a person who is not a lawyer. I therefore have some hope of presenting a statement of the case so clearly that those who, like myself, make no great pretensions to knowledge of the law, may comprehend it.

I think I shall be justified in saying, also, without being subject to the charge of egotism, that I regard this as one of the very few subjects that I believe I understand quite as well as the Senator who has just taken his seat; and I do not intend any personal reflection when I say that, as it seems to me, he has perverted the facts and grossly misstated the law.

Mr. President, in the first place let us refer to the law of 1862, which provided that a railroad and certain branches should be constructed, forming a through and connected line of uniform gauge from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean. This law provided that this work should be constructed by four distinct companies; one chartered by the law itself, called the Union Pacific Railroad Company. That was charged with constructing the line from the one hundredth meridian to the eastern boundary of California, and eastward from the one hundredth meridian to some point on the western border of Iowa. Another company, the California Central Railroad Company, I think it was styled, was charged with constructing that part of the line lying between the Pacific coast and the eastern border of California. A company now known as the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, was charged with building that part of the work lying between the mouth of the Kansas river at Kansas City, on the western border of Missouri, up the valley of the Kansas river, in a northwestern direction, and up the valley of the Republican river, being a branch of the Kansas, to the one hundredth meridian, the starting point of the main-trunk line. And still another company was charged with constructing that part of this work lying between the town of Atchison, on the Missouri river, and the valley of the Republican river, supposed to be about one hundred miles in length, and so named and limited in the law.

Now, I desire to read the exact text of the law of 1862, in order that we may comprehend the character of the work thereby authorized and the difficulties that immediately arose in carrying into effect the provisions of this law. The first clause I will read is in section nine:

"And said railroad through Kansas shall be so located between the mouth of the Kansas river, as aforesaid, and the aforesaid point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, that the several railroads from Missouri and Iowa, herein authorized to connect with the same, can make connection within the limits prescribed in this act, provided the same can be done without deviating from the general direction of the whole line to the Pacific coast."

I will read in this connection from the twelfth section of the act of 1862:

"The whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one connected and continuous line."

It is also provided that—

"The route in Kansas west of the meridian of Fort Riley, to the aforesaid point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, to be subject to the approval of the President of the United States, and to be determined by him on actual survey."

It will be observed that it was the intention of Congress in passing this law that this road and branches should be operated as one through line. The law says that the road and its branches shall be operated as one connected, continuous line from the Missouri river to the Pacific coast; it provides that these branches shall be so located as to enable each of them to make a connection within the limits specified; and in order that one of these companies should not defraud or obstruct another company in the location of its road, so as to derive advantages from this connection, the final power to locate was put in the President of the United States, and he was authorized, if necessary, to do this on an actual survey of these lines. I am admonished by my friend from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] that this law is mandatory; the President is required to do it.

It was the intention, therefore, as it seems to me beyond all cavil and doubt, that each of these branches and the trunk line should be so built as to connect and be operated together as one road. Another provision in the law requires that the gauge shall be uniform of the main line and the branches from the Missouri river to the Pacific coast. Now for the difficulty of carrying into effect this law; and I shall pass over the points of difficulty except that which seems to me to be directly pertinent to the question raised here in the Senate. The seventeenth section of this law provided—from the Missouri river to the navigable waters of the Sacramento river, in California, by the 1st day of July, 1876, the whole of all said railroads before mentioned and to be constructed under the provisions of this act, together with all their furniture, fixtures, rolling stock, machine-shops, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and property of every kind and character, shall be forfeited to and be taken possession of by the United States."

"That if said roads are not completed, so as to form a continuous line of railroad, ready for use,

Here are four distinct companies authorized to build some parts of this work; it is required to be completed within a given time; and if each branch and the whole road shall not be completed and operated within the time limited the whole of the property of each and all the companies is to be forfeited to the United States. Under that law these companies did just so much as was necessary for them to claim that rights attached; but as the Senator from Vermont has very properly stated, neither of these companies invested much money. They did just so little as was practicable in order to secure the right to construct the road, and came to Congress pointing out this difficulty, among others, that if one of these four companies should be in default at the end of the time named, although each of the other companies might complete its part of its work, yet the companies not in default, as well the company in default, would forfeit all the money they had invested. They asked Congress to remedy this defect, to remove this barrier. They told us that they could not induce capitalists to invest money in this way, placing it beyond the control of the company in which the capital was to be invested. The Committee on the Pacific Railroad attempted to cure this among other defects which it is not necessary for me to refer to on this occasion, by providing first that each and all of these companies might consolidate, and in that way become one company, so that the interests of all should be merged in one organization, and in that way, if possible, obviate this difficulty.

But as they supposed Congress had not the power to compel these companies to thus consolidate, they provided that if any of these companies should not thus consolidate, and if any one of them should fail to build that part of the work assigned to it within the time named, any other company building its part of the work within the time specified might proceed to build that part which the first-named company had failed to construct.

Senators will perceive that the whole purpose of this section, section sixteen of the act of 1864, was to enable any one of these companies should it be a single company, to go on and build this work if each and all the other three should fail. The only question is whether Congress did thus provide. They intended to do so; and if Senators will read that section of the law of 1864 I think they will find that it is clearly provided that any company not being in default, after having constructed its part of the road, may proceed to build any part of the line which any other company may have failed to build.

This is as the law stood in 1866. It is manifest, it seems to me, that if the act of 1866 had not been passed, there would have been no necessity for this bill. If the Eastern Division Railroad Company had on its own motion diverted from the line of the Republican river, there could be no doubt in the case. I may observe here that that was the line on which they had located their route. They had filed their plat in the Department of the Interior showing the line of the road. So had the Atchison and Pike's Peak Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company's branch line to the western border of Iowa. These maps had been filed, showing the lines of these branches, had become a part of the record, and each company had been investing its money with a view to form the connections at the general points indicated.

The Eastern Division Railroad Company concluded that it would be to their interest to change the route of their road from the Republican to the valley of the Smoky Hill river, and they applied to the Interior Department for that purpose. The question of their right to relocate their line so as to build the road in another direction, breaking up the connections that had been formed under the previous action of the other companies, was referred to the Attorney General, and he held, as I think very properly, that the company had not the right then to change its location; the time had passed when it had the legal right to do so. Hence if the law of 1866 had not been passed, and the Eastern Division Railroad Company had failed to build that part of the line between the western terminus of the Atchison line and the one hundredth meridian, as it seems to me no Senator will contend that this company would not have had the right, after completing its one hundred miles, to take up the work at the end of that hundred miles and secure its connection at the one hundredth meridian or east thereof.

The only objection urged against this, if I understand my honorable friend from Vermont, was that in the law of 1862 there is a provision that this Atchison Railroad Company should in no event receive lands and subsidy for more than one hundred miles. I confess I was surprised at the labored manner of the delay on this clause of section thirteen of the law of 1862. That section provides, first, that the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company may build a road from St. Joseph, by way of Atchison, toward the valley of the Republican river for the distance of one hundred miles next west of the Missouri river, and grants lands and subsidy for that distance. Then a proviso is added:

"Provided, That if actual survey shall render it desirable, the said company may construct their road, with the consent of the Kansas Legislature, on the most direct and practicable route west from St. Joseph, Missouri, so as to connect and unite with the road leading from the western boundary of Iowa at any point east of the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, or with the main trunk road at said point; but in no event shall lands or bonds be given to said company, as herein directed, to aid in the construction of their said road for a greater distance than one hundred miles."

It will be seen that here is a grant made which is put in the alternative. The company may build one hundred miles of road west of the Missouri river, from Atchison westward, or they may, if the Legislature of Kansas will permit it, build the road directly west from St. Joseph, but even in that case they shall only have lands and subsidy for one hundred miles; they shall have no more lands and no more bonds if they shall adopt the latter named line than if they adopt and build on the first-named line. That is all, as it seems to me, there is in this section; and be it observed that is the law of 1862. It is claimed that under the law of 1862 this company could have built the line up the valley of the Republican river if the Eastern Division Railroad Company had failed. It was to cure that inability that the law of 1864 was enacted. That was one of the things complained of. The Atchison Company said, "We may build our road and the Eastern Division Company may not build theirs; we shall then be left with the western terminus of our road out on the prairie without any connection; the money we thus invest will become worthless; we desire to have some provision put in the law that will enable us by putting in more money to realize the proper returns from the construction of this road if the Eastern Division Company should fail;" and the law of 1864 was enacted to cure this defect and give them this right, and as I think no Senator will maintain that they would not have had that right unquestionably if the law of 1866 had not been enacted.

Mr. President, you must construe a law in connection with the facts as they exist at the time of the enactment of the law. At the time of the law of 1864 the line of the road of the Eastern Division Company had been located up the valley of the Kansas river and the valley of the Republican river, and within a very short distance of what turns out to be the end of one hundred miles from the town of Atchison, on the Missouri river, affording the Atchison road an opportunity to connect. The law of 1862 provided that their final and definite location should be under the control of the President of the United States, and that he should provide that they should be so located as to secure this connection. Then the law of 1864 comes in and provides that if the Eastern Division Railroad Company shall not build that part of their line lying between the end of their road and the one hundredth meridian, the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company may do so; that is, they may put in additional money, and in this way secure from loss their former investment.

The Senator from Vermont maintains, however, that under the law of 1864 this Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, had the right to form its junction with the main trunk line at a point west of the one hundredth meridian; but he failed to notice the fact that the law of 1862 provides that the beginning of the trunk line shall be on the one hundredth meridian between the north border of the valley of the Platte and the south border of the valley of the Republican, and provides that the Eastern Division Railway Company's line shall be so located as to connect with the end of the line of the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company.

After forming that connection, it would become impossible from topographical reasons, for them to fail to go in through this gate-way between the southern border of the valley of the Republican and the northern border of the valley of the Platte; and the intention of the committee, as I well remember it to have been, was to provide for the contingency of its being found inconvenient to bridge the Platte river on the one hundredth meridian, or east of it, so as to form this junction. It was supposed it might be found to their advantage to build a few miles westward in order to obtain a better crossing of the river, either for the main-trunk line, if it should conclude to cross to the south side of that river, or if it should continue up on the north side it might be more convenient for the Eastern Division Company to build a few miles westward in order to secure a proper place for a bridge for a crossing at that very difficult stream, for every one acquainted with it knows it is one of the most difficult rivers to bridge perhaps in existence. So it was provided that they might do so, but in that case they should have no additional lands or bonds for that part of their line west of the one hundredth meridian.

Mr. President, these facts as they exist and the law, as it seems to me, perfectly harmonize with the construction I place upon the rights of this Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, now known as the Central Branch Pacific Railroad Company. The Eastern Division Railroad Company did not disguise their purpose; they came here with an open hand and open heart; they told the members of this committee plainly their purpose was not to form a connection with the main-trunk line, but to build off in a southwestern direction. They attempted to deceive nobody. They asked for just enough legislation to enable them to do this; and as the facts then existed and as the law then stood, all that was necessary to be done was for Congress to grant them the right to relocate their line. Previously it had been located within the proper connecting distance of the western terminus of the Atchison and Pike's Peak railroad. They got the right from Congress to relocate the line, and relocating the line they placed it where they told the committee they intended to place it. No Senator can be ignorant of the fact that they stated here openly and in the newspapers to everybody that they had found gold on the Smoky Hill river, and they thought the timber was more abundant; they thought had they secured a better line on which to construct their road.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to ask whether I understood him correctly on one point? Do I understand that this Eastern Division Company stated to the committee, at the time they applied for this change or for the law that was passed in 1866, that they did not design to join the main trunk, but to locate in a different direction?

Mr. HARLAN. Perhaps I may have uttered it a little too strongly. They did not disguise it from me, and I think they did not from anybody. They published in the newspapers their reasons for desiring the change.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We never heard it stated in Congress when the bill was up that there was any such design.

Mr. HARLAN. The law itself provides that they may so locate their road as to form a connection fifty miles west of Denver?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a connection with the main trunk there. Now, the idea that they did not desire at that time to join the main trunk, but to go off south, is news to Congress.

Mr. HARLAN. It may be that they never said in words that that was not their purpose. I think it was their purpose then to build a branch road.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They either concealed it from the committee, or else the committee concealed it from Congress.

Mr. HARLAN. I was not a member of Congress at that time. I do not wish anybody else to be held responsible for any utterance of mine; I only state the facts as they came to my knowledge, giving my source of information; and if any one will read the law of 1866, in connection with a knowledge of the topography of the country, he must know that it was the intention not to unite with the main trunk line ever.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What, then, is that language put in the law requiring a connection at a point not over fifty miles beyond Denver?

Mr. HARLAN. A distance of fifty miles west of Denver puts it west of the Rocky mountains, and anybody acquainted with the topography of the country must know that they never intended to build a branch road two thirds of the way across the western half of this continent for the purpose of uniting with the trunk line Pacific railroad. It was not a doubtful question to me at least, that the purpose was from the beginning to build to Santa Fé, and cross down into New Mexico and Arizona—a work by the way, I think, far more important to them and to the country than to build a mere branch road to the city of Denver, or uniting with the Pacific railroad west of that point. It would be a reflection on their own sagacity and their own common sense to suppose that they ever intended to build this main line so as to become a mere branch to the Union Pacific railroad proper. I do not see how it is possible that any man of ordinary intelligence could have been misled by the character of the bill. But, then, if any one had examined the law carefully, he would have seen, as it seems to me, that if Congress authorized this company to change the location of its road so as to break up the connection formed with it by the other companies, they thereby defeated the object of the law of 1864, for that was to enable each one of these companies to invest its money safely, so that it should not be under the necessity of losing all the money it had put into the construction of any part of this work if another company failed, but might, by adding thereto, make the whole investment profitable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why can they not connect now?

Mr. HARLAN. It would cost the United States probably just as much to enable them to connect with this Santa Fé road as with the other; but their purpose never was to go to Santa Fé. Their purpose is that indicated in the laws of 1862 and 1864, to build a branch of the Union Pacific railway directly across the continent to San Francisco.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose this act of 1866 really tells the truth, as we thought it did when we passed it, that the eastern division was going to Denver, or some place near Denver, what is the practical difficulty in the line you are speaking for connecting with it now?

Mr. HARLAN. I suppose it would require about the same length of road to form a proper connection with that line which would be necessary to form a connection with the main line.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How far is it from the end of the one hundred miles to Fort Riley?

Mr. HARLAN. I do not remember.

Mr. RAMSEY. About one hundred and fifty miles.

Mr. HARLAN. If it is one hundred and fifty miles, it is the same distance provided for in the pending bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Minnesota, who lives about as far off Fort Riley as I do, will look at the map I think he will find it is about four hundred and fifty miles.

Mr. RAMSEY. I only live four or five hundred miles from it, and the Senator lives as many thousands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How far would it be directly west in the line of this present road before it would hit the route of the eastern division but for the act of 1866?

Mr. HARLAN. I suppose it would not hit it this side of China. The eastern division road diverges off southwest.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "But for the act of 1866," I said.

Mr. HARLAN. I remarked during the Senator's absence from his seat, that an examination of the map would show that it was practicable to form the connection in one hundred miles.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But you say you have built it one hundred miles under the act of 1864. Now, projecting it from there west, how far would you have to go before you hit the eastern division if it had been located under the act of 1864?

Mr. HARLAN. Not an inch; because the law, as I read from the text itself, provides that the President shall so locate these lines of road as to form a connection within the distance specified, and authorizes him to employ the necessary engineer force in order to obtain information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you understand that that means that the distance specified is within one hundred miles, or east of the one hundredth meridian?

Mr. HARLAN. The "distance specified" between what points?

Mr. EDMUNDS. East of the one hundredth meridian. The statute does not mean that the connection is to be formed within the one hundred miles, but that they are to have a subsidy for one hundred miles and form a connection east of the meridian of longitude specified, the one hundredth meridian. I think my friend will come to that opinion himself if he will look at the statute.

Mr. HARLAN. No, Mr. President, the Senator is as much in error as he was when he contradicted me when I attempted to correct him while he was on the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just about. I agree with you as to that.

Mr. HARLAN. I have read the text of the law itself. I will read it again:

"Said railroad through Kansas shall be so located between the mouth of the Kansas river, as aforesaid, and the aforesaid point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude."

That is, the eastern division road shall be so located—

"that the several railroads from Missouri and Iowa, herein authorized to connect with the same, can make connection within the limits prescribed in this act, provided the same can be done without deviation from the general direction of the whole line to the Pacific coast."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does my friend understand that to mean that all those roads have got to connect within one hundred miles, or inside of the one hundredth meridian?

Mr. HARLAN. No, sir; and the question itself indicates the want of information of the Senator. Another clause in this law provides that a branch railroad, which I have referred to before, may be built from Sioux City so as to form a connection with the main trunk line at the one hundredth meridian or east thereof.

The law of 1864 provides that the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company may build a branch railway from the mouth of the Platte river westward, so as to form a connection with one or the other of these lines. Then another clause of the law of 1862 provides that a branch road may be built from the city of Leavenworth to the town of Lawrence; but on that line there are no lands or bonds given as subsidy, and there are no bonds given on the Burlington branch road.

Here, then, are six branch roads: one going up the valley of the Kansas river, now known as the Eastern Division Railroad Company; one from the city of Leavenworth to Lawrence; the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company; the Burlington line; the Omaha line, and the Sioux City line. Subsidies in bonds, however, were to be given conditionally to the Sioux City line, and positively only to three of these branches, what is now known as the Omaha branch, the branch west from Atchison, and the branch up the Kansas river. So the Senator will see that I am not wrong, and he is. The law was intended to enable the President to control each of the companies so as to bring their several branch roads in connection with the main trunk line or with each other within the limits named.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask my friend again whether he understands by the language he read that all these roads which he speaks of are to have connection within one hundred miles, or whether the word "limits" means within the limits of the one hundredth meridian?

Mr. HARLAN. It cannot mean anything else than that this Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company shall have this connection within one hundred miles, and that the other branch roads shall have their connection with the main trunk at the one hundredth meridian, or with some one of the branch lines at a point east of the one hundredth meridian.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How can my friend maintain that construction when the very same word is applied to all of them, and the very language of the act is that all these roads shall have an opportunity to connect with the eastern division within the limits named. Must you not apply the word "limits" to all of them alike? Can he say that as to one of them it means inside the one hundredth meridian, and as to others it means within one hundred miles?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, sir; because as to one of them the exact number of miles is named in the law, and as to the others the exact distance is left to subsequent survey, which will result from the topography of the country and the interests of construction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend be kind enough to read that part of it which relates to the one hundred miles?

Mr. HARLAN. I have read it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does it speak of anything only a subsidy of one hundred miles?

Mr. HARLAN. That is all; that a subsidy should be granted for only one hundred miles. I am sorry my friend did not listen to that part of my remarks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does not the charter of the Atchison and Pike's Peak railroad, now called the central branch, provide for building a road from Atchison to Pike's Peak across the whole State of Kansas?

Mr. HARLAN. That may be so. The Senator is doubtless quite as well informed on that subject as I am. The charter received by this company from the State of Kansas may authorize them to build a road to Pike's Peak, which means, I think, Denver.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If when that act was passed this company was authorized to build across the whole State of Kansas, and the law said it should have a subsidy for only one hundred miles, how does the Senator reason it out that the word "limits" there, when applied to where it shall make the connection, refers to the subsidy and, not to the distance provided by the charter?

Mr. HARLAN. It seems to me the answer.

is very plain; they have the right under the law of the United States to build one hundred miles—

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have a right to the subsidy, not a right to build at all.

Mr. HARLAN. They may have additional and other rights under the law of Kansas. It is not material to the solution of this question whether they have or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does my friend maintain that Congress gives the Atchison and Pike's Peak road authority to build anywhere in the State of Kansas, or does the act of Congress only say that if they do build they shall have a subsidy for one hundred miles?

Mr. HARLAN. The exact location of the line of their road may be controlled by the charter that they derive from the Legislature of Kansas; but that does not affect the question now pending. We confer on this and other companies certain rights. We have an object in it. We desire a through line. We desire that each of these branches shall form a connection with the main trunk line for the purpose of carrying the freights of the United States; and we provide that if they do not form this connection, do not build a road so that the main road and the branches can be worked as one continuous line they shall forfeit all the money they invested. In the face of that fact the Senator comes here and asks if it was the intention of Congress to control the location of the line of that road.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir. I asked the Senator if he supposed that Congress undertook to grant any authority to build a road in the State of Kansas, or if Congress only undertook to aid a road which, under the authority of Kansas, should be built.

Mr. HARLAN. I must be supposed by the Senator to be duller than I think myself. I will not enter into the constitutional question whether the United States can charter a railroad company within the limits of a State. I have heard very learned arguments on that subject upon this floor, but I have never participated in them for obvious reasons. The Senator himself may be quite competent to argue that question, but it is not pertinent to the issue now before the Senate. The question is what did Congress intend by the law of 1864? Did Congress intend to enable this company to invest its money safely? It could not do so without being provided with a connection with the main trunk line, or the line of the Eastern Division Company, and to give them that right of connection the sixteenth section of the law of 1864 was enacted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, if my friend will permit me to interrupt him for a moment, I wish to remind him that I did not open to him a constitutional question. I merely inquired of him as to the purport of the act of Congress, whether we undertook to confer on this company authority to take private property and build a road; or whether, taking up the company as we found it already authorized by the law of Kansas to build a road, we provided that we would give it a subsidy in case it should make a certain connection. Then I wish to ask him whether, alluding to the word "limits" in the law, this connection could not be just as well made if the eastern division went up the valley of the Republican by extending this road more than one hundred miles until it should strike that road, as well as to have this road bend so far to the east that it should strike it exactly at the point of one hundred miles? That is what I wish to get at.

Mr. HARLAN. If the Senator will turn his attention to the seventeenth section of the act of 1862 he will ascertain what the purpose of the act of 1864 was in this respect, as I read during, I think, his absence from his seat. It is provided that if this main trunk line and branches are not built within the time specified so as to form a connected line, they are to forfeit all the money they invest.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All the rights the United States gives them; not the State rights, I take it.

Mr. HARLAN. That may be so as a question of law; I shall not attempt to solve that question. The fact is here on the face of the law, if the Senator will turn his attention to it, that the law of 1864 was enacted to enable these companies to safely invest their money to avoid that necessary forfeiture growing out of the default of one of the other companies over which they had no control. It cannot be contended, it seems to me, by any fair-minded man that that was not the intention of the law, if he will examine the seventeenth section of the act of 1862 and compare it with the sixteenth section of the act of 1862. That being the intention of the law, then the practical question arises whether the facts that now exist justify this company in claiming the right to form that connection. Had the act of 1866 never been passed, and had the Eastern Division Railroad Company failed to build on that line, they unquestionably would have had that right, to save the money previously invested in the one hundred miles of road, by making an additional investment in the construction of the remaining part so as to secure a connection with the main trunk line. Then if under the act of 1866 they are deprived of this right, they are deprived of it by the act of Congress, which, so far as they are concerned, is equivalent to the act of God, for they have no power to control the act of this body except through the influence of reason.

Mr. President, if this were a question arising between great and powerful nations instead of the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, composed of a few private citizens and the United States, if it were the Government of France or England or Russia, whose equitable or legal rights were being trifled with, a Power capable of vindicating its rights, of coercing nations that should attempt to trample upon them, would anybody for a moment hesitate to come to the conclusion that Congress would grant them what was intended by the law of 1864? But here are a few private citizens who happen to have a few thousand dollars in money, and the Government can take these rights from them if it chooses. They have no means of redress, as I suppose. They do not choose to attempt the use of any other means of redress than the power of reason and appeal to conscience, and hence they are here.

They say: "Under the law of 1864 we have invested our money in good faith; you promised us a connection with the eastern division railroad; you directed the President to so locate that line as to secure this connection, and on failure on their part to build their line you then authorized us to build up the valley of the Republican river to the one hundredth meridian, and thus secure a connection and save our investment from loss. We should have had that right but for the subsequent legislation, the legislation of 1866." If they have not the legal right to build the road under the law as it stands, it is in consequence of the act of 1866, in consequence of the act of this Government, the act of Congress, over which these private citizens had no control; and they are here, as it seems to me, very properly asking that their rights may be preserved, or at least that their equities may be considered. If they have no legal rights, construing the law technically as my honorable friend does, they surely have equitable claims. In justice you are bound to give them the opportunity to make additional investments and secure the property that otherwise would become perhaps a total loss.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him for an explanation on one point?

Mr. HARLAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. HOWE. Understand him to insist that the law required the President to locate the line of the eastern branch Pacific railroad so that this central branch could connect with it within one hundred miles of Atchison. I understand him to say that that is the law.

Mr. HARLAN. I think that is the effect of it.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to understand when, in point of fact, the eastern branch was first located through Kansas?

Mr. HARLAN. I am unable to answer that question.

Mr. HOWARD. I can answer the question.

Mr. HARLAN. I shall be obliged to the Senator from Michigan if he will give the information.

Mr. HOWARD. By looking at the report of the committee in this case it will be seen that the map of the eastern division was filed in June, 1865.

Mr. HOWE. Now, I wish to ask whether that line was not, when it was first located, located up the valley of the Kansas and the Republican Fork to the one hundredth meridian?

Mr. HARLAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. And that would not enable the central branch to connect with it within one hundred miles, would it?

Mr. HARLAN. That renders it necessary to make an explanation. The law of 1862 provides that the company shall indicate the general route of their road, subject to a final location growing out of the necessities of the topography of the country, as the facts may be developed by engineering. This Eastern Division Railroad Company located the general line of its road up the valley of the Kansas and the Republican branch of the Kansas river to the one hundredth meridian. The final and definite location grows out of specific surveys, grows out of engineering estimates, and was never made; and it is that final and definite location that is put under the control of the President, and he is authorized, as the Senator will see from reading the law, to do it after actual survey, not by drawing a line across a map indicating the general location as it would be indicated by the land surveys, but that he shall do it by actual survey and shall then do it so as to enable these companies to connect within the respective limits.

Mr. President, the last point I propose to speak upon is a reply to some observations submitted some time since by the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] when this question was pending before. He, doubtless honestly, believes that if this company had equitable rights, judged by the construction of the law, they had not judged by the existing facts, for he recited that under this law they were entitled to alternate sections of public lands on each side of the road within a limit of ten miles; and I think he figured up the amount of lands that they would thus derive, and also informed the Senate that they had purchased part of an Indian reservation, amounting to some hundreds of thousands of acres, which was supposed to be of great value, and then that they had raised from the United States $1,600,000 in Government bonds, and that under the law they had authority to issue their own bonds as the road progressed to an equal amount, making $3,200,000 in bonds. Hence, to sum up, this company own $3,200,000 of bonds, a vast amount of lands, being the alternate sections on each side of the road, and two or three hundred thousand acres growing out of a purchase from some Indian tribe, and that they are therefore vastly wealthy; or as we should style it on the frontier, they have "a good thing" as it is, and they need no relief.

Well, Mr. President, in point of fact it turns out that they do not derive a large quantity of land as alternate sections. I believe the whole quantity is about two hundred and thirty thousand acres, and the amount that they would have derived under the law of 1862 has been largely diminished by a clause in the law of 1864 providing that the location of certain college scrip made by the friends of some of our New England Senators here should not be interfered with by the location of the lands granted to this road; that is, that the locations made intermediate between 1862 and 1864 should remain valid. In this way the company lost a large amount of land that otherwise they would have possessed under the law of 1862.

But it is said that they own $3,200,000 in bonds. How much are they worth? The bonds of the Government are not granted to the company; they are loaned to the company. The company is bound to pay the interest on these bonds semi-annually from year to year, and when matured to pay the principal. How much are their bonds worth? They issue their promises to pay to the amount of $1,600,000. Who pays these bonds? The company will pay the interest on them as it matures, and the principal when the bonds mature. That is to say the company are in debt $3,200,000, and that is figured up here as evidence of vast wealth held by this company. Why, Mr. President, suppose these bonds were all in the pocket of my friend from New York, and he held them in his pocket until they matured, the interest must be paid by him each six months from year to year, and when the bonds mature he must pay the principal, of what value are they to him? I never knew that it enriched a man to give his promise to pay bearing interest.

If he holds his own note against himself, of what value is it to him? It is valueless; and most men when they acquire possession of their own paper obligating them to pay money, destroy it as soon as they have the legal right to do so. How is it if they receive the paper of another party, and are bound when they receive that paper to pay interest on it, and to pay the principal when it is due? It is no better than their own paper. In the end the company must pay this $3,200,000, if it has ever been issued; but the chairman of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad read from a paper just now, which I believe he received from the Secretary of the Treasury within a few days, showing that they have drawn but about six hundred thousand dollars, I think, of Government bonds.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a mistake. This company have got their whole $1,600,000, or else I am very much at fault.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senator from Michigan can furnish the exact information, I apprehend.

Mr. HOWARD. I will read from a communication dated "Treasury Department, June 16, 1868," a "statement showing the amount of United States bonds issued to the several Pacific railroad companies; the amount of accrued interest thereon to date, and the amount paid by the said companies under the fifth section of the act of July 2, 1862," and among the items is "issued to the Atchison and Pike's Peak railroad," which is the old name of this corporation, "$640,000" of United States bonds, and the interest accrued upon them is $67,661 74.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now give us a statement of the amount of bonds issued to the "Central Branch Union Pacific railroad," the new name of this corporation.

Mr. HOWARD. It is the same corporation under a new name.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know it; but what I wish to get at is whether that statement covers all bonds issued to this company under all names, or only covers the bonds issued under its old name.

Mr. HOWARD. It goes by this name. This is the same corporation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know; but since those bonds were issued, its name has been changed to "Central Branch Union Pacific," its present name. My friend from Michigan will find, unless I am very much mistaken, that in order to accommodate this company—it was perfectly right that it should be done—when its name was changed, all the bonds issued afterward were issued under its new name.

Mr. HOWARD. I think not. This communication was sent to me in answer to a resolution passed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, asking for specific information as to the whole amount of Government bonds issued to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and each and all its branches, with a statement of the interest accrued upon the bonds thus issued, and the interest repaid to the Government. I have not by me at this moment the letter which I addressed to the Department, but I will read the letter of the Secretary, dated June 15, 1868:

"Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, relative to the amount of bonds issued to the several Pacific railroad companies, the accrued interest thereon, and the amount repaid to the United States by said companies. In reply, I herewith inclose a statement giving the information required."

The fact of the change of name is perfectly notorious.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, this is immaterial, for if they have not, as I suppose they have not, drawn the whole of the bonds, they may draw them, for they have built the whole one hundred miles, and, therefore, are entitled to them. I only mention it incidentally as a passing fact. They may draw the whole of them, and they may issue an equal amount of their own bonds; but of what value are they? They give the company credit for the time being, and that is all. The United States, therefore, has merely loaned to this company the $1,600,000 of bonds, and the company accepting the provisions of the laws of 1862 and 1864, is bound to pay every dollar of it when matured; so that instead of being capital on hand, it is a debt owed. Now, to ascertain how much the company is worth as a corporation, I apprehend you would assess the value of their lands, the value of their road-bed, their rolling-stock, and their equipment, and deduct therefrom the amount of their debts; then deduct at least the $3,200,000 which they owe in bonds, one half of it to the United States, and the other half to private holders.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to make a correction in reference to the statement which I read before. The whole amount of bonds issued to this corporation is $1,600,000, and they were issued to the corporation under different names.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend will permit me to say that his own statement shows it is just as I stated before. Six hundred and forty thousand dollars of bonds were issued under the name of the Atchison and Pike's Peak railroad, and the balance, nearly a million, under the new name, Central Branch Union Pacific.

Mr. HARLAN. I am very glad to be accurate, and I am obliged to Senators for correcting me as to this fact; but, as I before observed, it makes no difference; for if they had not received these bonds they had a right to draw them under the law; but drawing these bonds, they merely obligate themselves to pay them when they become due. It is an advantage to the company in this way, the credit of the United States in the money markets of the world is better than the credit of a company, and therefore to hold the paper of the United States with authority to negotiate it enables them to raise money when perhaps otherwise they would not be able to do so on terms so good.

And making the lien of the Government for the ultimate payment of these bonds a second class lien on the road makes the company's bonds equal to the Government bonds in amount, equally valuable. It is, therefore, of very great advantage to the company to have the privilege of negotiating these bonds to raise money to construct the road; but in estimating the wealth of the company you must deduct the whole amount of their indebtedness. A part of that indebtedness is the liability, ultimately, to pay the Government bonds, and to pay the company's bonds in addition to their other indebtedness; and the value of the franchise is just so much in value as will be left after deducting from the whole the amount of this indebtedness.

It may not be to the interest of the company to make these naked statements of fact; but it may and probably is necessary to make them in order that we may arrive at their true condition in a financial point of view; and as that was supposed to be material by the Senator from New York, I have felt it to be proper to thus expose what I deem a logical fallacy in the use of its effect.

Mr. CONKLING. As the Senator is addressing this argument for my benefit especially, will he allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. HARLAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. The argument is conclusive, I think, and that I may understand the full force of it, I wish to ask the Senator whether it proves this: that the larger subsidies a road receives the poorer it becomes in respect of being the more in debt; so that the Union Pacific road having received, as this statement shows, an enormous subsidy, is the most unfortunate, the most largely indebted, and comes the nearest to being insolvent of any corporation that we know anything about.

Mr. HARLAN. Why, certainly, Mr. President, it is so if their property is not worth an amount proportionately great, just as if the Senator should pay $100 for a horse that was worth but fifty dollars; if he went in debt fifty dollars and bought the horse he would be in a less ruinous condition financially than if he went in debt $100 for the same horse; but if he bought a horse worth double the former with his $100, I suppose his financial condition would not be changed; and so with these roads.

Mr. CONKLING. So that to complete the statement, if I may understand it, if the road receives from the Government lands and the right to mortgage those lands to the amount of $16,000, which is a first lien upon them, and then receives in addition to that $16,000 more in the credit and obligation of the Government, it is poor by reason of that fact. The Government having created the basis of its own mortgage, and allowed the company to make the incumbrance upon that the primary lien, and then donated them $16,000 a mile besides, which goes, and properly goes, into the statement of the public debt which the Government owes, because they have done that, and then had an understanding with the company that the Government is to be indemnified against the interest, and they are to provide for the paper in the end, they become poor by the operation! If that is what the Senator means, I confess I cannot comprehend him.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, I do not mean any such thing, and never said any such thing, and nothing that I have said can properly be tortured into any such thing.

The Senator says, "if the United States grants land to the company." Why, sir, he knows as well as every other Senator that the grant of land is absolute. If the company build the road they get a title in fee to the land; and I never said, and did not intend to be understood as saying, that the more land you granted to a company the poorer it becomes; nor did I ever say that the more bonds the company borrowed the poorer it would become if they were properly invested. I said it would be an advantage to the company to hold the bonds of the United States, if it was necessary for them to borrow money, because the credit of the United States is worth more in the market, or is supposed to be, than the credit of any one of these companies. Holding the bonds of the United States to negotiate, they could borrow money on better terms, and consequently could build the road at a cheaper rate, and their franchise on that account would be the more valuable.

But when this work shall have been completed, and when these bonds shall have become matured, and when the company comes to foot up its assets and liabilities, I ask the Senator to tell me if it will not be compelled to deduct from its assets the bonds as one part of its liabilities. To be sure, if it should break up, if it should become insolvent and not be able to pay its debts, then the Government could not collect the bonds. But suppose the money is invested properly, and the road is worth all that it costs, and these stockholders put in a part of the money out of their own pockets; they sell the land for money and put that in, negotiate their bonds and Government bonds and risk their money in the road, then in order to ascertain the wealth of the company you must put down the value of the road completed with the rolling stock and equipment, and deduct from that value the liabilities, and these bonds are a class of those liabilities, must be paid by the company, and, in the end, after the road shall have been completed, the more they owe, whether to the Government or to private parties, the worse they will be off as a matter of course.

Mr. CRAGIN. Will the Senator allow me to suggest a question?

Mr. HARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. CRAGIN. It is whether the wealth of this company and its ability to pay its bonds to the Government and to individuals does not depend largely upon whether it is enabled to make connection with the main trunk, and thereby make its property valuable and be enabled to do business?

Mr. HARRAN. Certainly, Mr. President, that is obvious to every one. If it would be to the advantage of the company itself, it would be to the interest of the holders of the company's bonds and the holders of the United States bonds or the parties issuing the United States bonds. If the company's property would be worth more per cent. after investing more money and forming this connection, then the probabilities would be increased that the Government would lose nothing in the end.

Mr. President, I am sorry to have detained the Senate so long in attempting to present my understanding of this question. I would not have done so had it not been for my failure to apprehend the force and pertinency of much that was said by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, when this bill was first discussed this session my opinion and prejudices were both against it; but I was requested to examine the law, and I thought it was but just that I should do so. I have examined it as well as I have had the time to do; and the more I have examined, the more I have heard it discussed, the more my first impressions have been staggered. I will not say that I have yet to come to a definite conclusion that I must vote for the bill, but I am very strongly inclined in that direction, and I will express the views I now entertain about it, crude as they may be.

In the first place, I cannot avoid this consideration as one of policy, that this company now holds or is entitled to receive upon the construction of one hundred miles $1,600,000 of the bonds of the United States. The safety of this Government in its loan of credit to this company will depend upon the value of the work.

The road has now a terminus upon the Missouri river and one out in the wilderness. Having such termini, any Senator can see that its work cannot be of any great value. It must have some connection; as every Senator knows, the value of a railroad depends upon its connections. To make the road a security sufficient and ample for the advance made by the Government, for its $1,600,000 advance, some value must be given to it by securing to it another terminus. We all know that the security is not now. I think it is proper for me to consider that in my decision upon the bill.

It is also, I think, proper for me to consider, as a representative from Indiana, that the southern part of that State and its great railroad enterprises are interested in the southern branch of the Pacific railroad. If our only connection with this road is by Chicago, then we have to go, in order to reach it, from the latitude of Indianapolis, one hundred miles, while if we have a road constructed from Atchison so as to connect on the one hundredth meridian with the great road, then we are almost on a parallel. Our main roads through Indiana running westward would connect with the roads in the latitude of St. Louis, and thus give us connection with this road and a connection with the great Pacific road without taking a circuit of one hundred miles to the north to reach the Omaha branch. So that it is proper, as a representative of the State of Indiana, that I should consider that fact, which I regard as important.

If I had been a member of Congress in 1862 I have no thought that I should have voted for the Pacific railroad plan. When I was in the House of Representatives, ten or twelve years ago, I expressed my views upon the subject. I thought there ought to be one main road running from St. Louis to San Francisco, a central road for the Union, and let private enterprise make the other connections. But I find this plan upon the statute-book, and it is only for me now to inquire what are the legal propositions growing out of the law.

First, it is apparent that this was intended to be an entire system, the main road from the one hundredth meridian westward to the eastern line of California, with a branch from the mouth of the Kansas river to connect at the one hundredth degree of longitude, with a branch from Atchison to connect with that road. And this was an entire enterprise, one entire road, although constructed by different companies. It was regarded as an entire work, so that if any one of the companies should fail in the construction of its road the entire work should be forfeited. If it was a system and a plan surely it was intended that there should be connections; surely it was not intended that this particular road running westward from Atchison should be a part of the Pacific railroad plan and yet have no connections with that road.

Such, in my judgment, is the fair construction of the legislation of 1862. And what is the express provision upon the subject? It is that the road from the mouth of the Kansas river shall be extended to connect with the great road at the one hundredth meridian; and there is one feature of that provision to which I wish to call the attention of Senators. The location of the whole of that road was not left to the discretion and judgment of the company, but when you get out to a certain point it is then placed under the control of the President of the United States, and I believe that in that respect this particular road is different from any other portion of the Pacific railroad plan. "The route in Kansas west of the meridian at Fort Riley, to the aforesaid point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, to be subject to the approval of the President of the United States, and to be determined by him on actual survey." I ask Senators why that provision in regard to that particular part of the route is found in the law. Is it not that the President of the United States shall protect this Atchison branch in its connection? because the provision I have just read follows what I will now read:

"And said railroad through Kansas shall be so located between the mouth of the Kansas river as aforesaid, and the aforesaid point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, that the several railroads from Missouri and Iowa, herein authorized to connect with the same, can make connection within the limits prescribed in this act, provided the same can be done without deviating from the general direction of the whole line to the Pacific coast."

What do these provisions amount to? That the road from the mouth of the Kansas river to the one hundredth degree shall be so located that the road from Atchison, running westward, may make a connection with it, and to make that entirely secure and not to leave it to the discretion and judgment of the company, the President of the United States shall control it upon actual survey. Is it not very plain that it was the purpose of the act of 1862 to secure to this Atchison road a suitable connection at a point supposed to be about one hundred miles west from Atchison?

Mr. HOWE. I wish the Senator would point out where he finds the evidence in that act, the act of 1862, that the Atchison road was to connect with what we now know as the eastern division road at all, anywhere. What evidence is found in the act of 1862 that it was intended that the Atchison branch should connect with the Kansas city branch?

Mr. HENDRICKS. It was not absolutely

so. The Atchison branch had a discretion to connect with the Omaha line, but that was left to the judgment of the company itself. Now, I will read to the Senate what I think is the provision of the law and give to it the construction that I think is proper:

"That the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company of Missouri may extend its roads from St. Joseph, via Atchison, to connect and unite with the road through Kansas."

That is the eastern division, as the Senator calls it. This Hannibal and St. Joseph company may connect it with the road through Kansas. The road through Kansas is the one that had one terminus at the mouth of the Kansas river and the other at the one hundredth meridian of longitude. I will read this again:

"That the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company of Missouri may extend its roads from St. Joseph via Atchison, to connect and unite with the road through Kansas, upon filing its assent to the provisions of this act, upon the same terms and conditions in all respects, for one hundred miles in length next to the Missouri river, as are provided in this act for the construction of the railroad and telegraph line first mentioned, and may for this purpose use any railroad charter which has been or may be granted by the Legislature of Kansas."

Now, I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin to give his attention to the language that is here used. The Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company may extend its road; not may make a departure in a southwestern direction, so as to connect with the Atchison road, if it should take a southwestern direction, but it is authorized to extend its road. The Hannibal and St. Joseph road is an eastern and western road, running almost upon a parallel of latitude. An extension of that road would be a western road. Then we have this provision that the Hannibal and St. Joseph road may be extended from Atchison until it shall connect with the road running through Kansas. Where shall it connect? At such point as an extension will intersect the Kansas road. Taking the thirteenth section of the act of 1862, in connection with the provisions of the ninth section of the act of 1862, and it amounts to this: the Hannibal and St. Joseph road may be extended westward from Atchison until it shall connect with the road running through Kansas, and in order to secure that result the road running through Kansas from the mouth of the Kansas river to the one hundredth degree of longitude shall be so located as to allow that connection; and, to make that entirely clear, the President of the United States shall have the control of that part of it from Fort Riley to the one hundredth meridian, and he shall decide upon it after actual survey.

Mr. HOWE. Now, I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana, as I am not familiar with the geography of that country, if the President should undertake to locate the line west of the meridian of Fort Riley, so as to enable the Atchison branch to connect with it within one hundred miles of Atchison, if he would not have to deflect considerably east of that meridian?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not understand the question.

Mr. HOWE. The question is this: if the President had undertaken to locate the Kansas branch from a point west of the meridian of Fort Riley, in such a way as to enable the Atchison branch to connect with it, and to connect within one hundred miles from Atchison, would not that location have been necessarily deflected very much to the east; in other words, is not Fort Riley west of a point one hundred miles from Atchison?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot answer that question, for I have never measured it, nor never observed the measurement made by any body else. The Senator from Kansas, looking to the map, says that it would not be much more than fifty miles from Atchison to a line running north and south from Fort Riley.

Mr. HOWE. Fort Riley is near the junction of the Republican and Smoky Hill Forks, is it not?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. How far is it from there?

Mr. HENDERSON. You are asking for the junction of the Republican with the Smoky Hill?

Mr. HOWE. I am asking how far Fort Riley is from the junction of those two rivers.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is at the junction.

Mr. HOWE. Do I understand Senators to say that the junction of these rivers is not one hundred miles west from Atchison?

Mr. POMEROY. It is not one hundred miles west from Atchison in a straight line.

Mr. HOWE. I will ask the Senator from Kansas to have this geographical question settled: have not the one hundred miles of road been already built from Atchison, and is not the western terminus of that road in the valley of the Blue river?

Mr. POMEROY. A little beyond, fourteen miles beyond.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the Senator if the valley of the Blue river is not east of the Republican Fork?

Mr. POMEROY. Not east of the mouth of the Republican Fork where Fort Riley is.

Mr. HOWE. But it is east of the Republican Fork?

Mr. POMEROY. It is.

Mr. HOWE. East of the Republican Fork; so that the one hundred miles have been built from Atchison and have not reached the meridian of Fort Riley.

Mr. POMEROY. The mouth of the Republican at Fort Riley is much east of the valley of the Republican on the meridian of Atchison; one hundred miles out from Atchison does not reach the Republican valley, although it reaches the meridian of Fort Riley, because the Republican river comes in from the southwest. Although one hundred miles does reach the meridian of Fort Riley and goes beyond it, yet it does not reach the Republican valley on that meridian. That is the state of the case.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The question suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin is one whether the plan adopted in 1862 was practicable or not. That I cannot answer.

Mr. HOWE. That was not my question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is certain it was the intention of Congress that the road from the mouth of the Kansas river running in a northwestern direction should be so located as that the Atchison branch might connect with it and might give some value to it. That is the legal proposition in the act of 1862; and to make that secure it is placed under the control of the President of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to be informed upon this point: suppose that is the meaning of the law, that the eastern division was to be so built that the Atchison and Pike's Peak road could connect with it within one hundred miles; will the Senator explain to me why it was that the Atchison and Pike's Peak road ran so far to the north that no matter where the eastern division ran, they could not connect within one hundred miles? Why did they not go down in a direction toward Pike's Peak, which would have taken them to a connection with the eastern division where the eastern division now lies on the ground?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will call the attention of the Senator from New York to the language of the thirteenth section of the act of 1862, to which I called the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin a few minutes ago. The provision in regard to this road that is now claiming protection at our hands, that it may be an extension of the Hannibal and St. Joseph road; and that language, I understand to mean, in its ordinary and proper construction, an extension in the same direction, and the Hannibal and St. Joseph road being a road running from the east to the west, this branch is a road running from the east to the west.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, let me inquire of my honorable friend if he does not know that the very thing this road did was to run almost at right angles to the Hannibal and St. Joseph road, right down the river to Atchison?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly; and that is not an obscure question, for the language of the law I read shows how that is: "The Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company may extend its roads from St. Joseph via Atchison;" and that required that departure from a western line. That departure is provided for in the section itself. Then an extension of a road ordinarily would mean a continuance of it in the same general direction.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly, the Senator and I agree now; but I beg of him to enlighten me on this point: why was it, having run down to Atchison, and it being a road to run then in a general westwardly direction, that they pointed it so far north that one hundred miles would not bring it in connection with this eastern division, whereas if they had gone towards Pike's Peak they would have effected their junction east of Fort Riley, in which event it would have been wholly immaterial to them whether the eastern division went up the Republican Fork or down the Smoky Hill. I cannot understand why it is that they picked out the particular location which, in any event, within one hundred miles prevented their gaining a connection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator, before I answer his question, allow me to ask him one?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Why is it that in regard to so much of this Kansas road as is northwest of Fort Riley, the location of it is placed under the control of the President of the United States—and that is the only part of the railroad system provided for in that law that is placed under his control—what was the purpose of taking it from under the control of the company and placing it under the control of the President of the United States?

Mr. CONKLING. I am not sure that I understand the application of the question which the Senator puts to me. He says what was the object in intrusting to the President of the United States the ultimate approval of the location or the ultimate fixing of the location. Is that the point?

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the point.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not see what possible application that has to this case.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I will try and answer it myself.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not understand the scope or drift of it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Inasmuch as the law provided that there should be a connection, and it was a very important thing, and the precise point could not be fixed, therefore it was provided that the point where it would be likely to take place should be under the control of the President, and that that part of the road should be so located as to allow this connection. The very fact that that part of the road is placed under the control of the President of the United States in its location is evidence that Congress expected the connection should take place at some point northwest of Fort Riley.

Mr. CONKLING. So that we are to understand, then, that if the road, in place of lying where it does, pointed two or three degrees further north, in which event there would have been a gap of one hundred and fifty miles before it could have touched this other road, then there is an equity which would oblige us to go on and bridge that span? Would not that follow from the same reasoning?

Now, that I see the point of the Senator, I beg to answer the question which he put before. I suppose the purpose was to give to the President a certain supervision of the location—not that the President was to cause a survey to be made, but that these parties in interest were to cause surveys to be made, the ultimate approval of which, fixing the route, was committed to the President of the United States. They went on and surveyed this route, and being in general feasible, he approved that. But does the Senator mean to imply that if they had surveyed, deflecting a little further to the south, so that the terminus of their one hundred miles would have brought their road in contact with the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western road, the President of the United States, under this same power, should not and would not have approved that? And if so, then practically the whole thing was committed, as we know it was, to the discretion of the parties who were doing the work. If they committed any very wild transgression the President, no doubt, would have interfered; and it was only to guard against that that the power was committed to him.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The power to control the location of the road from Atchison westward is not in the law given to the President of the United States; and why not? Because the interests of the company would compel that company to seek the best connection possible, not by running in a southwestern direction, and thereby increasing the distance to the common point of the great Pacific road, but by seeking a direct western connection, in the language of the law an extension of the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad, a useful connection with the road running from the mouth of the Kansas river to the one hundredth degree of longitude.

Mr. CONKLING. Then they should have gone further north.

Mr. HENDRICKS. They might have departed, perhaps, from an exact western line somewhat; but the use of the language in this law which you find here indicates a purpose on the part of Congress to establish a line westward from Atchison.

Now, Mr. President, the act of 1862, in its general scope and in its particular provisions contemplates that this Atchison branch shall have a suitable connection. To say otherwise would be to attribute great folly to Congress. That Congress should grant a subsidy of such great magnitude to a road running one hundred miles westward into the wilderness and stop there is to accuse Congress of absolute stupidity. Congress intended this connection for useful purposes, not by running, as is suggested by the Senator from New York, in a southwestern direction, and thus increasing the distance to the common point at the one hundredth meridian of longitude, but by a western road to make a connection with this road which runs through Kansas.

The next question as a legal one is, does the act of 1864 change the law in this respect? I understand the Senator from Vermont to base his argument upon the proviso to the ninth section of the act of 1864. I do not give the construction to that proviso which the Senator does. It is:

"That any company authorized by this act to construct its road and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the initial point aforesaid, may construct its road and telegraph line so as to connect with the Union Pacific railroad at any point westwardly of such initial point, in case such company shall deem such westward connection more practicable or desirable."

The Senator argues that that authorizes a general departure from the line contemplated in the act of 1862. I do not so regard it. What was this provision intended for? That if the company, when it came to locate this branch, should find that a connection exactly at the one hundredth meridian of longitude could not well be made, then they might make that connection somewhat to the westward; how far is not said; but to the westward, if necessary, leaving that discretion in the company—not a discretion to change its whole line; not a discretion to change the line so as to prevent and make impossible a connection of one of the other branches—but such a departure in regard to its northwestern terminus as might be indicated by the character of the country, the character of the river that they had to cross near there, or any other consideration that might control the judgment of the company. So, sir, I do not understand that the proviso to the ninth section of the act of 1864 has changed the law of 1862, but it leaves it as it was, that this Atchison branch shall have a proper connection.

Then we come to another provision, which in my judgment is very important, in the act of 1864. The sixteenth section of that act, in the first place, provides that these companies may consolidate one after another until perhaps the whole enterprise shall be under the control of one company. That perhaps was contemplated in the sixteenth section of the act of 1864. Then it provides that if any two of these roads shall become consolidated and shall construct their roads, and some other road which forms a necessary link in the great work shall not be constructed, this consolidated company may construct such road and have the benefit of all the provisions of the law in favor of the company whose road it has thus constructed. That is found in this language:

"And in case, upon the completion of such consolidated organization of the roads or either of them, of the companies so consolidated, any other of the road or roads of either of the other companies authorized as aforesaid, (and forming, or intended or necessary to form a portion of a continuous line from each of the several points on the Missouri river, heretofore designated, to the Pacific coast,) shall not have constructed the number of miles of its said road within the time herein required, such consolidated organization is hereby authorized to continue the construction of its road and telegraph in the general direction and route upon which such incomplete or unconstructed road is heretofore authorized to be built, until such continuation of the road of such consolidated organization shall reach the constructed road and telegraph of said other company, and at such point to connect and unite therewith."

And then it is provided that for the construction of this additional road the companies thus consolidated shall have the benefit of all subsidies. Further on it is provided:

"And in case any company authorized thereto shall not enter into such consolidated organization, such company, upon the completion of its road as heretofore provided, shall be entitled to, and is hereby authorized, to continue and extend the same under the circumstances, and in accordance with the provisions of this section, and to have all the benefits thereof, as fully and completely as are herein provided touching such consolidated organization."

Taken altogether, that section means just this: if any separate company, that being the company authorized to construct a road with which its road is to form a connection, shall fail to construct that road, this company may construct it in its stead, and in the construction of that part of the road shall have the benefit of the subsidies. It seems to me that that is the plain reading of the sixteenth section of the act of 1864. This is consistent with the general plan that these several roads shall form one system connecting several points upon the Missouri river with the Pacific coast. As I have said, I would not be in favor of such a system; but I find these provisions upon the statute-book.

I find that in 1864 Congress said to this Atchison road, "Construct your hundred miles; you shall have your subsidy; connect at that point, or any point near thereto, with the Kansas road, and thus have your connection with the main great Pacific road; and if this Kansas branch is not built so as to give you the connection with the great Pacific road, you may continue your road from the hundred miles northwestwardly until you make the connection yourselves, and in the construction of that part of the road you shall have the subsidies." In my judgment, that is the construction of the law, though I am not as confident in it as if I had had more time to examine it. Unless I hear some reason that shall disturb my judgment thus formed, I expect to vote for the bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suppose it is hardly expected that we can get to a vote on this question to-night. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOWARD. I believe that pensions are the subject of consideration for to-morrow; but I wish to say that I shall consider the bill which is now before us as the unfinished business on Monday, and shall call it up and see if we can get a vote upon it. I wish to have that understanding, if possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 19, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOSTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the acts of April 20, 1868, and July 17, 1862, a statement of contracts made with the quartermaster's department during May, 1868; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SUPPLY OF GAS TO THE GOVERNMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the president of the Washington Gas-Light Company, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the House of the 17th instant, a statement relative to the amount of illuminating gas furnished the Government during the year ending June 30, 1866; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is that which was pending at the adjournment last evening when the House had ordered the bill (H. R. No. 1100) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, and for other purposes," to be engrossed and read a third time. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] is entitled to the floor.

SAMUEL N. MILLER.

Mr. O'NEILL. I yield for a moment to my colleague, [Mr. MYERS.]

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 454, for the relief of Samuel N. Miller, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. ELIOT. Is it desired to have that bill acted on to-day? If not, I hope that we shall go to the Speaker's table and refer all the bills upon it after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Patents is entitled to the morning hour to-day; and the Chair supposes that is the reason why the gentleman wishes the bill referred.

Mr. ELIOT. All right; let it go.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, requesting the return of House joint resolution No. 44, relating to the sale of the marine hospital at Evansville, Indiana.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate No. 425, granting a pension to George Bennett.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill No. 377, to change the times of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the several districts in the State of Tennessee.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill No. 164, to provide for appeals from the Court of Claims, and for other purposes.

It announced in conclusion that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1059, to relieve certain citizens of North Carolina of disabilities.

ADDITIONAL BOUNTIES.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 1279) in relation to additional bounties, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, subsequently said: There is a misunderstanding in relation to laying the motion to reconsider on the table. I ask unanimous consent that the motion be regarded as not agreed to. Let the bill be read, in order that it may be understood.

No objection being made, it was so ordered, and the bill was read at length. It provides that when a soldier's discharge states that he is discharged by reason of "expiration of term of service" he shall be held to have completed the full term of his enlistment and entitled to bounty accordingly.

The second section provides that the prohibition of bounty in the fourteenth section of the act of July 28, 1866, to any soldier who shall have bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, loaned, exchanged, or given away his final discharge papers or any interest in the bounty provided by this or any other act of Congress, shall not apply in cases where the full amount of bounty has been advanced by States, counties, or towns, to the soldiers or to their families.

Section three provides that the widow, minor children, or parents, in the order named, of any soldier who shall have died after being honorably discharged from the military service of the United States, shall be entitled to receive the additional bounty to which such soldier would be entitled if living, under the provisions of the twelfth and thirteenth sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes," approved July 28, 1866, and the said provisions of said act shall be so construed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I now enter the motion to reconsider the reference of this bill.

ERIE AND ONTARIO SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, in relation to a ship-canal connecting Lakes Erie and Ontario; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. OSLER.

Mr. BOYER moved that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John H. Osler for relief, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

NEW YORK WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. KETCHAM, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 1278) providing for the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon certain claims of the State of New York; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM REYNOLDS.

Mr. KETCHAM moved that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of William Reynolds, asking to be reimbursed for expenses incurred in defending himself against unlawful arrest and prosecution as a deserter, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

MERCANTILE MARINE.

Mr. CHANLER. I ask unanimous consent to present and have printed and referred a protest of the Ship-owners' Association of New York city against the passage of the bill in relation to the mercantile marine of the United States, which provides for the appointment of marine boards, with power to supervise the construction, equipment, repairs, &c., of vessels of the merchant marine.

Mr. COBB. I think this petition had better take the ordinary course, and be handed to the Journal Clerk under the rules.

IMMIGRANT SHIPS.

Mr. ELIOT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of House bill No. 1100, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, and for other purposes," upon which the previous question has been ordered, and which was pending at the time of adjournment yesterday. The question is upon the third reading of the bill.

The bill was then read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. Upon that question I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. CHANLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes seventy-two, noes not counted.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced, and the first business in order, to-day being Friday, is the reporting of bills of a private nature, commencing with the Committee on Patents, where the call rested at the expiration of the morning hour on Saturday last.

WOOD-SCREW PATENTS.

The SPEAKER. The pending bill is House bill No. 810, for the relief of the widow and heirs of Thomas W. Harvey, deceased, reported from the Committee on Patents by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS.] The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] that the bill be laid on the table. The question was taken upon that motion on Saturday last, but before the result was announced the morning hour expired.

Mr. MYERS. I understand that my colleague [Mr. STEVENS] will not press his motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is not present, and therefore his motion must be acted upon, and cannot be withdrawn.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say that if it was withdrawn I would renew it.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion that the bill be laid on the table. The bill will be again read.

The bill was read at length. It authorizes the Committee on Patents to hear the application of the widow and heirs of Thomas W. Harvey, deceased, for a reextension of the patent heretofore granted to the said Harvey, on the 30th of May, 1846, for an improvement in machinery for cutting screws, and reissued on the 28th of December, 1858; and also the application of the heirs of Thomas W. Harvey for the reextension of the patent heretofore granted to said Harvey, on the 18th of August, 1846, for improvement in machinery for dressing screw-heads, and reissued on the 4th of January, 1859, and to grant the extension of said patents for the period of seven years, respectively, from the 30th of May, 1867, and the 18th of August, 1867, when said patents by law expired; provided that the patents shall be extended only for the benefit of the widow and legal heirs of said Harvey, and that these extensions shall not be valid for the use and benefit of any corporation or person claiming any right or interest in either of the said patents by virtue of any alleged agreement, transfer, or assignment heretofore executed by the said heirs, or any arbitration or award heretofore made between the said heirs and any other person or corporation; and if at any time said extended letters-patent shall become in whole or in part the property of the company which owned said patents at the time when they were about to expire, or of their successors, then this act shall at once thereafter become void and of no effect; and provided, also, that all rights in law or equity of the persons legally in possession of machines covered by said patents shall be fully protected in all cases from the said extensions of letters-patent; provided said Commissioner, after full hearing, upon due notice to all persons desiring to contest said extensions, shall be of opinion that said patents should be so extended.

The question was then taken upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table; and upon a division there were—ayes 36, noes 50; no quorum voting.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, Mr. FARNSWORTH, Mr. BEAMAN, and Mr. WASHBURN of Massachusetts, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 49, nays 81, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Bailey, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Boutwell, Buckland, Butler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Covode, Dawes, Ela, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Griswold, Harding, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Julian, Kitchin, George V. Lawrence, Loughridge, McCarthy, Moorhead, Paine, Platts, Price, Randall, Raum, Schenck, Shellabarger, Smith, Spaulding, Starkweather, Trowbridge, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, and James F. Wilson—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Beck, Bouton, Blair, Brommell, Cake, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Culom, Dixon, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ferriss, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Halsey, Hawkins, Higby, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Hulburt, Humphrey, Jenckes, Johnson, Judd, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Koontz, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McCormick, McCullough, Mercor, Miller, Moore, Morrill, Mullins, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Peters, Phelps, Pile, Polsley, Robertson, Robinson, Scofield, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taber, John Trimble, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Trump, Ward, John F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—81.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Barnes, Barnum, Benjamin, Birmingham, Blaine, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Burr, Cary, Delano, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Finney, Fox, Gravely, Haight, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelley, Kelsey, Laffin, William Lawrence, Marshall, Morrissey, Nunn, Perham, Pike, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Ross, Sawyer, Selye, Shanks, Sitgreaves, Aaron F. Stevens, Stone, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—59.

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

The question then recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw the demand for the previous question, in order to answer the expectations of the House that a brief explanation shall be made in regard to the bill now before us. It is a bill I am instructed by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Patents to report. I am also authorized to assert that this bill has, perhaps, more merits than any bill we have hitherto reported, and we report very few.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, rose.

Mr. MYERS. I decline to yield at the present moment. The gentleman has done his best to kill this bill; but I will yield to him at the proper time. I can satisfy the House this measure is right, or I do not desire its passage. At present I desire to submit my own statement, in order that the case may be put before the House intelligibly.

It was stated the other day that this was the same old bill resuscitated over and over again.

Perhaps it may be as well to state in the outset that in the last Congress a bill was passed, and that this is substantially the same, with the exception that it remedies some of the objections then urged against it. The bill failed in the last Congress by a small majority, because a fraudulent paper was introduced upon this floor, not so intended, I will say, by the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, who presented it. The statement was then made that the patent would not inure to the benefit of the widow and heirs who now claim it.

As soon as opportunity was afforded, but too late for a remedy then, the paper was found to be a manufactured one. The assignment did not inure beyond the extended term for seven years. I have all the papers and proofs before me on this point, and if necessary I will have them read to the House.

Such having been ascertained to be the fact, the Committee on Patents felt it to be its duty to report a bill again. It is shown that the inventor never received a dollar for the inventions secured by the letters-patent and now sought to be extended, of vast utility as they are, and which have cheapened the articles made by them all over the United States. It has brought countless benefits to those who use it. If they knew to whom they were indebted for them they would, by common consent, agree that this patent should be extended.

Before this invention of machinery for the manufacture of wood screws they were manufactured by hand. By these automatic machines and previous machines of his invention, now become public, they can be made better, quicker, and of course cheaper, and the benefit to the people is as undisputed as in the Blanchard, Woodworth, and other cases, where Congress extended the patents.

When this bill was last up it was met with a new device. The honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] then spoke as follows:

"I am informed this is a fact, and I wish to know whether it came before the committee. Mr. Harvey some years ago sold to a large iron proprietor in Massachusetts the right to manufacture screws under his patent, and gave a bond in the sum of $10,000 that this manufacturer should enjoy that privilege. But afterward, and while the machinery was being set up to manufacture these screws, Mr. Harvey sold his patent to this Providence company for $125,000, and then came forward and paid the $10,000 bond rather than carry out his contract with the Massachusetts manufacturer. That, I am informed, is the fact, and it may explain why Massachusetts is not in favor of paying any more money as a royalty to this Rhode Island company."

This statement, and a similar one made by one of his colleagues quietly to members, defeated the bill, although by a large majority the House had just refused to lay it on the table, and defeated it would have remained so far as the action of the Patent Committee was concerned; but on the Monday following gentlemen arose in their places, each saying—

"Thou can't not say I did it!"—

each one anxious that the fault should not be placed on him of making what was an erroneous statement. When this occurred the committee asked as their privilege to have the case referred back to them to take the testimony of the iron proprietor and member referred to. This was done, and it was found that the facts were not as represented, but that the transactions referred to were ten years before these patents were issued to Mr. Harvey, and the whole story was exploded.

With the exception of one particular the bill before the House is the same bill that was previously reported. In its present shape it is very reasonable, and should be acceptable to the House. We provide that this monopoly which has had the benefit of these patents, this great company which is so much dreaded, shall never have the benefit of this extension. If it does become the owner or part owner the patent shall become void. That is a sufficient answer to any one who pretends that this American Screw Company are to have the benefit of the extension.

And now I claim the attention of the House to the proof that the inventor never received a dollar out of these inventions, except that at one time while he was perfecting them he received a salary of $100 a month. I have the affidavits here to that fact. After inventing various machines for the perfection of the manufacture of wood screws, all of which have gone to the benefit of the public—six of them are in public use and can be used to manufacture many of the screws in ordinary use. After the invention of those the idea of perfecting the machine came into the inventor's mind. He had received from various other inventions, to which I referred on a former occasion, $100,000. But it required an enormous number of machines for making the different sizes of screws. In perfecting these machines he spent $100,000, and had to borrow $70,000 of Charles Ely, of New York city, to whom he gave as security an assignment of the first term of the patent, fourteen years. Therefore he never received one dollar out of the first term. Not only that, but he was unable to pay the $70,000 out of the profits of the first term, and arbitrators were selected to award the value of the seven years' term, to be extended by the Commissioner of Patents. They said it was worth, I think, $35,000. There were $40,000 then due to Mr. Ely. Mr. Harvey died, and Mr. Ely held the extension to repay himself the balance due, but it never did repay him. He sold it under the decree of the arbitrators to this American Screw Company, a company which has four thousand machines, and which makes seven ninths of all the wood screws in the United States, and which, through its various emissaries and in manifold ways, seeks to obtain these patents. If extended, this widow and these heirs will have the right to the machines, and they can compete with this great company which even now has a right to run its own machines whether you extend this patent or not. If not extended, they have the monopoly, and instead of the prices being lessened they will be increased. These are the facts mainly exhibited under oath to the committee. Now, before calling the previous question, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I have but a few facts to state in reference to this case, if I can have the attention of the House. The gentleman says I have made an effort to prevent the extension of this monopoly. I am free to say that I have made such an effort, and I am ready to renew it to-day. But I do not desire to do it on any unfair ground, or on anything else than a fair statement of facts. As I said when this question was up before, that if I had been misinformed, if the American screw monopoly was not at the foundation of this whole proceeding, if it was not to perpetuate a monopoly in this business, then I had been very much deceived.

Now, I wish to state a few facts to the House, and if gentlemen will listen to them I think they will come to the same conclusion that I do in this case. When this patent was first reported by the committee, in January, 1867, and an effort was made to have it extended, facts were presented which, on the 5th of February, 1867, led this House to reject its extension. It was claimed at that time that the American Screw Company was to receive the benefit of this extension.

Mr. MYERS. By whom?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I claimed that they were, but the Committee on Patents and the gentleman from Pennsylvania said that they had no interest directly or indirectly in that extension. What is the state of the facts? When the question was then before the House a corporation in my own district with $500,000 capital invested in the manufacture of screws appeared here by their attorneys and desired that this monopoly might not be extended further, and did all in their power to prevent the extension. The Union Screw Company of Providence, Rhode Island, appeared here with their attorney and did everything in their power to prevent the extension of the monopoly. Where are those corporations to-day, I ask the gentleman? Why the corporation in my own district have appeared here and said these individuals have made arrangements with us, and it is better for us to have this extension granted than it is not to have it, and so far as we are concerned we prefer that you would not oppose the extension of this patent. The Union Screw Company of Providence, Rhode Island, which appeared here and did everything in its power to prevent the extension, do not appear here to-day. Why not? I have some other facts to read here, and I ask the gentleman who reports this bill to gainsay or dispute them if he can. The bill extending this patent was rejected on the 5th day of February, and on the 18th day of March, after the bill was rejected, and after the Union Screw Company and these other corporations had appeared against it, it seems that the American Screw Company, the very company that the Committee on Patents claims has no interest—

Mr. MYERS. I want the House to hear the gentleman, but I want the gentleman to confine himself to a certain amount of time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Well, give me ten minutes.

Mr. MYERS. I will give you ten minutes in all.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has no right to limit my colleague. My colleague took the floor himself without any limitation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The floor was assigned to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and he yielded it to the gentleman from Massachusetts. He has a right under the usage of the House to resume the floor whenever he sees fit.

Mr. DAWES. I understood him to surrender the floor.

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I was saying that this extension was denied on the 5th of February. On the 18th day of March the American Screw Company went to the Union Screw Company of Providence, who had appeared here and opposed this extension, and made an agreement with them that they would purchase all their interest, and there are a few conditions in that agreement to which I wish to call attention. The agreement was that the American Screw Company should purchase all the interest of the Union Screw Company, and here is one of the conditions:

"And that said Union Screw Company, its officers and agents, acting in its behalf, shall at once discontinue all opposition in its behalf of the extension of the Harvey patents, so called, now pending before the Congress of the United States."

That was on the 18th of March, after the Union Screw Company had appeared here and opposed the extension, and it had been rejected. The American Screw Company make an agreement to buy out that company, and bind them not to continue their opposition to the extension of the patent.

Mr. MYERS. Will the gentleman state what he is reading from?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The agreement of the American Screw Company to buy out the Union Screw Company. I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked, and which I send to his desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"And said party of the second part hereby agrees to discontinue and hereafter refrain from all opposition to the extension of the Harvey patents before Congress in its behalf; and said party of the first part hereby agrees to and with the party of the second part to guaranty and secure to the party of the second part, until the party of the first part shall have fully carried out in good faith all the agreements herein on its part, the same interest and rights in every particular that they would have or be entitled to if the so-called Harvey patents, application for the extension of which is now pending before the Congress of the United States, should not be extended, but should be allowed to expire, provided, said party of the second part carry out their agreement herein on their part in good faith."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. This agreement was carried out, and $161,510 was paid to the Union Screw Company. Now, if the American Screw Company had no interest in this extension, why did they enter into an agreement with these corporations to cease all their opposition to this extension? I put this question to an individual who has known all about its proceedings, who has acted as counsel for this company, the Harvey heirs and the American Screw Company. He admitted that it was the expectation of the American Screw Company to derive the benefits of this reextension.

What I wish to state to the House is this: there is not a corporation that appears here to oppose this extension; but all have been either bought up or been arranged with not to oppose the extension of this monopoly. This American Screw Company, as is known to those who have examined this matter, have made it the greatest monopoly that ever existed in this country. And not less than from fifty to seventy five per cent. of profit has been put upon every gross of screws they manufacture. And when there was danger that screws would be imported from abroad, they came here and succeeded in getting a tariff put on screws which amounted almost to a prohibition. Then they manufactured screws and scattered them all over the country in vast amounts, with profits to the extent of millions of dollars, all of it coming out of those who use them.

My position in regard to this extension is this: scattered throughout my district, and throughout this country are thousands of manufacturers; furniture manufacturers, chair manufacturers, piano-forte manufacturers, carriage manufacturers, manufacturers of every rank and class, who are using these articles to a great extent. They come forward and say that this great monopoly has applied to them to pay an enormous price for these screws; and now they ask, that having guarantied to the patentee this monopoly for twenty-one years, it shall now be thrown open to the public. They say, "You talk about relieving us from the burdens of taxation; yet, while you relieve us from the burden of taxation to the extent of removing the five per cent. tax, do not press upon us this monopoly of the screw manufacture, which enters into all our manufactures to so great an extent." There is hardly a manufacturer or hardware dealer or merchant of any kind in my district who has not besought me to do what I can to oppose the extension of this monopoly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MYERS. I have listened to my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. WASHBURN.] and I have no doubt he has great interest in these screw companies. Yet while he is perpetually defending what must be to their interest, he apparently agrees with me that the American Screw Company is one of the greatest monopolies that has ever existed in this country. Fail to extend this, and they have by their four thousand machines and great capital the monopoly and the profit of this invention, and widow and heirs of the inventor will not get a dollar. Extend it, and, while the Treasury loses not a dollar, you do a great justice to the memory and representatives of an American inventor, such as the American people have never failed to sanction.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will not misrepresent me.

Mr. MYERS. I will not.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The gentleman knows there is not one of these corporations but is here in favor of this extension.

Mr. MYERS. The gentleman is mistaken. Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman mention one of them?

Mr. MYERS. I will answer the gentleman in spite of his interjections and objections. I supposed that at the last minute some new paper would be read. It is the third time this expedient has been resorted to. It is practiced in the interest of somebody. It is not practiced in the interest of this widow and these heirs. It is not practiced in the interest of this manufacturer. Who does the gentleman represent? And what is the reason of his intense activity and feeling against the bill? The parties, by our direction, gave notice all over the United States, and we received no protests; but we did see the requests of two hundred hardware men, who ask for this extension. I should like to know whose interest it is. The gentleman says it is in the interests of his constituents. I honor and esteem the gentleman from Massachusetts for protecting the interests of his constituents. I have nothing to say against him on that ground. But, sir, let me answer him, and "mark how plain a tale will put him down." This bill provides that if ever the American Screw Company shall become the possessor of this patent then it shall become null and void. That sets at nought all agreements between these companies who wish to rob this widow of her rights. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. If this bill is to pass, I ask my friend whether he will not accept an amendment to pay out of the Treasury the money these heirs are said to have lost instead of taxing our mechanics in the country?

Mr. MYERS. Two or three times I have already stated to this House, upon my knowledge of the facts and proofs in this case, that this extension does not tax the people. I can prove that this is so. I have already fully done so. The people of my district are as much interested in it as the people of any other district in the United States. I have shown how it has been a blessing and not a tax to the people.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has pledged himself to the House that he would mention some manufacturing company which was against this extension. With the exception of the American Screw Company, not one of them has made opposition to this monopoly. Put your finger upon one of them.

Mr. MYERS. They appear somewhere in this House. They appeared by counsel before the committee. They have advocates on this floor. We find no agreement like that referred to. Who gave it to the gentleman? They are invisible, but their influence is as perceptible as the atmosphere we breathe, and the president of one of them, the Boston Screw Company, caused the insertion in the Post of the article once before read here against the bill. I must now insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I hope the demand for the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. MYERS. If the gentleman wishes to make any more speeches he can print them, and not make them out of order across the floor. [Laughter.] I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I understood the gentleman to say there were no remonstrances against this extension presented to the committee, but there were petitions the other way. I wish to say this in behalf of my district, that in reference to no extension pending before Congress have I received such a number of remonstrances, earnest and vigorous, and I think reasonable, as I have against this.

Mr. MYERS. I decline to yield further, and insist on the demand for the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 45; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. MYERS, and Mr. WASHBURN of Massachusetts.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-four, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered; and under the operation thereof, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I ask the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. Let the country see who are in favor of extending this monopoly.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 71, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, Axtell, Banks, Beck, Blair, Calkins, Chandler, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Cornell, Dixon, Donnelly, Eldridge, Ferriss, Getz, Golladay, Gravely, Grover, Haight, Halsey, Higby, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Jenckes, Johnson, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Koonz, Lincoln, Logan, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McCullough, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Peters, Polsley, Pomeroy, Robertson, Robinson, Scofield, Stewart, Stokes, Taber, John Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Trump, Ward, Windom, and Woodbridge—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Boutwell, Buckland, Butler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Delano, Eckley, Eggleston, Eli, Eliot, Farnsworth, Fields, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Harding, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, George V. Lawrence, Longhridge, Lynch, McCarthy, Moorhead, Orth, Phelps, Pike, Pile, Plants, Price, Randall, Raum, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stone, Taylor, Trowbridge, Twichell, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, and Woodward—71.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Arnell, James M. Ashley, Barnes, Barnum, Blaine, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Cary, Dodge, Driggs, Ferry, Finney, Fox, Griswold, Hawkins, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelley, Kitchen, Ladin, William Lawrence, Loan, Marshall, McCormick, Morrissey, Munson, Nunn, Paine, Perham, Poland, Pruyn, Ross, Selye, Shanks, Sitgreaves, Thaddeus Stevens, Taffe, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—53.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS CROSSLEY.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Patents, reported back a bill (S. No. 426) for the relief of Thomas Crossley, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the bill goes over till to-morrow in the morning hour.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I rise to a privileged question. I submit the following report:

The committee of conference of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1059) to relieve certain citizens of North Carolina of disabilities, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments:

Strike out "George S. Houston, of Alabama," and "George W. Jones, of Tennessee,"

Strike out "and Tennessee," where it first occurs in section four, and insert "and" after "Arkansas" where it first occurs in section four.

Also, strike out "Robert Austin," of North Carolina, and insert "Robert H. Austin,"

Strike out "Wiley D. Jones," of North Carolina, and insert "Willie Jones,"

Strike out "Eugene Grisson," of North Carolina, and insert "Eugene Grisson," Strike out "John D. Ashmore," of South Carolina, and insert "J. D. Ashmore," Strike out "John M. Rusty for Burtz,"

J. F. FARNSWORTH,

H. E. PAINE,

Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM STEWART,

HENRY WILSON,

JOHN SHERMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

I do not desire to detain the House. The amendments are most of them verbal, with the exception of the dropping of two names which the Senate had inserted in the bill. Before calling the previous question, I yield to my colleague on the committee from Kentucky,

[Mr. BECK.]

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to state why I failed to sign the report of the conference committee of which I was a member, not to argue the principles contained in it which make it so objectionable to me. I have done that on a former occasion, and am only more and more confirmed in my opinions by what is transpiring now. That pardon is an executive and not a legislative function is too clear for argument; that this is a usurpation of the pardoning power is equally evident. That it is converted into a mere party machine, by which the worst men in the country are whitewashed and made clean before the law if they will only make up in party servility what they lack in integrity and honesty, is too apparent to need even exposure; and that the best and truest men in the country, those to whose honor, integrity, and devotion to principle the restoration of these now disjointed States to their proper relations could most safely be intrusted, are to be kept under perpetual ostracism unless they will abandon, or pretend to abandon, all their principles, and bow the knee to the idol which Radicalism has set up and seems determined to maintain, is perfectly plain. The aptest illustration of the truth of what I say is to be found in the report now before the House. We sent the names of many hundreds of men residing in North Carolina, admitted rebels, to the Senate, asking concurrence in the removal of their political disabilities because they had joined the Radical party and had voted for the adventurers who had taken possession of that State. Whether they were honest or not, whether they were men of character or not, no man in this House knew, except in a few instances. It was simply the carrying out of a contract with the Radical leaders in the State, that if these men would prove false to their race and people, give the negro and carpet-bag concern respectability and a show of acquiescence by the people of the State, so it could be carried, and the positions of Governor, Senators, and members of this House secured to the Radical provost marshals and bureau agents, the political disabilities of the persons so selling their manhood and their birthright should be removed by the dominant majority here, and the people of the North would be told that the white men of the South were in great numbers aiding in reconstruction, only obstinate and persistent rebels refusing.

The Senate added several hundred more to the list, making no objection to any of those sent there by us. Among those so added, and whose character, integrity, and high position was vouched for by every Senator who spoke of them, were George W. Jones, of Tennessee, and George Houston, of Alabama; and they were included in the bill, and their disabilities removed by a vote 37 to 3; every Republican Senator present voting for the bill. This House disagreed, without inquiry into the cause of the disagreement, and the committee of conference, whose report has just been read, was the result. The Senate managers receded from their amendment on the demand of the House so far as to strike out the names of Jones and Houston. Mr. Jones seemed to be the special object of attack; perhaps he lives in a district in Tennessee that would return him to this House, and thereby remove whoever now represents it. I do not know what district he lives in, nor who represents it, and therefore make no personal allusions; but the avowed fact is that the Tennessee delegation in this House are united and determined in their opposition to him, and that opposition has controlled and changed the vote of the Senate. Mr. Jones, honest, upright, intelligent, resisting the secession of his State as long as resistance was possible, as honorable Senators asserted on their personal responsibility, is sacrificed because he will not bow the knee to Baal; does not believe that a military despotism is a better government than that provided for in the Constitution; does not believe that the negro is superior to the white race; and will not prostitute himself and his principles even for the sake of being relieved from the onerous and galling ostracism under which he and thousands of others (Senator Wilson says fifty thousand) are now struggling.

It is for this House to again assert before the country, as I have no doubt it will, that honesty, integrity, capacity, faithfulness to trusts, and unsullied honor constitute no test or guarantee for the removal of disabilities. Nothing but blind and unquestioning obsequiousness to Radicalism is so considered or regarded. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. My colleague on the committee [Mr. BECK] is mistaken somewhat in regard to the recommendations of the names that were sent to the Senate by the House. The Committee on Reconstruction acted upon those names, not solely upon the recommendation of a committee of our own party appointed by the convention of the State, but also upon the recommendations of citizens, including men who were not members of the Republican party. Some of the names in the bill are names of men who were really loyal during the rebellion, but who held some office which disqualifies them. They are now disposed to accept the situation in good faith, and to support the reconstruction measures of Congress. Those names were scrutinized by the Reconstruction Committee and by the House, and then sent to the Senate. The Senate have now added a large number of names. The Senate, acting through a committee, scrutinized the names that had been sent to them from the different States. But the two names of Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, and Mr. Houston, of Alabama, and perhaps some others, were added to the list upon the individual motions of Senators. I do not understand that they have ever asked to be pardoned; I do not understand that they have ever sent a petition here asking that their disabilities be removed. But they stand upon their dignity; they do not humble themselves and ask for this boon, but wait for it to be offered to them unasked. Those two men were formerly members of Congress, but they went out of the Union with their States. I do not myself think they were original secessionists; but they went with their States, and one of them at least went into the rebel Congress.

Now, in acting with reference to these names, whom should your committee consult? So far as the man from Tennessee was concerned, we naturally consulted the members from Tennessee on this floor as to the condition of the mind of that man, and whether he was a fit subject for pardon. And from all that was told us we came to the conclusion that until he came here and asked us to relieve him from disabilities it was not worth while for us to tender to him this act of amnesty.

Now, we do not propose to remove disabilities merely from those of our own party, as has been charged here. We do not stop to inquire whether a man is going to vote with the Republican party or not. But we do inquire whether a man is acting with the loyal people of the nation or with the rebels of the South at the present time. We think it of much more importance to inquire what a man is now doing, and what has been his conduct since the rebellion was put down, than what he did before the rebellion. If he was originally a loyal man and opposed to secession, but afterward went into the rebellion, or took part with the rebels, if he seeks now to prevent a state of good order and restoration in his State, we consider that he is not a fit subject for amnesty.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Very well.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to inquire of the gentleman whether in the list of names as this bill passed the House there were the names of any persons concerning whom the gentleman had any information which led him to believe they were not going to act with the Republican party?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If the gentleman asked me if there were in that bill more than twenty persons about whom I had got information they were going to vote with the Republican party, I could not answer that question. I do not now remember but of two of whom I was informed they were acting with the Conservative party. Of all who are here in the bill I only know of two who are going to vote with the Republican party. Their names are quite prominent, one has been elected to Congress from North Carolina, Mr. Boyden. One of them is a judge, or he holds some other office, whom I was told or the committee was told belonged to the Conservative party. How many are going with the Conservative party and how many with the Republican party I do not know. We were informed by the committee from North Carolina that they were persons from whom political disability should be removed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether in his action he has not been governed by the assurances from these men that all the persons whose disability he seeks to remove are in good faith going to vote with the Republican party? Is not that the principle upon which he has acted?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The gentleman's question is unnecessary. I have said that is not the question.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not a fact that the names of Mr. Houston and Mr. Jones were presented by and voted for by prominent Republican Senators. I ask him whether they were not unanimously voted for by every Republican Senator present?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not know, as I have not examined the Globe.

Mr. BECK. That is true.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I know that every Senator, except one from Kansas and one from West Virginia, voted to adopt this report. That I first saw in the Globe.

Now, sir, I wish to say, in reference to relieving from disability these men, that while I do not ask whether a man belongs to the Republican party I do stop to inquire whether the man is disposed to support the voice of the Union people, those who suppressed the rebellion, as expressed through Congress. If he is not disposed to act in accord with the Union men in supporting those laws I am indisposed to relieve him from political disability.

Sir, those rebels stand in the relation, I was going to say, as outlaws. These rebels are not entitled to any rights here. They could not come and demand anything of the Union people who put down the rebellion. The voice of the Union people has been organized into law, and these men must submit to that voice before they can ask me to vote to relieve them from disability. When I find such men as these acting in hostility to the Union people of their State and of the United States, and trying all they can to prevent reconstruction and peace and good order in the South, I will not relieve them. I will relieve a rebel who fought us gallantly, who was an original secessionist and went into the rebel army, but who gave up and surrendered in good faith and who now puts his shoulder to the wheel to support the Government. I will relieve such men sooner than one of those men who stood by the Union to the last hour and then went over to the rebellion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to see whether we understand the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield now to the gentlemen from Tennessee.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the Representatives from the State of Tennessee have been referred to in this discussion, it is due to the House and to ourselves that I should make a brief statement of the connection we have had with this subject. A few days ago I received information from the other end of this Capitol that George W. Jones, of Tennessee, and George S. Houston, of Alabama, were put into this bill in order to relieve them of political disabilities. I was requested, with two of my colleagues, to answer an inquiry as to how those gentlemen stood, how they had acted heretofore, and what was their position to-day. We wrote a joint note and returned it. We stated that George W. Jones was a rebel, that he went into the rebellion and was connected with it, and that if he had ever repented we did not know it. I now say to this House that I do not know it now. Mr. Jones has not said one word, written one line, or done one act to my knowledge toward the reorganization of the State government. Besides, there was no petition and no request on his part that I ever heard of for the removal of his disability. No member from Tennessee on this floor ever heard the expression of a desire on his part to be relieved. I understand that some Senator moved to insert his name into the bill without any petition on his behalf or any knowledge that he desired to be relieved. I stated to the members of the committee of this House that I did not know whether he desired it or not. I further stated to them that he had not changed to my knowledge.

Now, sir, I have no personal feeling toward Mr. Jones whatever. If he had come here, if he had sent a petition to me or to any member of this House, or of the Senate, jointly with a respectable list of true Union men, asking to be relieved of his disability, I would have thrown no obstacle in his way whatever. But until he has asked for relief why should we volunteer to grant it? He lives not in my district, but in that of my colleague, [Mr. MULLINS,] and if he resided there and desired to return to this House I should have no fear at all of his interfering with me. I believe we ought to relieve men when they desire it, but not until they express that desire. I for one am not willing to relieve them until they bring forth fruits meet for repentance, and are recommended by their loyal neighbors, who are presumed to know what they have been engaged in, and what course they have pursued since they abandoned the lost cause.

But a few days ago, in a convention held at Nashville, a distinguished member, General Forrest, in a speech, which I find reported in the newspapers, declared that he fought in the rebel cause four years, and believed he did right then and believed it now, and he had no compromise to make. That man is a delegate to the Democratic convention at New York on the coming 4th of July. When I am asked to relieve those men who declare that they have no retraction to make, no compromise to offer, who still claim that they did right, who still adhere to their former principles, I for one am not willing to relieve them. I presented the name of a gentleman for relief who was a rebel soldier and had it referred to the Committee on Reconstruction yesterday. I did it because there was a number of men, true and loyal men, in his county who desired his disability removed and he himself also desired it. Upon their recommendation I put upon the petition as strong an indorsement as I could, urging the committee to report in his favor.

Mr. MUNGUN. Will the gentleman answer me this question. Will he vote to give relief to Mr. Jones were he to vote the Democratic ticket?

Mr. STOKES. I answer that I care not how a man votes. I do not think he ought to vote that ticket nor any other other patriot.

Mr. MUNGUN. That is a mere matter of opinion.

Mr. STOKES. Certainly it is. Now, as I have said all I desire to say, I yield the floor.

Mr. MULLINS. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MULLINS. Probably that will be long enough; it is a short time nevertheless. I am unacquainted with the names of the parties that are presented here for pardon or for relief for the part they took in that "little unpleasantness" that was gotten up in the southern States, which I believe at the start was an original organization coming out from the Democratic party, and was never to be regarded as anything more or less than an overgrown, huge, Democratic secession mob, (laughter,) alone founded upon a desire for public plunder, or at least prompted by that together with another view that underlay it or was the great substratum upon which the foundation rested, to perpetuate the rule of the lords of the lash in the southern confederacy, in which the Democratic party could reign as lords and kings, as monarchs and whip-masters, to drive the negro and all who did not own them to lick the hand that lashed their backs. They went on in this dreadful war of death, the most inhuman one that has ever been visited upon any country, the Indian savage in his rude state to the contrary notwithstanding. [Laughter.] Nakedness exposed to the lash of the rod in the hands of rebels, and that upon the bare backs of the females, the loyal wives of the husbands of the South. They have run on for four long, dreadful, bloody years; they have strewn the South with human graves; and the loyal bones of the men of the North lie rotting upon the hills of the South without Christian burial to-day. And while they were thus running riot in blood and in triumph over the sacrifice of human life and assailing the stars and stripes, and civil, political, and religious governments, they were overtaken and crushed out. And now, when they have been crushed out, they come up and state what? That we surrendered; we surrendered. That is not the term now. They said they submitted. They never surrendered only when they were captured by the mighty armies of the Republic that were for the perpetuation of the Government of our fathers and sought to perpetuate the right of all beings to stand before the burning eye of God, accountable to Him who died for them, that the will of man should be free. That is the power that brought them down; that power that stood here under the stars and stripes that waved over the bloody fields of 1776 and rode the storm against the British lion. [Laughter.] It met the southern Anak and negro god and made it bow—the Democratic party as its figure-head—that had been reveling in blood, that had plundered the public Treasury of the United States and beggared it, that ravaged the public arsenals and carried away the arms, and had captured the whole sea-coast and every vessel in every harbor. And now, after having done that, "Let us alone," they say, "while we are pulling the apples from the tree; do not you throw rocks at us;" [laughter,] "just let us alone." We used some few gentle words and they only defied us and mocked at us.

Now, we came in council together and took to our bosom an old man called Abraham. [Laughter.] Ay, and he looked into that pit, and he saw there Dives who had driven the negro Lazarus from his table and would not give him even the crumbs. And he saw a figure coming up with its garments dyed in blood. "Who is that I see on the black horse, with the sword drawn against the rainbow of hope and promise of the world, the stars and stripes?" [Laughter.] "It is Death, riding under the ensign of the Democratic party of the South, in open war against human liberty and human rights." Then, oh, my soul, look down and wonder at them coming up now as doves, holy, and never having imbrued their hands in blood! [Laughter.] Now, we ask to be forgiven. Oh, yes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MULLINS. Give me two minutes longer.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will yield the gentleman five minutes longer.

Mr. MULLINS. Why, Mr. Speaker, I had to some extent forgotten that I was limited, for I was speaking on an illimitable subject, one that is as broad as the canopy of heaven spread over the civilized world; one, too, which not only shook the continent of America, but hurled in deep weeds of mourning all the people of the eastern world that look out for the coming of a promised land, for fear that it was to be smitten down, that it was to hang its head and become a despotism instead of the asylum of all the oppressed. Nevertheless, under theegis of the goddess of American liberty and the Federal flag we have met the diseases of the swamps; we have met every pestilence that walketh in darkness or wasteth at noon-day; we have lain under the burning sun of the South upon our arms. What to do? To catch and capture in a human way, but at the point of the bayonet, the Democratic party headed by John C. Calhoun at first, and then by Breckinridge, and Toombs, and Rhett, and Cheves, and the whole gang. And when we have caught them and got them they say, "Oh, now, look you here! you are breaking the Constitution into a thousand pieces." Why? "Why, you have taken my negroes and set them free, and such a thing never was known before in all the Israel of God." [Laughter.]

Why did we set them free? Why did we do it? You began the fight. You were killing your own children to protect human slavery. We thought we had better set them free, and if we had compromised on that we never could have saved the nest. To save the nest we had to break the eggs, and in breaking the eggs we thereby struck the snake—this mighty copperhead—a death wound, which even reached its vitals. [Laughter.] What was the very element that prompted you to go into rebellion? Human slavery. We struck at it, and when we reached that step, under the lead of that old monarch—that old monarch, did I say? I take that back; that old patriarch, Abraham of old, or Abraham of modern times, and under his lead we lifted our banner and said seven times seven we will march around the walls of this Babylon—this Democratic Babylon—like Joshua of old, and with our rams' horns give a great blast. [Laughter.] Finally we gave them the last blast. Sherman run through like a dose of salts, [laughter,] like a flying, fiery eagle, and Grant, like a mighty anaconda, [laughter,] stretched round and with his right hand took Sherman by the left, and Sherman with his right took Grant by the left, and they said, "Now a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether," and out fell the bottom of the rebellion, [laughter,] every hoop broke loose, and they were turned out upon the common plain of civilization and human rights loose, like the poor fellow's milk. [Laughter.] Then we told them, "Go home and mind your business; do not take up arms any more against us; and, look here, above all things obey the laws of your land, and you shall be protected in all your rights, personal and pecuniary." But we never at any time said, you shall have political rights; that never has been recorded.

One thing I declare now, that that obligation has never been released, Andrew Johnson to the contrary notwithstanding, and they are prisoners of war to-day. Now they come up to be pardoned. Every one of them was engaged in this unholy rebellion. They drove away from the State the loyal men of the State, from their homes and their families, unless they happened to own twenty negroes, when they could be allowed to remain as overseers. If they did not own that many negroes then the conscript officers came along. If they were dodged, what next? Why, the bloodhounds raised in the South to run down negroes were used by the conscript officers to run down these men. They did that in my own district; so help me God that was so. And now they say there was no crime in it. What are the facts? I want to enumerate them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Several MEMBERS. Let his time be extended.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Very well; I will yield for another five minutes.

Mr. MULLINS. Now about the bloodhounds around my own door. I was driven out because I loved the flag of my country, and never bowed the knee to Baal. I went out and we conquered these men. What next? We undertook to start a civil government there, and I undertake to say that ninety-nine out of every hundred of the rebels were against it. We brought many of them in, though they had been in the rebellion; and then no sooner do they get inside of the fortifications than they turn their backs upon us.

Now, here is George W. Jones, with whom I have been personally acquainted over forty years. He is personally a gentleman; he was raised a mechanic, learning the saddlers' trade,

I believe. He won his way up gradually. If he had not owned a negro he would not have voted in the southern confederacy. He was an elector on the Douglas ticket. As soon as the election was over the State was voted out of the Union by between forty-one and forty-two thousand. Mr. Jones bowed his head and went out with the State, and accepted a position in the confederate Congress at Richmond, as confederate representative from my congressional district. When he came home, and we attempted to set up a civil government, he never attempted to help us in any shape or form that I ever heard of. I know him personally; he has been in my house and I have been in his. I was sheriff for six years in succession, and every year he was there. He did not attempt to aid in setting up a civil government; had he done so, the franchise bill of Tennessee to-day would have admitted him to the ballot-box. But he is without the camp.

Now, without petitioning for it himself, or doing anything of the sort, he seeks to be relieved of his disabilities. Why? For the same reason, I fear, that so many are asking for it; because by the bad doings of this dreadful rebellion they have taken such an emetic that it vomits them out on the figure-head of the Democratic platform. He comes and asks pardon, not through himself, but through a friend. If he would help us set up a civil government I would go in for it. But the Ku-Klux-Klan broke in the windows of the post office, and he sat there—

[Here the hammer fell.]

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 867) for the relief of Jonathan Jessup, postmaster at York, Pennsylvania;

An act (H. R. No. 1120) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the names of certain vessels;

An act (H. R. No. 1218) appropriating money to sustain the Indian commission and carry out treaties made thereby;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 246) directing the Secretary of State to present to George Wright, master of the British brig J. and G. Wright, a gold chronometer, in appreciation of his personal services in saving the lives of three American seamen, wrecked at sea on board of the American schooner Lizzie F. Choate, of Massachusetts;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) for the relief of Robert L. Lindsay; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 295) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties on certain articles contributed to the National Association of American Sharpshooters.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill for the removal of political disabilities; upon which Mr. FARNSWORTH was entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a short time?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. For how long?

Mr. BROOKS. For five or ten minutes.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will yield to my colleague on the Committee on Reconstruction for five minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. I had intended to reply to the honorable gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH.] But the interposition of the very eloquent speech of the very eloquent gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MULLINS] has quite disarmed me of saying what I had intended to say. And I would say to my friend from Ohio, who usually sits near me, [Mr. BINGHAM,] that if he does not look out for his laurels he will soon find out that in all respects as regards eloquence and poetical beauty the star of Tennessee will outshine the star of Ohio.

This bill should be carefully looked at in order to be fully understood. When the House passed this bill full of names uncounted we were undertaking to do a retailing business in the way of amnesty. The only difference between us on this side of the House and the Republican party is that we would pardon by wholesale, while the other side of the House would pardon altogether by retail. This bill as it passed the House with its hundreds of names, was our peculiar budget in that line of business. The Senate, not to be outdone by us, added on a whole host of names; I have not counted them, but the correspondent of the New York Tribune, who seems to have had time to count them, says there were twelve hundred of them.

Now, I wish gentlemen on the other side to understand what they are doing. I am for both wholesale and retail amnesty. So far as I can speak for the Democratic party, we intend to enter into both branches of the business, wholesale and retail. I intend to swallow the whole of these bills without reading them.

Among these names which the Senate have added on are some of the very worst red-handed rebels of the South; red-handed rebels who were engaged in all the business which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MULLINS] has so eloquently described; slaveholders, overseers, slave-drivers, whipmasters, scorpion-drivers, secession devils.

Mr. MULLINS. Did I say all that? [Laughter.]

Mr. BROOKS. They are the worst sort of characters. Yet I am for pardoning them. And the great point of difference here seems to be whether or not we shall put on the names of two others.

Mr. MULLINS. Is the gentleman in favor of pardoning unrepentant rebels?

Mr. BROOKS. I am for mercy and pardon to all; I would pardon everybody. Does any gentleman know among these twelve hundred names how many repented? I venture to say the Reconstruction Committee has not read the names. Do you know anything about these men for whom you vote?

Mr. MULLINS. Very few of them.

Mr. BROOKS. How do you know they are repentant?

Mr. MULLINS. I have not yet said that I would vote for or against them.

Mr. BROOKS. Oh, yes; you will vote for them.

Mr. MULLINS. I expect so.

Mr. BROOKS. They will all be voted for. They will all be put through. The only distinction the gentleman from Illinois draws is whether they will support the reconstruction laws. All are rebels with him who oppose the reconstruction laws, and all are loyal in the South who will support the reconstruction laws. Loyalty has a new definition every day. At this day and this hour it is the support of the reconstruction acts. The definition the gentleman from Illinois gives of loyalty would exclude six hundred thousand Democratic voters in the State of New York at this day and this hour; to become seven hundred thousand, I believe, in the coming November election. All those would be excluded, and more than that, hundreds and thousands of Republicans, who, like the Democrats, are opposed to the reconstruction laws. Yet this is the definition to be laid down upon which men are to be pardoned. The question is to be, do they or not support the reconstruction laws? Under that definition the Executive of the country, elected by your own party, would not be loyal. Abraham Lincoln would not be loyal under the gentleman's definition of loyalty. Neither would the majority of the Supreme Court, for they are opposed to the reconstruction laws. If Congress had permitted, it is believed, in the McCordle case, they would have declared the reconstruction laws unconstitutional. Such is the general belief. It was so much the belief of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK], and the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON], that they took insidious action to hurry through the House a bill to repeal the powers of the Supreme Court of the United States to prevent their decision in the McCordle case.

I wish the gentlemen on the other side of the House would define what constitutes loyalty, devise some fixed definition. A short time ago any man who was not in favor of impeachment was not a loyal man. Before that there were other tests of loyalty. They vary from day to day in such a manner that it is impossible for southern men to know what constitutes loyalty. Is it not time, Mr. Speaker, that this foolery was over? Will not the country soon be disgraced with the exhibition of such bills as this in detail, these exhibitions of mere party pardon, got up for mere party purposes in the South?

Mr. MAYNARD. Will not my friend try his hand to give us a definition of loyalty?

Mr. BROOKS. Certainly, sir, if my time is extended.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will yield to the gentleman for ten minutes more.

Mr. BROOKS. I will tell the gentleman my definition of loyalty, and I am happy to give my meaning of loyalty. Loyalty is a French word. Loyalty, or lealty, is faithfulness to the law. That alone constitutes what is loyalty. All these modern interpositions and interpolations have been the invention of men who had in view nothing but party purposes. Whoever, sir, supports the Constitution of the United States, whoever comes here swearing to support the supreme law of the land, is a loyal man—loyal to the Constitution, loyal to the country. Those who create a new definition of loyalty, who say I am not loyal because I do not belong to the Radical or Republican party, invent a false definition of the word loyalty.

In our own native tongue, after our Revolution, there was no such word as loyalty. It referred alone to those who had been faithful to the king and queen of Great Britain. Here it now means, not faithful to king and queen, but faithful to the party in power. What constitutes loyalty now is fidelity to party, not fidelity to the Constitution, the laws; the country, but fidelity to the administration of party. Whenever party and country return to the real meaning of the word loyalty, when it shall mean only fidelity to the supreme law of the land—the Constitution of the United States—then will we have begun an era happy and auspicious. Good feeling will then once more exist in this land.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. BROOKS. Certainly.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask the gentleman if every member of the House and of the Senate from the southern States who went into the rebellion had not taken that same oath of loyalty to the Constitution which he now requires?

Mr. BROOKS. I will answer the gentleman by saying that if you will give me a committee I will venture the assertion that I can prove that five hundred of the names in these two bills I now hold before me have taken a like oath in some manner or form and have violated that oath; and yet you propose to pardon them in a wholesale bill containing over twelve hundred names.

Mr. LYNCH. I think the fact that that oath was not sufficient is a good reason why another should be substituted, the same which we have taken ourselves and which the gentleman and his party have to take.

Mr. BROOKS. Sir, I know not what oaths you mean to administer now to our party, but if you will give us the same which you give to your own party we are quite willing to accept it. What I object to here is the selection of a few particular men because they belong to your party; that you have selected them solely by party. Such is the organization of the human mind that the most extreme rebels of the South, the first and foremost secessionist, will be the first to come here and crouch and cringe before the Radical party and demand their pardon, while those who were at last driven into rebellion by the high handed power of the secessionists who had control of the States, such men as Houston, of Alabama, and Jones, of Tennessee, will be the last to come here and claim the exemption which you propose in this bill.

Sir, I knew Mr. Jones and Mr. Houston. I served with them both in this House amid more tumultuous scenes of excitement between the South and the North than I have seen at a later period. It was pending the compromise bills of 1850. Side by side with those men were the Clays, the Websters, the Casses, and the Douglasses of the Senate, and other gallant men. Here on this floor stood Houston and Jones battling for no secession, but for the nationality of this Union, resisting to the very last secession, though following their States in the act of the secession wrongfully, I think. And yet now, when the Senate has inserted in this bill a pardon for these two gentlemen, we are asked to concur in the report of the committee by the rejection of those two gentlemen, because they are Democrats, while, out of over twelve hundred, six or seven hundred, so far as we know unrepentant rebels, are to be pardoned to-day by the two bills before me. Take them, page, [handing the bill and amendment to a page,] take them to the Clerk. I go for the whole. I am a wholesale not a retail dealer in all matters of pardon.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I have already stated on this floor, and it is, perhaps, unnecessary to repeat it again, that the conference committee of the House in making this report have not asked the question whether a man belongs to the Republican or the Democratic party. They have made no discrimination of that sort. Of course there is no necessity for the pardon of anybody unless he has done something. George W. Jones and George S. Houston were members of Congress when their States seceded. They went out. I do not think they advised secession, but they went with their States, and accepted elections to the confederate congress. As members of that congress they took an oath to support the confederacy against the Constitution of the United States. That makes them subject to these disabilities. They have never asked Congress to pardon them. They are not, as we are, "loyal to the law"—adopting the test of my friend from New York. And that was the test I stated that the committee applied to these men, not whether they are loyal to a party, but "loyal to the law." Those men are not loyal to the laws of Congress, to the organic voice of the Union men of the United States; but they say, "Your laws are unconstitutional and void; you have broken the Constitution." They are in combination with arrant rebels, who were original rebels. They are not in accord with the Union men of their States. They are not recommended by the Union men for pardon.

Now, if it so happens that we can only find now and then a Democrat in all of those States who is a fit subject for pardon, is it the fault of the Republican party? is it the fault of the Reconstruction Committee? is it my fault? By no means. If it so happens that there are but few in all the South now affiliating with the Democratic party who are fit subjects for this amnesty, it is not the fault of the Republican party; it is their own fault. They go to the party which is nearest to their love, and I suppose a fellow feeling makes gentlemen wondrous kind. The conference committee, therefore, struck out those two names, and the Senate have agreed to the report. We are told by all the members from Tennessee on this floor that the conference committee did right in rejecting the name of Mr. Jones. I, too, knew these gentlemen here in Congress; I served with them; I knew them very well. I have no doubt they are honest gentlemen as the world goes, and when they come to us and say, "Pardon us; we are sorry we went into the rebel congress; we accept the situation in good faith; we will take hold and reconstruct our State governments upon the principles laid down in your laws, and restore peace and concord and harmony," then I am willing to take them by the hand and pardon them. I say again it is not so much a question what a man was before the war as what he has been during and since the war. I call the previous question.

Mr. COBURN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am appealed to by gentlemen all around me to press a vote.

Mr. COBURN. I regard this as a very important subject, one of prime importance, and some of us do not agree with the committee.

Mr. PAINE. I hope my colleague on the committee will yield a few moments.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If the gentleman has any name that he wishes to criticize I will yield to him.

Mr. COBURN. There is no name which I wish to criticize.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Then I cannot yield.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WARD. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will now yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If I have the floor I will yield a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to the floor for one hour to close the debate.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Then I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN.]

Mr. COBURN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Reconstruction have not seen fit to report to the House the facts in connection with this bill, either general or special. We literally know nothing of the former or present condition of these men—more than sixteen hundred in number—whether they have applied for pardon, whether they have sincerely acted with the Union party, whether they have established themselves in the confidence of Union men, or whether the communities in which they reside need their help in the work of reconstruction. Their mere names are submitted, in most instances; that is all.

To my mind this is a subject of the gravest importance, and one which cannot be too thoroughly discussed. This bill relieving citizens of southern States from the disabilities incurred by rebellion and treason is, to say the least, premature. I hesitate to make this assertion in the face of the report of the Committee on Reconstruction, and in view of the action of this House upon the bill relieving certain citizens of North Carolina, some four hundred in number, from the penalties and disabilities in a like case. I had no reason to doubt the sincerity of those persons in their attachment to the genuine cause of reconstruction, and could possibly have no feeling of animosity to them or to those who now apply for relief. By far the greater number are names wholly unfamiliar and in fact unknown to the members of this House, and would never have been known here as former rebels but for the fact of this measure submitted for our consideration in their behalf. Nothing personal can enter into our judgment upon this matter, and what we do we can safely do under the guidance of those general principles and those comprehensive ideas which, if justly founded, must result in a happy solution of the most difficult problem the termination of war has left us to solve.

This bill proposes to restore the persons named in it to all their rights as American citizens, notwithstanding their recent acts of rebellion and treason; and the avowed object is to put them at once in a condition to hold offices and participate in the political affairs of the reconstructed State. It is more than pardon, more than amnesty, in the ordinary sense of those terms. It is a prize offered to those who have, by their recent action in politics, given assurance that they have present sympathy in our plan of reconstruction; a prize given to recent deadly enemies which we only bestow upon the citizens of friendly nations after at least five years of probation; a prize never before offered by a Government to rebellious citizens; a prize that may prove to them the worse than useless means of making new strife, and to us a sword given into hands that will pierce our very joints and marrow.

These States lately in rebellion have citizens who have been loyal during the war and who require no legislation to enable them, and in view of this fact we may well pause before a policy is adopted which will give to rebels lately in arms political supremacy over the loyal and faithful citizens who braved the persecutions of their neighbors and the terrors of the organized outlaws who surrounded them, or who may have borne arms in defense of the honor, the laws, and the flag of their native land, even though these Union men may have been poor and unlettered, unused to political management, unskilled in debate, untried in the responsibilities of office, and timid in the exercise of power.

It may be well questioned whether these qualities are not to be preferred in the officers of a people just emerging from civil war, to those of men whose self-sufficiency and daring made them leaders in revolt; whose arts led astray their humble neighbors; whose arrogance overawed the halting patriot into silence; whose wealth gave sinews at an early day to the still feeble revolution, or whose long experience and lofty position put them in control of whole communities. It may be matter of serious question whether the modest, quiet, obedient, simple-minded, brave, loyal citizen is not to be preferred in reorganizing to him who has long held office, has with ready facility taken prominent part both for and against and then for his country, who regards himself as belonging to the ruling class, and who feels that society rests upon the shoulders of such as himself.

But aside from considerations of this kind, the fact of voluntary and flagrant rebellion alone against the laws of the land, the act of forgetfulness of that supreme duty every citizen owes to his country, should, for a time at least, work disabilities to every member of society guilty of them, be his condition high or low. Upon this principle the fourteenth article of the Constitution is founded, and scarcely a loyal man in the land was found who did not approve of this feature. Hardly has it become a part of our system before sweeping enactments are introduced calculated to nullify it and opening the way virtually to its abolition. Unless some overruling necessity can be shown such a course would seem suicidal.

The following summary of General Grant's report to Congress, made up from the report of district commanders, shows the condition of the voting population of the unreconstructed States:

"Virginia—General Scofield's report gives the whole number of voters registered in Virginia at 225,933, of whom 129,111 are whites, and 105,832 colored. Of these 4,417 whites and 12,887 blacks failed to vote on the question of calling a convention. Judging from the tax list and other data, the number of whites who failed to register is 16,343. There is no report of the number of disfranchised in Virginia under the reconstruction laws.

"North Carolina—General Canby reports 106,721 white and 72,932 colored voters in North Carolina, nearly all of whom voted. It is estimated that 19,477 whites and 3,289 blacks failed to register, and of these 11,686 whites are disfranchised.

"South Carolina—In South Carolina there are 46,853 white and 80,550 black voters registered; 10,992 whites and 4,167 blacks failed to register. About seventy-five per cent. of the whites are disfranchised.

"Georgia—In Georgia 96,333 white and 95,168 colored voters are registered, of whom 69,333 whites and 24,753 colored failed to vote; 10,000 whites are disfranchised and 8,500 refused to register.

"Alabama—In Alabama there are 61,295 white and 104,518 black voters, of whom 37,155 white and 32,947 colored failed to vote. There are no data to show the number disfranchised.

"Florida—In Florida few are disfranchised, and nearly all are registered and have voted. The number of whites is 11,914, and blacks 16,079.

"Mississippi—General Gillem says no data is kept from which to ascertain the number of votes of the different colors in Mississippi.

"Arkansas—In Arkansas 25,697 failed to vote.

"Louisiana—General Hancock reports that 45,218 whites and 84,436 blacks were registered in Louisiana. Of this number 50,489 failed to vote, but in what proportion the general is unable to say, nor can he report how many are disfranchised.

"Texas—In Texas 55,633 whites and 49,497 colored votes were registered, of whom 1,757 whites and 35,932 blacks voted. The number disfranchised cannot be ascertained."

Out of this number it would seem possible to select enough of men, white men, too, if you please, to hold the offices and manage, for the time being, public affairs. The fact that persons laboring under disabilities have been elected is not proof conclusive that only such persons can be found to fill the offices. It is rather evidence that those elected have prominence in society, and have recently taken a stand among Union men; goes to the question of notoriety rather than loyalty, and is indicative that the person belongs to the self-styled ruling class rather than to the moderate and gentle number of those who shrink from the public gaze, and avoid the strifes of politics.

And who is this so-called ruling class? Mainly composed of rich and prominent men in business and the professions; who were in a great measure instrumental in bringing on the rebellion and precipitating the country into war, needlessly and recklessly; men who sinned against light and knowledge; who have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. Many of them learned, many of them refined, many of them polished and cultivated, many of them ornaments in social life, and, except for this one damning taint, mainly engendered by slavery, as noble specimens of men as the nation has produced. I mean the fixed impression that they are and ought to be the ruling class of this country; that they are born, by the grace of God, to ride, booted and spurred, over the rest of mankind.

But there are others among them whose pride and arrogance are not coupled with vigor of intellect and elegant cultivation. These men have tyrannized, socially and politically, too long. They are not fit to be a ruling class; and nowhere else could or would have been. Let them die out now. Let us have no more hot-beds; no more green-houses for such tropical plants. What other state of society could have ever given prominence to such contemptible fellows as Pryor, Wigfall, Rhett, Brooks, or Keitt? They really represent no healthy element of society anywhere. Just as the fungus represents decaying wood, just as the baleful miasma represents the fetid, reeking marsh, they represented society. The war has cleaned off the face of those States, and putrid decay is no longer there. New vegetation will spring up, new nature will replace the old.

As an illustration of the unhealthy tendencies of the false ideas held by the ruling class in that region, we have very recently had laid upon our tables a pamphlet prepared by Wade Hampton, Samuel McGowan, and other gentlemen, composing the State central executive committee of the Democrats of South Carolina, in which is set forth an explicit statement showing lists of the State officers, the delegates to the constitutional convention, and the members of the Legislature, with the amount of taxes charged to them, which is very small, and, in most cases, nothing. The members of the constitutional convention, numbering one hundred and twenty-one; and one hundred and twenty of these paid, in the aggregate, $370 69; that ninety-seven out of one hundred and twenty-three members of the House of Representatives pay but $60 39; and that neither the Governor, secretary of State, comptroller general, treasurer, attorney general, or superintendent of public instruction pay any tax. These facts are stated as the strongest argument against the propriety of allowing such men to hold office and reorganize a new State government.

Such an argument is not surprising in the mouths of such men. They submit with confidence the statistics to prove that wealth is a necessary element of ability to hold and discharge well the duties of office. Comment is unnecessary. Plain republicans have supposed that poverty was not a crime, and could not work disabilities. But here is the assertion that poverty, not treason, is the disabling condition. Let such men remember that the poor, unlettered fishermen of Galilee were selected to do a grander work of reconstruction than ours.

The true representative of the South is the laboring man, the man of vigor, the man of nerve, the man of business, the man of enterprise, the self-reliant, independent, active, hard-working American, not the impotent, arrogant, lazy, pampered, conceited child of slavery, too proud to work, too feeble to shift for himself; just the man to hanker for official position. The man who works must rule. Labor hardens his muscle, steadies his nerves, clears his brain, gives him confidence, patience, activity, and ingenuity. Responsibility makes robust his intellect, and makes manly his character. The working nations rule the world, so the workers of a people rule it, and ought to.

The power should be put into the hands of these working men who have all the true manhood in them, who develop the land, who have inspected and know its wants, and who own it or will own it. The brains of a people always accompany its industrious hands and its painstaking eyes.

Abolish at once all thought of a ruling class but one, and that is the one of merit. This is true democracy. Invite in the honest foreigner. Tell the poor laboring man—poor white trash, if you will sneer at him—to take hold, fill the offices, look to the Government himself, and let no one manage his politics, and it will give such men force and character and power. Cut them off from the interference of these old traitorous intriguers, keep such men out in the cold, keep them silent, keep them under ban, keep them in disgrace, and these true, genuine, loyal, liberty-loving, God-fearing men will come up and fill the places of trust and power. Better that illiterate men should be honored than that unprincipled men should be. Better let him be Governor who cannot write his name than he who has signed it in the cause of revolt and national dishonor.

But if you once break the barrier in favor of these gentlemen, who claim to be alone fit to occupy official position in the South, all will push for admission, the checks will yield and fall down and finally every traitor will pass through, and the moral effect on the present and coming generations cannot be measured. The hallowed name of country will be a by-word and treason will not be known as a crime.

And while I say this, let me say there are many men of the South who were in the army of rebellion and in its civil service whom I can trust; men who at the outbreak of war were loyal Union men, and whom I shall fail in describing in that trying and terrible day; their steadfastness of soul, their forgetfulness of self, their fervent loyalty, their unfaltering faith. When organized society broke away from the Union, they refused to go; when their neighbors were drawn off by the powerful influences and sympathies of their section, when some sold out for civil, others for military position, they could not be bought. Some were imprisoned, some exiled, some slain, their property seized or destroyed, their families scattered, their friends turned to bitter foes.

Talk of martyrs, here they are—talk of heroes, here are many—talk of devotion and patriotism, here they are, blazing and blazing on the rude hearthstone, far away in the woods, far up on the mountain side, in the distant, lonely glen, where poverty and ignorance and obscurity dwell. In that dreadful time love of country for a while seemed to have fled the abodes of wealth and refinement and power, and to have sought a shelter by the humble firesides of the poor.

But as the war continued, and the organization of treason became perfected and the fatal lines of the confederacy, like some mighty serpent, closed around them, these men were overcome; a reign of terror, a ferocious despotism swept them into the torrents of war;

the conscript officers dragged them by the thousand into the rebel army, and the rich traitor's war became the poor Union man's fight. And those who loved and could cheerfully have died for their country were thus mustered in hostile array against it. Such men I can forgive. Rather let me say they have done nothing that needs forgiveness. But for those who dragged them from their allegiance, who uprooted society, who betrayed the flag, who devised this vast network of iniquity, what measure of atonement can secure them forgiveness?

We should take solemn warning from the language of the Republican State convention of Maryland, held in May:

"The Republicans of this State are the property of no man or set of men. They have been taught the necessity of individual thought and independent action.

"It was because the masses of the South allowed themselves to be led, because they allowed a few persons claiming to be their superiors by birth, family connections, or wealth, to do their thinking, that against their better judgment they were plunged into the vortex of rebellion, from which they are now emerging decimated and impoverished.

"The people are not likely to repeat that folly. If men would be leaders they must be locomotives, and not figure-heads. They must pull, and not go only when they are pushed."

I say frankly that these States had better remain unreconstructed than be reorganized and fall under Democratic control. Their only safety is in being established Radical Republican. Military rule, and even anarchy, are better than democracy, the most odious type of civil government.

That State is now groaning under a military despotism. Provision has been made for the raising of an enormous military fund by fines and taxes, and for the constant drilling and disciplining of the citizens as soldiers. Every offense which human ingenuity can invent is created, and even civil magistrates are made the tools of carrying on the behests of the Governor in controlling the people of the State. As a specimen the following extract from a Maryland paper shows in some measure the rigor with which the new military law is enforced:

"James McNew, of company D, sixth regiment Maryland National Guard, was fined two dollars and costs by Justice Wheeler, on the complaint of Captain Smith, commanding the company, that he had violated section thirty-five of chapter four hundred and fourteen of the militia law of Maryland. This section imposes a fine for absence from the regular parades prescribed by law. This is the first case of the kind that has happened. Justice Wheeler has now thirty-five similar cases before him."

Justices of the peace are empowered to render such and other military judgments on the certificates of captains of companies without further evidence, notwithstanding the laws of the United States and the Constitution provide that such military trainings shall be according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

What is the condition of Maryland to-day? In the language of the Republican convention of May 6, "The Republican party is neither holding the fruits of the present nor laboring for the future." "Maryland is an unreconstructed State." "We cannot carry a county in the State." "Disloyal public functionaries are dominating in our State and domineering over loyalists." "A standing army is eating out the substance of a tax-ridden people." And yet Maryland was a Union State at one time since the war. The malign influences of the "leading class" have led her astray.

A mere glance at affairs in Kentucky will show the consequences of a complete enfranchisement of rebels. There men are honored, put in position and trusted for their services in the cause of treason. The Lexington Gazette advocates the election of General John S. Williams as Commonwealth's attorney for that district, on the ground of his services to the confederacy during the war, and claims that his victory at Saltville should elect him to any office in the State. The present attorney general of the State is John Rodman, who served as a colonel in Bragg's army. The auditor of State is D. Howard Smith, who was the chief of John Morgan's staff. The city council of Louisville within a few months, fired with hate of the Union, passed resolutions asking Congress to volunteer to relieve John C. Breckinridge from the penalties of treason, inasmuch as he is too honorable a man to acknowledge that he has done wrong by rebellion, and cannot stoop to ask as a favor what Congress should accord as a right, adding that his eminent abilities are needed in managing the political affairs of the State; an argument which we have almost heard duplicated by Republicans in this Hall. Breckinridge is a good specimen of the type called the "ruling class" of the South. A man of ability and cultivation, proud, arrogant, self-sufficient, disobedient to law, boastful of honor, but of a kind of honor that has found no definition as such elsewhere than with such as he. A few stump speeches for reconstruction, a few weeks probation, and he may knock at the door and come in with his garments white as wool. His ambition and ability would give him a high place among Republicans, and the Union soldiers and tax-payers would soon be taught to look with reverence on the man who betrayed us in the Senate, fought us in the field, plotted ruin to the nation, and brought on the untold horrors of civil strife. We did not come here to begin such a policy as this. The people sent us here for other purposes.

Akin to this policy is that which leads certain persons to collect large sums of money for the benefit of the Virginia college over which General Lee presides. This institution has furnished no evidence that its influence will be given toward the Union and its institutions. The following extract from a letter of Gerritt Smith, defending his course in giving a large sum to this college, is of itself the best specimen of this magnanimous madness that has yet found its way into print.

PETERBORO, April 15, 1868.

To the Editor of the Standard:

I see in your and other newspapers, and also in letters which I receive, complaints of my giving money to a college in Virginia. Men who stand very high in my esteem join in these complaints.

Although my own heart does not abound in love, I nevertheless seem to rely more than do most persons on the power of love to remove the wrongs and quiet the troubles of life—of public as well as of private life.

The South surrendered; but she still hated the North. My plan of getting this hatred out of her heart was for the North to love it out. Hence my proposition for giving the South a large sum of money—say fifty or a hundred million dollars—to help her out of the ruin which the sin of oppression, common to herself and the North, had brought upon her. Such and other naturally-accompanying expressions of love and pity would have palsied and purged out her hatred. But so it was that my plan for this love-conquest did not meet with much favor.

I was glad to be bailed for Jefferson Davis—not merely nor mainly from regard to him, whose long imprisonment without a trial was so cruel and so utterly indefensible; but also to show my good feeling toward the South, and to do in this wise what little I could toward bringing the North and South together. But the Republican party denounced the bailing of Jefferson Davis, and, in so doing, flung away a golden opportunity for strengthening itself, and for giving peace to the country.

A few weeks ago I was asked to help a college in Virginia. It is true that I had, from the time the South laid down her arms, been doing what I could for some of her white families whom the war had impoverished. But while I had been giving thousands to promote the education of her blacks, I had given nothing to her white schools. Now, however, I had an opportunity to give to one of them—the one, moreover, which was founded by the "Father of his Country." I confess that I was glad to improve the opportunity, and that I was sorry I could not make a tenfold greater gift.

You think that "Washington College" hates the North. Perhaps it does. But should the North endow it, there would be hardly a possibility for it to continue to hate her.

We have here the spectacle of that amiable and interesting old gentleman, Gerritt Smith, attempting to make a "love conquest" of the southern heart. He is wooing the stubborn damsel with money, and, like many another lovely, smitten, hapless wight, setting high value on his solid charms, thinks he can buy up her tender regards. If he should succeed, it will be the first instance in the long history of the workings of the gentle passion.

"Like Diana's kiss, unasked, unsought, Love gives itself, but is not bought."

To bestow favors on such institutions, under such influences, with such teachers as Lee and Maury, seems to argue a moral obtuseness and bluntness, a forgetfulness of the distinctions between right and wrong. So long as there are thousands of poor, uneducated patriots, why neglect them and educate traitors? So long as there are thousands of solid, reliable, Union men, why put power in the hands of their enemies?

As a specimen of the sentiments of some of the leading presses of this "ruling class" I quote the following passages, clearly indicating their purposes as to our cherished measures of reconstruction.

The Memphis Appeal says:

"The rescue of the South from the utter damnation that seems about to fall upon and overwhelm us all, is only to be effected by restoring the powers of the Government to the hands of white men; and denying to the negro, now and forever, without exception or qualification, the right to vote. To effect this only do we struggle.

"Between us and the black man there can be no other relation than that of patron and client, unless he is fool enough to make himself a danger and a nuisance in the State. If he will keep his proper place we will to the utmost of our power and influence secure to him his freedom and his civil rights, and none shall oppress or make him afraid, if we can prevent it. If he is not content with that it may be that he will, by and by, have to be content with less; and if so, he may thank those for it who have misled him.

"To give these ignorant, stupid sans-culottes the right to vote in municipal affairs, and to elect the mayors and aldermen of cities, is a union of villainy and absurdity so despicable that it would provoke a sardonic smile on the countenance of Beelzebub. To any one who has given them that right we would vote nothing but a halter; for, compared with it, robbery and murder are laudable acts and meritorious services done the Commonwealth."

The Mobile Advertiser says:

"The detestable work of the herd of adventuring scoundrels and ignorant negroes assembled at Montgomery is complete, and the 'abomination of abominations,' as it came from their hands, is to be submitted, in the shape of a monstrous thing named a constitution, to what its fiendish authors call the suffrages of the people."

The Charlottesville (Virginia) Chronicle comments thus on the result of the election in that State in October last:

"By Tuesday's work the negroes have set their seal to their doom. There is no longer any peace. The question now is, who shall occupy and rule the territory between forty and thirty-two degrees north latitude—the blacks or the whites?"

The Lynchburg Virginian, on the same occasion, utters a similar threat:

"It only remains for the white people of Virginia to look to their interest and labor to protect it. They should concert measures without delay to fill the State with white laborers from the North and from Europe. They must crowd the negro out. They must rid the State of an element that will hinder its prosperity; an element that, under the influence of base white demagogues—themselves without property—would tax the property of others to relieve themselves of obligation to educate their children and care for their paupers."

The Lynchburg News says:

"We are gratified to learn that one hundred and fifty negroes, employed at the Wythe iron mines, all of whom voted the straight-out Radical ticket, were discharged on Tuesday by the owner of the works. This is precisely the step which every employer should take."

The Petersburg (Virginia) Index says:

"Send them adrift unhesitatingly. Let them learn how unsatisfactory are the husks upon which the Radicals would have them feed. They will soon weary of the diet and then, when they have proved repentance, let them return and be assisted in their efforts to become worthy people. But the offense has been grievous, and the penance should be severe, and the conversion must be proved by works. Until it is established they should be shunned as enemies.

"Let no man sleep under your roof, break your bread, drink of your cup, who has spoken at the polls in favor of that party which would despoil your house, embitter your crust with slavery, and fill your cup with the poison of humiliation."

In addition look at the following extracts from the Montgomery Alabama Mail, made in further illustration of the spirit of hate still animating a very large body of these people. The paper was published on the 11th of February last, and since the election held on the new constitution:

"Our 'White' Black List.—The Roll of Dishonor.—See Who and What They Are.—Below we give the names of the renegade, or brevet whites, who voted last week in this city for the bogus constitution, framed by carpet-bag adventurers and ignorant negroes, and who by their votes have denounced the white race, and proclaimed themselves in favor of negro supremacy and equality. It is a consolation to know that the number is small. Let their names be preserved and entered upon the roll of dishonor:

"George Ely, carpet-bagger and negro candidate for judge of probate.

"W. T. Hatchett, chief of registration.

"J. W. Dimick, carpet-bagger and bureauite.

"N. B. Cloud, negro candidate for superintendent of education.

"W. B. Cloud, the 'son of his father,' formerly a confederate soldier, took the 'test oath,' and was one of the election managers."

And so on through more than a column of similar abuse.

The subjoined article appears in the same number of the Mail:

"Discharged.—Within the past few days a large number of negro employes have been discharged in this city, who, by voting for the negro constitution directly arrayed themselves against the whites and their business interests. Served them right. The negroes were warned of this in time, but many of them preferred to go with the scallawags and carpet-baggers, and against their true friends, and hence many of them are now out of employment. We are glad to see that this plan has been generally adopted in nearly all parts of the State."

Then we have an article denouncing General Meade for proposing to extend the time of voting, which winds up as follows:

"If General Meade again lends himself to the Radicals and negroes, we shall be greatly disappointed. If he intends to commit such an outrage upon the rights and liberties of the white race, now that the infamous constitution has been defeated by a large majority, we would suggest, in order to save time, that General Meade issue an edict, stating 'that the negro constitution of Alabama is hereby declared to be adopted.' Such an order would save time and money; and while it would be denounced as an outrage and usurpation by the civilized world, it would be applauded by the negroes and their carpet-bag candidates for office."

But it may be said why quote these expressions of blatant rebels in opposition to the relief of repentant rebels whose speeches, influence, and acts are now with us? To this I say that the barrier once broken down and the way opened for the relief of such men, and many thousands will soon find some means to obtain it; by an altered tone, through sympathy, by personal influence, by the use of money, by the help of friends, by some of the many ways which men facile to enter the ranks of treason may adopt. Such men are not to be trusted. And there will be no end to their solicitation and electioneering for the purposes of relief if once the opportunity is offered to procure it by such means. The difficulties attendant upon acquiring a proper knowledge of the position of applicants for relief are almost insurmountable. Nothing short of the labors of an investigating committee upon the character and standing of each applicant will give satisfactory knowledge, and no person should be relieved until such a committee had been appointed and made a thorough examination.

The danger is that in a short time the acts of relief will be granted as personal favors, as matters of friendship, or as mere electioneering tricks without reference to the opinions or principles of the applicant; just as legislative divorces are granted in some States. The determination of a question of returned loyalty or political regeneration is rather a judicial than a legislative one, and should in all cases be tested by the application of certain general rules and not otherwise. The applicant for pardon should file a petition, should show his attachment to the Union, should show the necessity to the community and to the reorganization of society.

In all the history of nations we find no parallel to the magnanimity we have displayed to rebels. When Sherman's army came back on their grand review, no trophies, no treasure, no captures graced the train. The war-worn veterans, covered with the tattered blue, bore aloft as their only emblem of victorious pride their soiled and shot-torn flags—the mementoes of the strifes and storms that had been silenced forever. They had met and snatched from rebel hands the arms of treason, and bid their foes depart in peace in the very spirit of the Redeemer. No confiscation, no banishments, no levies, no imprisonments, no executions ensued. Not one traitor was hung. And the chief of the rebellion is at large, bailed out by famous Union men.

The constitutional amendment, mild, wise, just, kind in all its enactments, is the basis of reconstruction. The clemency of this plan in reëfranchising these men, politically prostrated by their own crimes, if it results successfully will be the marvel of mankind. Many men who deserve imprisonment, banishment, with forfeiture of all property; many who deserve the halter, have not only their liberty and their property, but, in addition, full civil and political rights; may vote and hold offices, and assist in managing the very Government they so recently attempted to destroy. Monarchs have made restorations and granted amnesties, but they were to subjects, not rulers; and they who had been in rebellion were graciously permitted to live and enjoy the protection of the laws, never claiming the right to make them.

If treason is not to be made odious thus, pray tell me how is it to be done? If it is as safe to fight on the side of treason as on the side of the nation, what check is there upon rebellion and revolt. If each party only take the hazards of war, the risks of battle and disease, and when peace is made come together on equal footing to determine future policy, a premium will be held out for treason, and it will be more profitable to fight against than for one's country, for in the event of successful revolt the insurgents will have seized a vast prize, while the successful patriot must share with his enemy and conquered fellow-citizen, the very fruits of victory, and the disposition of all that has been attained by the force of arms. Adopt such a rule and our country is launched upon a sea of anarchy, disorder, violence, and inevitable ruin. No race of men will madly peril their lives for a government which cannot discriminate in their favor. They will prefer a despot, who at least knows and recognizes his friends.

We are yet in the midst of the work of reconstruction. Secretly and openly its enemies are busy day and night to thwart our measures. Property, liberty, life, all are in constant peril. The whole South is full of these men, banded together by deadly oaths, to put down and destroy Union men. Murders and burnings and the most barbarous outrages are constantly perpetrated upon our friends. The Ku-Klux-Klans, banded together for diabolical purposes, prevail wherever a hatred of the Union and a love of the "lost cause" are found. Slavery is attempted to be reëstablished by the foulest means in various places; in South Carolina as a punishment for crime upon the most trivial pretexts. In Maryland General Grant reports that—

"Apprenticeship still holds large numbers of colored children in virtual slavery. The evils and cruelties resulting from this system, sanctioned by the State laws, are matters of constant complaint. As many as two thousand cases have been presented in a single county."

From Kentucky similar testimony comes. A friend of the colored people writes from Evansville, Indiana, to a religious paper in the North:

"We read, almost daily, of murders, arsons, and robberies perpetrated against the rights of colored persons in the southern States; but there are outrages perpetrated in the State of Kentucky of which as yet nothing has been published. I refer to the fact that colored persons, mostly children and youth, are held as slaves in that State." These children are not called slaves—this is an ugly word—but apprentices. To all intents and purposes they are slaves; only they are treated, if possible, with greater cruelty than they were before the war. All along this Ohio river border are parents whose children are thus held in bondage in Kentucky. Many of the fathers were soldiers in the Union Army; and they dare not venture across the river after their children."

With our work in the rebel States but fairly begun, cognizant of the dangers surrounding it, fully aware of the sleepless vigilance of its enemies, why shall we at such a time throw down a single restriction? Every sensible man in the land paused before he yielded to the necessity of giving the ballot and official capabilities to the men who had so recently been cramped, narrowed, beclouded, and broken, as the effects of slavery. Even Garrison hesitated. Again, such men paused and shivered at the next step we have taken, and that is to give the ballot to rebels recently in arms, confessedly hostile, and only laying down their arms after a long and tedious struggle, when they were utterly exhausted, their treasury bankrupt, their ordnance, medical, and commissary stores, their quartermaster's supplies annihilated, their manufactories, arsenals, and armories destroyed, their ports blockaded, their forts taken, their whole land overrun and swept by the hurricanes of war, their capital taken by storm, and their great armies driven and scattered like chaff in the whirlwind. It did seem a double peril to enfranchise such men, and yet we have reinvested them by the hundred thousand with political rights, given them equal power with ourselves, and told them to try again the task of self-government. But a few, comparatively, were excluded. The report made this month by General Grant to Congress shows that there are 106,721 white, and 72,932 colored voters in North Carolina. And it is estimated that 19,477 white, and 3,289 colored men failed to register, and of these 11,686 are disfranchised—about one eleventh of the white men of age to vote, and a seventeenth of all the males of age to vote.

That in Georgia there are 96,333 white and 95,168 colored voters; and that 8,500 men failed to register, and that about 10,000 whites were disfranchised, and 60,333 whites and 24,758 colored men failed to vote. About one tenth of the white males of age to vote and one twentieth of all the males of age to vote. These States may be considered as containing near the average of persons disfranchised. Some are above it, some below it.

What great hardship is it that one seventeenth of the voters of North Carolina and one twentieth of the voters of Georgia are disfranchised? What necessity to break over the rule thus fixed? Is it possible that sixteen seventeenths of the North Carolinians and nineteen twentieths of the Georgians cannot furnish men to fill the offices? If it be so they had better remain under military government till loyal men mature.

But we have no reason to doubt the assertion that there are thousands of men, white men, who can, without the proposed legislation of relief, fill all the offices well. And to allow the loyal Union element for a time to control that region would seem but ordinary fairness in view of their utter exclusion for four years by rebel power; and should be done, not as a measure of punishment or in the spirit of ill-will or hate, but of that moderate and equitable kindness which would pacify and harmonize the troubled elements of society. The Union men of the South can better be trusted by us than former rebels; the people there will give them greater confidence; the respect, inspired by loyalty, if we ourselves properly estimate it, will grow year by year; and that patriotism, which had no price, will be valued as it should be, and receive an honest devotion.

It ill becomes the sympathizers with treason to charge those of us who desire to guard carefully the restoration of rebels to power with hatred, thirst for vengeance, and malignity, while their friends throughout the South, instead of accepting the situation and yielding in good faith, as they were in honor bound to do by their surrender, continue their warfare upon defenseless Union men, with the weapons which the coward and assassin use; and sheltered by the seclusion of the forest, or the mountain, or veiled by the darkness of midnight, carry out their diabolical schemes of torture and murder. For the present we say put only Union men on guard. This is the hatred, this the spite, this the tyranny, this the crime against humanity for which they cry so loudly. Let such men pause for a moment and look at the spirit displayed in different parts of these unreconstructed States by their newspapers which do, in a great measure, reflect public sentiment. The Montgomery Alabama Mail, in speaking of resistance to the congressional measures of reconstruction, says:

"We have a right to appear to the ultima ratio regum. From the valleys should go up the defying shouts of an outraged people! From the hill-tops should blaze forth the fiery cross of vengeance, and the soil of Alabama, from the rivers to the gulf, should thrill once more beneath the feet of freemen! By the memory of Alabama's sons, who died in glory on the plains of Chalmette, at the victory of Horse Shoe, on Malvern Hills, at Chickamauga, at Shiloh, and at Manassas, we would say strike!

"Strike for your altars and your fires!
Strike for the green graves of your sires!
God and your native land!"

The secret and murderous organization known as the Ku-Klux-Klan is encouraged publicly after the following style by the Tuscaloosa (Alabama) Monitor to do its terrible deeds:

"Cannot some of those Eutaw boys, who expelled Parson Hill, be paid to come this way and work upon a 'dozen more such?' There is nothing like keeping your hand in. Here is material enough for you to work on for a few nights. Every exchange comes full of accounts from every quarter of the South of the singularly beneficial operations of nightly visitors in disguise. Most of the newspapers either encourage openly the preservation and extension of the organizations or recommend by plain innuendoes. Some few mawkishly moral sheets of the Conservative stripe oppose the institution (Ku-Klux-Klan); while, of course, all the miserable Radical organs are loud in their howlings against it; for it only works to the detriment of villains, with which loyal leagues are synonymous."

Even the ministers of the gospel must find banishment or death at the hands of these unhung criminals.

The Richmond Enquirer follows in the same strain of encouragement to a society linked in bonds made of the assassin's steel:

"It is now very evident that this 'Ku-Klux-Klan' is not a meaningless Merry-Andrew organization, but that under its cap and bells it hides a purpose as resolute, noble, and heroic as that which Brutus concealed beneath the mask of well-dissembled idiosyncrasy."

The Vicksburg (Mississippi) Times echoes its foul and daring sentiments bitter with hate and vengeance:

"Let the friends of negro domination be eternally ostracized. Let those who vote for George Craven McKee, Beroth Buzzard Eggleston, and the miserable creature Barry, be spurned from the presence of every really white man in the State. It is the only way to deal with them, as well as the robbers who seek to rule over us."

At Memphis, Tennessee, the chief of police, Mr. Beaumont, arrested a conclave of the Ku-Klux-Klan, whereupon the Avalanche thus denounces him with threats of death:

"Whether the organization be genuine or bogus, Beaumont has been guilty of conduct for which he ought to be murdered."

This newspaper is the Democratic organ of Tennessee, and dares thus openly to demand the commission of the most dreadful of crimes. This sheet approves of the murder of Ashburn, of Georgia, and in connection with it the following statement is made:

"It is said that a steamboat was the first public conveyance that left Columbus after the killing of Ashburn, and that it was loaded down with New England school-marmes and Yankee missionaries of one sort or other."

Death is the familiar friend of these knightly gentlemen and exile to helpless women. We might expect such acts from the savages on the western plains, from the Blackfeet, Sioux, or Comanches, but scarcely from our southern brethren; scarcely from the ruling class of that region, the scions of chivalry; scarcely from those high heroic gentlemen who alone are fit to manage the politics of the reconstructed States. We could scarcely expect such treatment of ladies from the men who claim to embody the gallantry, honor, courtesy, liberality, justice, and loyalty which are the first elements of chivalry—from the professors of those beautiful graces which soften down the hardships of daily life, which make the protection of the weak a religious duty, the enthusiastic devotion to women a sacred obligation.

That amorous swain, Gerritt Smith, is needed there to conquer them with love and sighing like a furnace, to woo them again into the gentle paths of humanity. A college endowed with a few hundred thousand dollars, and having some of these editors for a faculty, would soon humanize, harmonize, and Unionize the young scions of the ruling class. And should this prove ineffectual a special act of Congress, relieving them from all disabilities, might be obtained to add sweetness and gentleness to their manners.

General Meade having arrested the murderers of the ill-fated Ashburn and confined them in Fort Pulaski, in addition to public demands for their release he is violently denounced for discharging his duty, and his removal is demanded. The Columbus (Georgia) Sun condemns him for ascertaining upon whose shoulders rested "the responsibility of the taking off of one of the most obnoxious pests that ever afflicted a civilized community," and the editor goes on to say:

"We should but half perform our duty if we should hesitate to appeal to a superior power for immediate, active, and effective interference for these unjust, outrageous, and illegal proceedings." And again: "In behalf of the people of district No. 3, who of late have had cause grievously to feel the mailed hand of the vain and incompetent man (General George G. Meade) in whose hands their lives and liberties have been unwisely and unfortunately placed, we pray for his prompt removal." The article concludes as follows:

"We beg of Mr. Johnson to recall the fact that the Supreme Court of this country has solemnly declared that military commissions are unauthorized and illegal in times of peace, and this, the law of the land, he is in duty bound to see executed in letter and in spirit."

"We pray him further to remember that to the people of the South he is indebted for much of the strength that enabled him to pass through his late peril, which threatened him and the Government. Though the courage and integrity of a few men in a moment of need brought an ordeal never experienced by any of his predecessors, it is not going beyond the bounds of reason to say that the unanimous backing afforded him by the people of the South, their sturdy adherence to their plighted faith, their stubborn support of his constitutional prerogatives, their respect for law and obedience to authority, were among the most powerful elements that contributed to the triumph of principle over the tricks of a faction. To such a people he owes at least all the protection that lies within his power to extend."

"One enemy less," said the Macon Messenger and the Columbus Sun when George W. Ashburn was taken by a gang of Democratic ruffians from his quiet bed and murdered for his political opinions.

"We warn those who have been prominent in insisting in humiliating and insulting southern whites to be careful in future, and remember the fate of the tiger Robespierre."

Says the Herald, of Newman, Georgia, in the spirit of those who drenched the streets of Paris with gore and shocked the civilized world with their fiendish enormities. In harmony with this utterance the Iuka (Mississippi) Gazette exclaims:

"The southern people will never follow the crazy 'God-and-morality,' negro-worshipping, spoon-stealing, white-man-hating, outside-of-the-Constitution-standing, black-and-white-blood-mixing, woman-crowding, baby-strangling, egow-pronouncing, hell-deceiving, New-England-Yankee-clock-peddling, chicken-stealing, box-ankled, bandy-shanked, round-shouldered, hypocritical, canting, psalm-singing, cowardly, cut-throat, slandering, vulgar, slimy-mouthed, onion-eating, whiskey-drinking, sausage-stuffing scoundrels."

What a beautiful spectacle of Christian patience it will be to see Gerritt Smith and Beecher, with college endowments, arm in arm, with such editors, followed by Chief Justice Chase, with his gospel of universal amnesty and universal suffrage, while in his rear, scarce able to keep up in the rapid march for want of breath, we see a bevy of benevolent, sympathetic Congressmen with their special bills of relief to peculiarly mild rebels and remarkably repentant traitors! What a delightful task of weaning rebel lambs, like these editors, is in reserve for philanthropic Congressmen for the next score of years!

These indications, and others in vast numbers like these, tell every reflecting, cool-headed, kind-hearted, merciful, considerate citizen to beware, to go slow in restoration of power to such men or their friends. Such lessons teach us that peace is on the brink of destruction in such men's hands; that national ruin, an end of law, a reign of violence, robbery, arson, persecution, cruelty, savage fury, war, open murder, and secret assassination would follow their restoration to power.

Such men and their Democratic friends should be a little cautious how they charge us with malign purposes when we wish to interpose a few safeguards between our peace and the horrors which they invoke.

We would say to leading rebels, Your country needs improving; your roads and bridges are out of repair; your farms are in bad order; your towns are decaying; your agriculture, trade, labor system, and manufactures need reviving; your people are demoralized by the war; your school system is in a wretched condition; your social system is deranged; your churches are demoralized; your professions need a stimulus of energy and study; your whole social and political state is dilapidated, weakened, decrepid. Here is a vast field for your energy, ambition, philanthropy, Christianity, and love, a life's labor will not suffice to renovate and restore it. If you must work in public, work there, and leave the field of politics to Union men, who have long been silent when you spoke; who have long paid taxes when you made the levy; who filled the ranks of war when you sounded to arms; who never before had a public trust which they might betray, and who now, though late in life, may yet illustrate the fact that even the humblest walks produce men ready for all the emergencies that may arise, and capable of managing well public affairs as they have done their own quiet business.

We would say in all kindness the fortunes of war which you invoked have placed the power in our hands and the responsibility is upon us; the present and the vast future look to us for a safe and wise adjustment of our troubles, and we must, for the present, look alone to those who have been in sympathy with us. When the affairs of the rebel States have become settled; when secret organizations hostile to the Government shall have ceased to conspire; when the Union man is safe and his property secure; when the laws are respected and obeyed, and society has gone back into its natural and peaceful channels, then will be a proper time to relieve men from the disabilities incurred by rebellion, and to permit them to share in the control of the State and nation. Not till then will it be safe or wise to do so.

I am at a loss to comprehend the position of Union men who now, with ready hands since the war is over, are willing to bestow on victor and vanquished alike the honors and responsibilities of civil rule; who consent that the rebel and Union dead should sleep side by side in a common cemetery, consecrated to the sacred memories of the sacrifices of the nation; who are ready to sing a common requiem over their ashes; who would welcome back alike patriots and traitors to the Halls of Congress, and bid them sit down together and cast lots for the control of the nation as coolly as did the Roman soldiery for the garments of their slain Redeemer.

Such transcendental patriotism is too delicate for actual life. The strong lines drawn by the plowshare of war are not yet erased. Men will have memories. Men will have hearts, pass what laws you will. No enactment you can make will put the true Union man of the South on a level with him who was his enemy during the war. All honor to the brave and true men who under the fiery trials that swept like a hurricane over them in the South, yet, under them all, still maintained their fealty to the Union. We hail them here to-day as the sternest and truest types of patriots, tried by the flames, pure as fine gold. We would welcome them to seats in this Hall as worthy to sit down beneath the shadow of the eagle and the stars in the sacred places of Madison and Henry, Pinkney and Lowndes, Clay and Berrien, Jackson and Livingston.

To the men engaged in the rebellion we cannot deny the highest praise for courage and good conduct, enterprise, activity, and sagacity in the field worthy a better cause. When war had ended they returned, as did the Union soldiers, to their former homes; there they are to-day, the pets of society, the heroes of many a gallant exploit, the cherished models of manhood for the young.

There they are, holding offices, wielding public opinion, guiding legislative action, controlling the press, swaying the social circle, grasping the reins of business, and striving now to enter the Halls of Congress and mold the legislation of the nation. Here they are to-day pressing on as they did under Lee and Johnston, Bragg and Van Dorn, Hood and Hardee, to snatch the power they claim as their rightful heritage. Allow it, as a principle, that they may be elected, and year after year they will be sent up to these Halls knocking for admission, and boldly claiming it as due to their people. Allow this principle, and the war feuds will be kept up at home, hatred of our institutions fostered; and every returning election will be the chosen occasion to rekindle and keep alive the fires of rebellion by speeches, newspapers, social influence, money, and all the appliances familiar to the electioneering campaigns in the South. The hostility thus perpetuated goes down and involves generations in the struggle.

A wise policy demands that it should be eradicated, that new men be put forward unconnected with rebellion, true, loyal, upright, staunch men, who have no bitter memories to cherish, no lurking hope for the overthrow of the Union, no mad affection for a lost cause smoldering in their hearts. Do this and wiser and better counsels will prevail; and the regenerated South will take her position where her grand historic characters, where Jefferson and Rutledge, Marshall and Legare, Gaston and Crawford, dying, left her; and not where Breckinridge, Beauregard, Toombs, Wigfall, Cobb, and Davis plunged her. From that dark abyss she is now emerging, shaking off the fetters that have so long bound her, purging "her misty eyeballs," with the new song of freedom on her lips, and its proud flag torn but flying above her, we welcome her again to her old place beneath the Dome of the Capitol.

In this great struggle two distinct lines of policy have been marked out by the friends of the Union. The one timid, hesitating, half-hearted, sickly, sentimental, kind, conciliatory, delaying.

The other positive, aggressive, downright, fighting, outspoken, ready to take responsibilities.

The war began, and the former thought seventy-five thousand men enough; that rebellion was a ninety-days' job; that Kentucky might remain neutral; that if a large army was mustered the South would no longer fight, but consider herself checkmated by the mere development of force; that nobody ought to be hurt; that rebel property must not be seized or wasted, but guarded; that slavery must not be touched; that slaves should not be used; that they should not fight; that rebels should at the end of the war be restored at once to all their rights; that all differences between Union men and rebels should be at once and forever effaced, and all mementoes of the strife annihilated; that the late rebels should be coaxed, petted, and cajoled into loyalty and patriotism by gifts and flattery; that when Mr. Johnson had clearly shown his purposes we should still hang on to his skirts and dawdle with him on the edge of the gulf of ruin; that we should hesitate to impeach him; that we should hesitate to arrest him when impeached, though he held the Treasury and the Army. Such has been their policy, hesitating, halting, stumbling, feeling along.

The latter, when the first gun sounded, recognized the fact that war existed and meant fighting; meant destruction; meant enormous expense; meant abolition of slavery; meant the crushing of the physical power of our enemies; meant taking their property; meant expelling them from office; meant ceasing to trust them or trade with them; meant disfranchising and punishing their leaders; meant doing, in a word, as we went along, everything that we could find to do to put them down and our cause up; meant that vigorous war was the merciful course; meant, as time rolled on, the summary breaking with Mr. Johnson upon sight of his treachery; meant putting restored power in the hands of our friends South in the safest shape possible, be it by ballots or bullets, or both; meant the impeachment of the apostate President, his arrest, the withdrawal of his clutches from the national Treasury and military power; meant a thorough and absolute establishment in all the rebel States of the policy, the principles, the vital forces of the Union party.

Such is the spectacle exhibited by Union men on either hand. The one fighting and feeding; paying compliments to and cajoling their foes; striking with one hand, guarding with the other; snaiting and giving time to let the wound heal; by their temporizing and vacillating policy protracting the war and multiplying its expenses.

The other, ready to march and strike at all times, knowing but two sides, friends and foes, and knowing well the difference. Pressing over every obstacle, filling up the armies with new levies; keeping up supplies; keeping the people's hearts warm; confident of success; recognizing God as the ruler and vindicator; despising the political atheists who foreboded defeat; anxious when the war was over to see the loyal, brave, and true put in control North and South, East and West; unsmitten by the mawkish sentimentality of universal amnesty, that political somnambulism which leads the bewildered dreamer to climb and walk upon the cliffs and pinnacles of destruction.

If universal amnesty be a sound doctrine, then tear down your jails, raze the walls of your penitentiaries, chop down the gallows, wipe out your penal laws, abolish your criminal courts, take off your police, and let the age of chivalry begin. Put men on their honor, and when they do wrong take no notice of it; let society, untrammelled by laws, regulate itself. Why punish offenders for robbing a henroost or pilfering pocket-money, and let him go free who has broken the safe of the nation, plundered its arms and stores by the million, and taken the life of those who have been put in trust? Universal amnesty is universal insanity, universal anarchy, universal ruin.

I dread the tendency of these measures of relief as drawing us to the verge of that gulf.

I may be wrong in this matter; I may seem to be harsh. I disavow such motives. What I say I say in the cause of mercy, in the name of humanity, in the interest of peace. Not the peace of to-day alone, but of the long-coming future—of that time when the bitterness and heartburnings of to-day shall have been quenched by the hand of time or of death; and when the vast future will hold us to account for the manner in which we this day legislate.

Then it may be seen that he who was loth to yield too readily back to hostile hands the power of the country, the administration and execution of its laws, the shaping of its policy, was the true and kind friend of both sections, and that his voice, which may now seem to grate harshly with the note of remonstrance, called in vain the attention of his countrymen to the sorrows and calamities which they were about to bring upon themselves.

Again, I disclaim all ill-feeling toward these men. I honor such as Holden and Longstreet for their frank and manly course. Permit me to say they can better atone in the retirement and quiet of unofficial position the wrongs they have done their countrymen. When a calmer day shall have arisen upon the land, and all the angry clouds of civil strife have fled from the heavens, such men may safely be permitted again to resume their position as citizens; but while every breeze is laden with troubles, and the very capital of the nation is shaken by the earthquakes of an unadjusted rebellion, let them be silent till those who periled all for the salvation of the country have restored it to peace.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have asked from the gentleman who has charge of this bill permission to say a word or two in order to indicate to the House the classes of persons which, as one, I would desire early to relieve from disabilities. The common idea has been that where a man was originally opposed to secession and after the war had intervened, gave up his Union sentiments and went into the war in behalf of the confederacy, such a man should receive the first attention. Sir, I am opposed to that view, because those men when they became secessionists became by far the most bitter, for the reason that, having opposed secession, they had to go further than the original secessionists in order to show their allegiance to the cause, and feeling that they had fallen from their high estate, you will find them to-day all over the South the most bitter, the most untrustworthy and unreliable men.

There are two classes of men who in my judgment should receive early attention at the hands of the loyal Congress. They are the men—and they were very few, but their paucity in numbers makes them the more select—they are the men who stood firm during the whole time when the waves of secession beat around them, and they blenched not and gave not way, standing firm for the right. That class of men I hold higher than even the Union men at the North, because we had something to restrain us which they had not.

The class that I would deal with next is the class of men born in the South, brought up with southern ideas, and honestly believing that secession was right, for there were brave and gallant men who did believe so, and who, believing that they were right, fought for the cause which they espoused with valor, with energy, with fortitude, and fought to the end. And when that end had come honestly and in good faith they accepted the verdict; they submitted to the great arbitrament of the sword; and from that time henceforth became true Union men, as they were before true confederates. They are men who, having done all they could for what they believed to be right, have in good faith accepted the judgment rendered upon the field of battle, and from that time forward have been true Union men as they are to-day true Union men.

Now, to give an instance, in order that there may be no misunderstanding upon that subject, I will venture to call the name of one, although I have never seen him, to show how ready I am to forgive, where truth, probity, and honesty of purpose have characterized the action of the man. James Longstreet, if I remember his first name aright, was a paymaster in the Army of the United States. Of all the paymasters of the United States who went into the rebellion, he alone settled up his accounts with the United States, honestly and fairly and justly, as he would have done had he remained in our service. A southern man, he went into "the lost cause" with all his heart; he fought nobly and well. And we can recognize valor everywhere where it accompanies honesty of purpose. He alone of all the paymasters of our Army who went into the rebellion settled up every one of his accounts, and accounted for all the money in his charge. Then, following what he believed to be his duty, he went into the confederate army, and they had no more able or faithful general. When the rebellion was over, when "the lost cause" was lost, he gave his parole, accepted the situation, and, as I am informed, he thanks God that slavery, the cause of this war, has gone down forever. And he is now as true a Union man as he was before a true confederate. As for me I am as ready to give him my hand, and every man like him, as I am to give it to any man, for he has exhibited a truth to his sentiments, a fidelity to his opinions, and an honesty of purpose which entitles him and all like him, to come back into the Union. "There is more joy in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine good men that need no repentance."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE,] my colleague on the committee.

Mr. PAINE. I probably ought to make a brief statement to the House respecting the mode in which these lists of names have been prepared in the Senate and in the House, the evidence upon which the respective committees of the Senate and the House, and the two bodies themselves, have been induced to accept those lists; and also the consideration which influenced the committee of conference to adopt this report.

In the first place a bill passed this House which constitutes the basis of the legislation upon which we are this day called to act. Of course it was impossible for this House, or for the entire Committee on Reconstruction, to scrutinize each name, and weigh the evidence applicable to each case. Therefore that duty was intrusted to a single member of the conference committee, the one for this House being the acting chairman of the Committee on Reconstruction, [Mr. FARNSWORTH,] who makes this report. He weighed the testimony relating to each person named in the bill of the House, and made up his own mind as to the merits of the application for each individual. We accepted the bill he offered upon the strength of his assurance that he had examined each case, and was satisfied that each individual therein named ought to be relieved by this House and by the Senate of the political disabilities he had incurred.

That bill passed this House and went to the Senate, and the Senate added to it other lists of names. And the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate adopted substantially the same course we had here pursued in ascertaining what names should be included in that bill. The duty was imposed particularly upon Senator STEWART, and he assured me, in the conference between the two Houses, that he had spent a great deal of time in making the examination, and that no name had passed his scrutiny without abundance of evidence sufficient to satisfy him that the person ought to be relieved by Congress of the political disabilities he had incurred by his participation in the rebellion.

There was, however, another bill which passed this House, which it was my duty to examine: a bill embracing the names of two citizens of Arkansas. I carefully examined their cases, and for reasons which I gave to this House on a former occasion I was satisfied that they should be relieved.

Now, the Senate adopted in the bill which they passed as a substitute for the House bill, not only the names that went over from the House, but also the names which had passed the scrutiny of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and the two names embraced in the bill which I myself had examined and reported to this House. And the entire list as agreed upon was adopted by the conference committee with the exception of two names—the names of Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, and Mr. Houston, of Alabama. I would have been glad, as an individual member of the conference committee, to have accepted those names. I was strongly inclined to do so, but on inquiry among members of this House who were acquainted with them and their conduct since the passage of the reconstruction act I ascertained strenuous opposition would be made here. I regretted to learn it, but I did ascertain that fact, and therefore became convinced, as the conference committee became convinced, that it would be better to submit these names in another bill.

Now, a few words in reply to the suggestions of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN.] It is not true this bill which comes before the House as the action of the conference committee embraces the names of leading politicians in those States who are sought to be relieved of their political disabilities incurred in the rebellion; but the fact is that the great majority of the names embraced in this bill are the names of men who were at the outset opposed to the rebellion, but who, while the rebellion was in progress, although in heart opposed to it, on account of their situation, their social relations, by reason of the fact that they resided as they did in the midst of the rebellion, one for one cause and another for another, one in one form and another in another, were implicated in the rebellion by committing acts sufficient to require the relief of this House in order that they may be enfranchised.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER.]

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Mr. Speaker, it is only because this measure is so important as the introduction to what are for years to come to be the Government's practices, touching this supremely important matter of enabling the authors of the rebellion to become the rulers of the Republic, that I venture to say a few words; not to affect the votes of others, but only to explain to my constituents my own. I do not expect that the result of the vote will be changed by anything that is now said. I wish, therefore, only to justify me in the vote I shall give against this bill.

I will begin, sir, by reading a few words from the first authority upon the international law in this nation, and perhaps in the world:

"Conciliatory and not vindictive measures are demanded by considerations of policy, not less than by humanity, in civil war, is strongly maintained by Olmeda."

I accede to that because it is wise, and because it has been for centuries, ever since we have had a modern civilization and an international law on the subject, the rule that the great mass of men engaged in rebellion should be the subjects of national clemency. But while I subscribe to that, while the whole country demands that at our hands, there is another principle of international law stated by the same authority equally demanded by the principles of the public law, by the practices of all civilized and stable Governments who, in administering laws, discriminate between virtue and crime, between patriotism and treason, and by our national conscience and its safety. That other principle for which I insist is thus stated by Wheaton on the same page from which I have read. I will read two sentences only from the same authority, touching that other principle. They are in these words:

"When the sovereign has conquered the opposite party and obliged it to demand peace, he may except from the amnesty the authors of the troubles and the chiefs of the party, cause them to be adjudged according to the laws, and punish them if found guilty."

Again I read:

"When the sovereign has conquered the party opposed to him, and obliged it to demand peace, it is customary to concede to it a general amnesty, excepting from it the authors and chiefs, whom he may punish according to the laws."

Now, sir, in these three sentences, I maintain before my country and fellow-members, is embodied the wisdom which has resulted from the experience of a thousand years, and especially during the latter half of that thousand years, when this sublime fabric of international law has been erected for our guidance and the guidance of all wise nations on this subject. The authors and contrivers of the mischief must be excepted from the national amnesty, must be tried and punished according to the laws.

Now, why do I say I am opposed to this bill as one not recognizing these principles? First, because the committee has not given to any of us who are to vote, nor to our country, our injured country, our country which feels such intense interest in this matter, in any written report, any one word showing why any of these men should be exempted from the consequences of their great crime.

We in this bill begin a practice, a policy of national clemency, stupendous in its consequences. I pray that we may begin wisely and well. I pray that the Congress and country may know, when it exempts not only from punishment for their immense crime the very authors and contrivers of that crime but enables them at once to assume rule in the Republic, why they ought not to be dealt with according to these wise rules of the public law which I cite, and according to our own laws against treason. Our soldiers who come back to us with scars demand to know this. The families of those who came not back from the wars demand to know. By written reports we ought to know why the authors of the rebellion ought now to be enabled to become our rulers. Not one word of written report enables us to know.

That is the first reason why I cannot vote for the bill, because I cannot vote intelligently.

Another is that I find at least one of the contrivers of secession and rebellion, one of the men on whose soul is perhaps more of the blood of our fellow-men than upon any other man's soul, except, perhaps, Jefferson Davis himself. I refer to the name of General Longstreet. If there be another man so guilty as he it is the man Stonewall Jackson, who has gone to the bar of God, and asks no amnesties here. Why are we to enable him to now rule in the Republic? No word of reply is given us by any report, and yet my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] gets up here and makes an apology for him which could be made by any other caught or conquered criminal, to wit, that after he has been conquered, overthrown by the forces of war, he has become sorry for his crime. Nothing more.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROOKS. I demand the yeas and nays on agreeing to the conference report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 79, nays 55, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baker, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Buckland, Butler, Cake, Churchill, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Delano, Driggs, Ella, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Gravelly, Griswold, Halsey, Harding, Hill, Chester D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Judd, Kelsey, Ketchum, Kootz, George V. Lawrence, Logan, Loughbridge, Marvin, McCarthy, Mercur, Moore, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Peters, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Pomroy, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Smith, Spalding, Stewart, Stokes, Taylor, Trowbridge, Upson, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and the Speaker—79.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Baldwin, Beck, Brooks, Broomall, Cary, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Corburn, Coyode, Cullom, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Haight, Hawkins, Higby, Holman, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Knott, Loan, Mallory, McClurg, McCullough, Miller, Mullins, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Phelps, Pike, Price, Pruyn, Robinson, Shellabarger, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Taber, Taffe, John Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Thomas Williams, William Williams, and Woodward—55.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Burr, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Finney, Fox, Grover, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jencks, Kelley, Kerr, Kitchen, Ladlin, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Lynch, Marshall, Maynard, McCormick, Morrissey, Mungen, Nunn, Perham, Randall, Ross, Selye, Shanks, Sitgreaves, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Van Aiken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—55.

The SPEAKER. As the bill in its terms requires that two thirds of each House shall concur in its passage, the report of the committee of conference is rejected.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and if it is in order I will move to postpone action on that motion.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote in the negative?

Mr. BROOMALL. I did for the purpose of moving to reconsider the vote.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is the motion to reconsider debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to say a word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOMALL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROOMALL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] ten minutes.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it has already been stated to the House over and over again that unless this bill or a like bill passes neither of the States of North Carolina and Georgia can reorganize under the constitutions which they have made. This bill embraces the men who are elected to office under those constitutions. If gentlemen are disposed to create at the South a black man's party as against a white man's party, then they will adhere to their votes against relieving white men of disabilities. If we are to apply an iron rule here that no man shall be relieved of disabilities who is under disabilities, that nobody shall have his disability removed except those who have none to remove, there is an end of the subject, and you have in the South a white man's party against a black man's party. It comes to that and nothing else, and when you come to that the black man's party goes down. When intelligence is arrayed against ignorance, when experience is arrayed against inexperience, when the politicians are arrayed against these ignorant, inexperienced men who are not politicians, who are naturally timid, and have been rendered more so by their past experience in slavery, it certainly does not require any logic to convince men that the black man's party goes to the wall; there is an end of all reconstruction in these States; there is an end of all constitutional government there, and we must perpetuate the government of the bayonet. If gentlemen are prepared to come to that, if they are disposed to saddle the expense upon the Government of an attempt to perpetuate the government of that vast people by the bayonet alone, then let them refuse to relieve from disabilities any of these men. If the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER], who last addressed the House and spoke of General Longstreet, is right, and no man is to be permitted to repent, no man who fought us is to be permitted to lay down his arms and assist us in restoring peace and creating order out of the turmoil and disorder which reign there, what encouragement, I ask, is there for any of these men to help us?

Some gentlemen seem disposed rather to prefer those milk-and-water, Janus faced men who stuck to the Union until their States went out and held off a little while after, and then went into the rebellion with all their hearts, and all their might, and all their minds, and who stick to the rebellion yet, rather than the men who gave up "the lost cause" when it was lost; and are now striving in good faith to help us.

Now, if this idea is to prevail, there is an end to all amnesty, and that provision in the constitutional amendment which provides that we may relieve these men from disabilities is a dead letter, and it might as well never have been passed.

Mr. LOAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOAN. I desire to know what evidence these rebels have furnished here and placed on record that they do repent, and intend to act with fidelity to the Union party or to the country?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. All of them.

Mr. LOAN. I say what evidence have they furnished here?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I understood the gentleman to ask how many of them had furnished evidence?

Mr. LOAN. No, sir; what evidence have they placed on record here?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Why, Mr. Speaker, it has been stated over and over again to the House, both by myself and by other gentlemen, what the evidence has been. It has been in their own communications, and in the communications of loyal men. It has been in the evidence of the members of Congress, Governors and various other officers elected in these States who have come before the Committee on Reconstruction and given their testimony.

Mr. LOAN. Why not place it before the House, so that we may know what it is before we vote?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Why, if we should place that evidence before the House the gentleman from Missouri would never read it.

Mr. LOAN. Indeed I would if I could get it. Mr. FARNSWORTH. He would not have time to read one quarter of it. Besides that, I suppose the committee was appointed to take the evidence and examine and weigh it, and that the information they report to the House as the result of that examination is entitled to some little respect. We have stated, and if the gentleman does not believe us he would not believe though one should rise from the dead, that in all these cases we have acted on the evidence of loyal men. The gentleman will not take that evidence. If he will not, he need not; and he may continue to vote against it until he is gray, as I suppose he will. If he will not take the evidence in a case which has been stated over and over again to the House, he is fixed in his opinions. And if a man is judicially blind, I believe there is no salve which will open his eyes.

I have already stated that a very large number of the names in this bill are those of men elected to office by loyal men. This bill as it passed the House originally related to North Carolina, and was intended to relieve from disability those who had been elected to office in that State. The Senate, equally particular in their discrimination, added other names to the list.

Mr. WELKER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment at this point?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. WELKER. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether it is not a fact that the constitutional conventions of Georgia and South Carolina made a thorough investigation of the character of these gentlemen, and unanimously recommended that their disabilities be removed; and also that in pursuance of that recommendation a great number of these gentlemen have been nominated upon their State tickets and elected by the legal voters of the States?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. That is true. And not only that, but we have omitted a great many names of those so recommended, about whom we are not satisfied by other evidence besides that supplied by the conventions.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask a question, and in connection with that question to make a suggestion, which, if I am right, I think will have some weight with this House. If I understand it aright—and if I am not correct the gentleman will correct me—in regard to several of these States, the passage of this bill is absolutely essential to the establishment of reconstructed governments; and the defeat of this bill will be to say virtually that reconstruction, as provided by Congress, shall be broken down, shall not succeed; that these States shall be remanded to the anarchy out of which we have for three years been trying to rescue them. And I would ask the gentleman if, in view of all the circumstances, it is not best to have this bill set down for a rehearing a few days later than this time, when the members of this House will understand more fully the importance of the measure they are called to act upon?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD], I have but to reiterate what I have already said; it is true these States cannot be reorganized without the passage of this bill.

Mr. BROOMALL. I must resume the floor. Mr. HARDING. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BROOMALL. Not now.

Mr. HARDING. For a few moments.

Mr. BROOMALL. Not just at present. I desire to say at this time only that I believe this bill is not understood by the House, and I think a delay of a day or two will satisfy three fourths of the members of this House that it ought to pass. I therefore move that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until Tuesday next, after the morning hour; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. HARDING. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table takes precedence of the motion to postpone.

Mr. BROOMALL. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] will withdraw his motion, I will agree to yield some time to him when this question again comes up.

Mr. HARDING. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. BROOMALL, to postpone until Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that should the House be engaged on Tuesday next in the consideration of the tax bill this would be postponed until after that was disposed of.

Mr. BROOMALL. We cannot help that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair deemed it proper to inform the House of the possible result of postponing this subject till Tuesday next.

Mr. BROOMALL. I am urged by friends to substitute Monday for Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered upon the motion to postpone, and the gentleman cannot now modify his motion except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ELDRIDGE and Mr. HIGBY objected.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the main question.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BROOMALL. I now modify my motion so that this subject be postponed till Monday next after the morning hour, and upon that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to postpone was agreed to.

Mr. BROOMALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 164) to provide for appeals from the judgments of the Court of Claims, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 280) granting a pension to Michael Hennessy, of Platte county, Missouri;

An act (S. No. 377) to change the time of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the several districts in the State of Tennessee; and

An act (S. No. 425) granting a pension to George Bennett.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

LINCOLN MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

The next business upon the Speaker's table were the amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 216, to authorize the Secretary of War to place at the disposal of the Lincoln Monument Association damaged and captured ordnance; which were read as follows:

Amend the resolution by inserting after the word "authorized" the words "at his discretion," and after "1867" inserting the word "such," and after the word "captured" inserting "bronze and brass;" so as to make the resolution read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized at his discretion to place at the disposal of the Lincoln Monument Association, incorporated by an act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Lincoln Monument Association," approved March 30, 1867, such damaged and captured bronze and brass guns and ordnance, out of which to cast the statues of the principal figures surmounting and to be incorporated in said structure: Provided, That no metal as aforesaid shall be thus appropriated until the voluntary contributions for said purpose actually in the hands of the treasurer shall amount to $100,000.

Add at the end of the resolution the following: And no more metal shall be thus appropriated than what shall be actually used for the purpose of casting the figures as herein mentioned.

Mr. DRIGGS. I will say that the association are willing to accept these amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTED MAIL MATTER.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 176, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for carrying the mails from the United States to foreign ports, and for other purposes," approved March 25, 1864, which was read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

The operation of the fourth section of an act to provide for carrying the mails of the United States to foreign ports, and for other purposes, approved March 25, 1864, shall cease and determine on and after the 30th day of September, 1868.

The fourth section of the law of March 25, 1864, is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That all mailable matter which may be conveyed by mail westward beyond the western boundary of Kansas, and eastward from the eastern boundary of California, shall be subject to prepaid letter-postage rates: Provided, however, That this section shall not be held to extend to the transmission by mail of newspapers from a known office of publication to bona fide subscribers, not exceeding one copy to each subscriber, nor to franked matter to and from the intermediate points between the boundaries above named at the usual rates: Provided further, That such franked matter shall be subject to such regulations as to its transmission and delivery as the Postmaster General shall prescribe."

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the bill and amendment be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to make a statement in regard to this bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill, it is relative to carrying the mails across the country, and to repeal that provision of the existing law charging letter postage upon all printed matter from west of the western boundary of Kansas and east of the eastern boundary of California. If I am wrong the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will correct me. Now, sir, I make the statement to this House that every pound of printed matter that goes from the east to the west of Kansas to the people of Montana, Nevada, Colorado, Idaho, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona, pays this corporation of Wells, Fargo & Co. from seventy-five cents to one dollar per pound. Instead of being able to purchase the Atlantic Monthly or Harper's Magazine, the Times, Herald, Tribune, or some other favorite newspaper at a reasonable rate, our people have to pay all the way from fifty cents to $1 50 a copy for the magazines and twenty-five cents for the papers I have named. The provisions of the law, as it stands, are most unjust. There are in the Territory of Colorado from twenty-five to thirty thousand people; in Utah seventy-five thousand inhabitants at least; in Idaho over fifty thousand; and in Montana over sixty thousand; in Nevada from thirty to forty thousand. You, therefore, under the existing law, which it is proposed now to repeal, tax the intelligence of the people when you tax their reading matter.

And furthermore, let me state that gentlemen are mistaken as to the character of the people who live in those Territories. We are a reading people in the West. It is not the fossilized remnants of civilization who go to the West, but the young men with living blood in their veins. It is the poor young men and not the wealthy who go to the West; the young, the middle aged, and old men of energy and pluck from New England and the Middle States; and, sir, they go to reap fortune in the development of the great resources which God in his wisdom has hidden in our mountains, men who create and build up new States, who found new Commonwealths, who add new stars to the national flag, who lay broad and deep the foundations of civilization in the hitherto unknown section of the continent; the ax and the rifle lead; the church and the school-house follow.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Illinois, why the people of the Territories I have named should be taxed, why this embargo should be laid on their intelligence, why the Department at Washington should discriminate between the Rocky mountains and Kansas, Nebraska, Oregon, and California. Why lay this embargo upon the keystone which holds the arch of the nation together? ay, this golden keystone; for almost every mountain pass, gulch, and cañon is rich with the precious metals, and her teeming soil yields bounteous harvests to repay the husbandman for his industry.

But my friend from Illinois asks, "Why do you not subscribe for these publications?" My answer is those who inhabit the mining regions are engaged in mining to-day, fifteen hundred it may be, in one locality, and to-morrow one half move off to another mining region, start a new camp, and advance the outposts of civilization, enterprise, and industry; but carry with them their love of knowledge and of literature, and it is the duty of the Government to gratify that love free from unjust and ungenerous taxation.

I therefore, Mr. Speaker, earnestly hope that the House will concur in the Senate amendment to this most just and proper bill, giving to the reading, thinking, and intelligent masses of the Territories the same privileges, the same free access to the mails that you award to the people of the older States of the Union.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CHILCOTT. Mr. Speaker, this bill was considered and favorably reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of this House. It passed the House without a dissenting vote. The Senate amended it, providing that it take effect in September next, instead of from and after its passage, as previously provided in the bill. This amendment was made to prevent an attempt on the part of the overland mail contractors from the possibility of recovering damages from the Government. This the people of the West will be willing to accept, although not entirely what they had expected. The bill now before the House provides for the repeal of the fourth section of an act "to provide for carrying the mails of the United States to foreign ports, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1864. The section we propose to repeal provides "that all mailable matter which may be conveyed by mail westward from the western boundary of Kansas, and eastward from the eastern boundary of California, shall be subject to prepaid letter postage rates;" thus discriminating against all the States and Territories between said boundaries, and which has the effect of keeping from the reach of the intelligent and honest pioneer of the West the periodicals and literary works of the day, unless they pay express freight thereon to the overland mail contractors to the amount of sixty or seventy cents per pound, or pay postage to the amount of ninety-six cents per pound. And the reasons for the contractors struggling so hard against the repeal of this obnoxious and unjust law, is from the fact that it will prevent them from robbing our pioneer citizens by forcing them to pay express freight on every book that they may see proper to send East for, thus unjustly making millions of dollars out of the hard-earned money of the citizens of the West.

This bill proposes to repeal that which, in my judgment, is anti-republican, because it discriminates against citizens of the United States, and has for its object to keep from said citizens the great privilege of obtaining that knowledge which can only be derived by reading the periodicals and literary books of the day.

I am very much surprised to hear the honorable chairman of the committee advocating the doctrine of discriminating against my constituents, as well as he professes to love justice and equality. This bill only provides for the repeal of a bill which is wrong in principle, and unjust and oppressive on the citizens of the West. The statements of my honorable friend in regard to the extra cost to the Government, although honestly, no doubt, made on his part, is the same that has been made on every occasion by the contractors when an attempt has been made to wipe this law, so unjust to our people, from the statute-books of our country. And what surprises me more than anything else is the fact of my friend from Illinois opposing this bill after its having been favorably considered in his committee, and after his having expressed himself to me as being favorable to the repeal of said restriction.

This bill which we so much complain of, forces us to pay ninety-six cents per pound for a book from the city of New York, when from Great Britain to any port of the United States it costs only twenty-four cents per pound; and yet we find upon the floor of the American Congress opposition to its repeal. I am opposed to any legislation discriminating against any American citizen on the subject of mail facilities, and especially against the industrious pioneers of the West who have done so much to develop the country, and who have spent millions of money developing the mineral regions of the West, and who have, by energy and industry, cultivated the valleys and the plains of the West, and have made blossom as the rose that which previously had been reported by explorers as the great American desert. And it is nothing but justice that we should have the same privileges that are extended to citizens of our common country in other States and Territories of the United States. I hope the Senate amendment will be concurred in.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield me five minutes.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Very well.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I desire to say that I entirely concur with the remarks of my friend from Colorado [Mr. CHILCOTT] and my friend from Montana, Mr. CAVANAUGH. I am somewhat surprised at the course of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in desiring that the bill, as amended by the Senate, should be referred to that committee, where every one knows it will "sleep the sleep that knows no waking." This restriction against these Territories of the United States has, in my judgment, existed long enough. The people of those regions ought to be relieved at once instead of postponing it till September, as the amendment proposes. I understand that during the past four or five years this overland company which carries your mails has been relieved from carrying everything except letters and newspapers sent to subscribers. But, sir, they have not even carried those. They have adopted a system of carrying mail-bags of their own and making the people along the line believe that their own mail-bags would reach their destination more speedily and expeditiously by paying extra charges—by marking them "By express, Wells, Fargo & Co.," in addition to the direction, "Overland mail."

Now, sir, it seems to me that in order to do full justice Congress ought at once to remove this restriction and require Wells, Fargo & Co., who are to day the contractors for the transportation of the overland mail, to transport all the mail matter as other mails are transported in other portions of the United States. This is a great injustice to the people of the interior of the continent, and I am surprised, not only at the action of the committee of this House, but at the action of the Senate, in not at once, immediately, instead of next September, removing this restriction and opening these mails free to the people of the Territories and of the Pacific coast.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If I can have the attention of the House for a moment I will state briefly the points about this bill. The House passed a bill removing the restriction which was imposed by the act of 1864, I believe, which required that printed matter should pay letter rates between the western boundary of Kansas and the eastern boundary of California, where it had to be carried by stages, except that newspapers, magazines, and periodicals, are carried there, as everywhere else, to regular subscribers from the office of publication. The present contract expires in the fall, in October, I believe. The Senate have amended the bill so as to make it take effect in the fall, and sent it back to the House.

Upon examination of the bids put in at the Department for carrying the mails for the next four years, and on inquiry with reference to the intentions of the parties who have bid for carrying the mails—the bids for the letter mails being already in—we find this fact: that the difference of expense will be about one million dollars if we remove this restriction and allow the publishers of books, magazines, &c., to send by mail their packages to dealers in the various places in these remote Territories. The House will see at a glance that they would load down the stage coaches and make the mails very bulky and heavy, and the contractors cannot afford to carry this immense load of matter at the same rate at which they are now carrying the letters and newspapers, &c., to the regular subscribers.

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads considered this question, and also, I believe, considered it in conjunction with the committee on the part of the Senate, on one occasion when I was not present, at the Post Office Department, a few days ago, and they instructed me to make the motion, when this bill was reached, to refer it to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. They came to the conclusion that it is not worth while to saddle the Department with this extra expense at present.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Do not Wells, Fargo & Co. carry all this matter now and load down their coaches with it at express charges? I know they do.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I have no doubt of that. They would not carry it if they were not paid extra.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. They charge $1 50 for every book that goes through.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I cannot yield further. It is very true that the stages carry express matter, but they are paid for it extra. Now, if we require them to carry all that matter for which they now get paid as express matter in the mails, they will not do it, of course, without extra pay. That is the very point in the bill.

I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Nevada, [Mr. ASHLEY.]

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I will not occupy much time, but I want gentlemen of the House to understand this matter, because I think I am right, and that our cause deserves their votes. This overland mail was started at a time when it met with great opposition from the Atlantic and Pacific Mail Steamship Company. They had had the contract previously, and wished to demonstrate that it was impossible to maintain an overland mail route. They did, in the first instance, overburden the stage coaches with extraneous matter sent by emissaries of the steamship company. This law was then passed in 1864 to relieve this overland company from that matter for the time being. It worked well undoubtedly, for it enabled the Overland Mail Company to maintain their route.

Since that time the railroads have been extended so that the line is shortened now about eight hundred miles. And by the time this bill is to take effect, the 30th of September, when the present contract with Wells, Fargo & Co. will have expired, there will probably be not more than seven or eight hundred miles of staging on this route. These companies have heretofore received $750,000 for carrying this mail. When the bids were opened the other day, with a view to this bill passing, and the route being shortened some thousand or twelve hundred miles, Wells, Fargo & Co. put in a bid to carry this mail for $1,800,000. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] referred to the increased expense he must have had reference to that extraordinary bid, nearly double what they have heretofore received. All the bidders for that route had that very same thing in view. I have seen some of these bids. There is one from responsible parties to carry the mail over the route between the termini of the railroads for $460,000 per annum; or nearly three hundred thousand dollars less than the amount heretofore paid. Another bid, and the lowest that was put in, was for $335,000, or less than one half of what has been heretofore paid. So that, for my part, I do not understand how the gentleman sustains his proposition that it will cost more than heretofore, when all the bids, except that of Wells, Fargo & Co., are for a much less amount than that now paid.

Now, let me show that this will not be so much of an increase and burden as the gentleman says. The present law, passed in 1864, provides that franked matter shall pass over this line under regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster General. And all the public documents sent by members of Congress go that way now, or rather the company is bound to carry them, whether they really carry them or not; I presume they do not.

The only increase will be in the main, what I know from experience in my own town to be the case. This law of 1864 provides that newspapers and periodicals sent to bona fide subscribers shall be carried at the usual rates. Now, this does not meet the necessities of the people of Nevada. As the gentleman from Montana [Mr. CAVANAUGH] says, the people there will compare favorably with those of other parts of the country, so far as intelligence and reading is concerned. But they are not regular subscribers to papers and periodicals. Our miners do not know how long they will remain in any place, and instead of subscribing regularly for a paper they buy it of the news-dealer. In my town from four to five hundred papers are received daily from California. And until this last summer the overland company never threw any obstacle in the way.

This last summer, after Wells, Fargo & Co. had acquired the management of the whole route, they began to put the screws on mercilessly. And on the newspapers from California they required ninety-six cents per pound for transportation by mail to our town, when freight was carried over the same route and upon the same stages at seven cents a pound.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I hope the gentleman will allow me a little more time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will yield a few minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I suppose this increase and burden will be mostly made up from the newspapers and periodicals for the supply of the readers of that portion of the country. There is still to be a reduction of one half; within a short time the railroads will have come within seven or eight hundred miles of each other. And let me call the attention of the House to one other inconvenience: if this law is not now changed, although the mail may be taken within thirty, forty, or fifty miles of a town, there will be a charge of three cents per half ounce, or ninety-six cents per pound, for carrying those mails that forty or fifty miles.

Now, consider that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were unanimously in favor of this bill, that it passed the House without opposition and went to the Senate, and they passed it, with a provision that it should take effect from and after the 30th of September next, when the bill comes back here we who are more immediately interested are willing to accept this bill in this form, especially as by that time the route will be decreased in length several hundred miles.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I hope that even-handed justice will be meted out to the people who live west of the western boundary of Kansas and east of the eastern boundary of California. The law affects only those east of California. Those who live east of Oregon are not affected because of the peculiar phraseology of the law, which is from the eastern line of California eastward, and from the western meridian of the western line of Kansas westward. This bill simply places them upon the same bases with all the other people of the United States. The mails will not be overloaded because there will be no more matter than now. It will be no heavier than it now is, but it will relieve the people from paying this express company such price as it may choose to put upon printed matter. This being the effect of the bill I hope it will now be acted upon and passed. It is just as correct now as in the early part of the session. As to Wells, Fargo & Co., I insist, as a matter of justice to the people between Kansas and California, we should not give them any more favors than other people; that we ought not to give them more than other people are willing to receive for carrying that mail matter. I learn that propositions are made to carry this mail under the change of the law, as suggested, for $330,000. I hope the House will pass the pending measure.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I think now I will resume the floor and decline to yield further.

Mr. BASHFORD. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for three minutes.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will yield to the delegate from Arizona for three minutes.

Mr. BASHFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been deliberately considered in this House. All the objections made to it were met at the time when it passed. It was deliberately considered in the Senate, and they put an amendment upon the bill fixing a future day for it to go into operation. No one can object to that except the friends of the bill. Instead of going into effect immediately it is to go into effect at a future day. We make no objection to that. If I understand the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads he does not go back and renew the objections made here at the time the bill was passed, but says that since that time there have been contracts entered into, and this would affect those contracts, and those contractors would come here and charge the Government more than they otherwise would if we should take this restriction off of printed mail matter. Now, this question has been before Congress for the last year and more. This bill was introduced a long time before; and, sir, if it had been desirable, if the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had wished this bill to pass, how easy it would have been for them to suspend, by joint resolution, the letting of these contracts until this bill was passed, and then urged the bill through the House, putting our people upon equal footing in all respects with other people of the United States. The pioneers who go into our remote Territories have hardships enough to endure. They have dangers and troubles to meet from the Indians. You have collectors and receivers of public money among us. You make us help bear the burdens of Government, and yet deny us the right to send newspapers and other printed matter through the mails. I think it would be a great injustice not to pass this at once. I hope, therefore, it will not be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am only desirous the House should understand this matter. I have here now the figures showing the difference in these bids. These contracts before let very soon. The contractors must make provision for their forage before the season is far advanced. There are five bids for carrying this mail. Wells, Fargo & Co., $1,300,000, with the understanding that they are to carry printed matter if we pass this bill. There are four other bids, and the highest of which is $460,000, being $900,000 less than the bid of Wells, Fargo & Co. These other bidders made these bids with reference to the law as it is now, excluding heavy mail matter. The House will understand that the law now does not exclude newspapers and periodicals to regular subscribers. It cuts a little hard on the book trade and the publication offices, the men who are dealing in these articles. The question for the House is whether we shall now add this $900,000 to the expenses of the Department or wait a little. As fast as this railroad is completed these things are all carried, and in the course of a year, very likely, we may be able to amend the law without saddling this amount of expense upon the country. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was first taken on the motion to refer the amendment to the Senate to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; and it was disagreed to.

The question recurred on concurring in the amendment of the Senate; and it was concurred in.

Mr. CHILCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 184) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Corcoran.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 280) granting a pension to Michael Hennessy, of Platte county, Missouri.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 764) for the relief of certain exporters of distilled spirits, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that it had passed without amendment a joint resolution (H. R. No. 294) donating to the Washington City Orphan Asylum the iron railing taken from the old Hall of the House of Representatives.

Also, that it had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 215) to vacate and sell the Umatilla reservation, in Oregon; and

An act (S. No. 275) for the relief of Eliza Mascher, widow of John F. Mascher.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (H. R. No. 294) donating to the Washington City Orphan Asylum the iron railing taken from the old Hall of the House of Representatives; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, was granted leave of absence on account of serious illness in his family.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 598) to continue the Bureau for the relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes.

The amendment of the Senate was to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner is hereby empowered to sell for cash, or by installments with ample security, school buildings and other buildings constructed for refugees and freedmen by the bureau, to the associations, corporate bodies, or trustees who now use them for purposes of education or relief of want, under suitable guarantees that the purposes for which such buildings were constructed shall be observed: Provided, That all funds derived therefrom shall be returned to the bureau appropriation and accounted for to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ELIOT. I am authorized by a majority of the committee to move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in. On that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 93, nays 20, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Bontwell, Buckland, Butler, Calkins, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Elna, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Gravelly, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingalls, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Koontz, Lincoln, Loan, Mallory, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Mulholland, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Peters, Pike, Pile, Poland, Polley, Pomeroy, Price, Raum, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, and Windom—93.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Beck, Brooks, Eldridge, Getz, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Holman, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, McCormick, Munger, Nicholson, Phelps, and Stone—20.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Axell, Barnes, Barnum, Bingham, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Burr, Cary, Chanler, Churchill, Reader W. Clark, Dawes, Dodge, Finney, Fox, Glassbronner, Griswold, Hawkins, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Kelley, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrissey, Niblack, Nunn, Orth, Perham, Plants, Pruyn, Randall, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Schenck, Solye, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—71.

So the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF IRON-CLADS.

Mr. JENCKES, from the joint Committee on Retrenchment, made a report in relation to the alleged fraudulent sale by the Navy Department of the iron-clads Onecota and Catawba to Alexander Swift & Co.; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the committee.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION DISTRICT OF PHILADELPHIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 538) to extend the boundaries of the collection district of Philadelphia so as to include the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause to the end of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof as follows: That the port of entry and delivery of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, is hereby extended so as to include within its boundaries the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia.

Mr. O'NEILL moved that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE CHIEF JUSTICESHIP.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 861) relating to the Supreme Court of the United States; which was taken up and read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause to the close of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

That in case of a vacancy in the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or of his inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve upon the associate justice of said court whose commission is senior in time until such inability shall be removed or another appointment shall be duly made, and the person so appointed shall be duly qualified; and this act shall apply to every person succeeding to the office of Chief Justice pursuant to its provisions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MICHIGAN COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 198) to reestablish the boundaries of the collection districts of Michigan and Michilimackinac, and to change the names of the collection districts of Michilimackinac and Port Huron; which was taken up and read, as follows:

Page 1, line sixteen, after the word "Territory," insert "in said State."

Mr. FERRY moved that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPORTERS OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 764) for the relief of certain exporters of distilled spirits; which were taken up and read, as follows:

In line four strike out the words "alcohol and."
In line five strike out "were," and insert "was."
In line six strike out "or," and insert "and."
In line ten, after the word "act," insert "and as shall be provided for hereafter."
In line eleven strike out "thirty," and insert "sixty."
In line fourteen strike out "liquor," and insert "rum."
In line seventeen strike out "thirty," and insert "sixty."
Amend the title by striking out the words "distilled spirits," and inserting in lieu thereof "rum."

Mr. BUTLER moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THANKS TO HON. EDWIN M. STANTON.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was a concurrent resolution of the Senate of June 1, 1868; which was taken up and read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the thanks of Congress are due, and are hereby tendered, to Hon. Edwin M. Stanton for the great ability, purity, and fidelity to the cause of the country with which he has discharged the duties of Secretary of War, as well amid the open dangers of a great rebellion as at a later period when assailed by the Opposition, inspired by hostility to the measures of justice and pacification provided by Congress for the restoration of a real and permanent peace.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House concur in the resolution, and as I believe it is well enough understood, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. MUNGEN. I demand the yeas and nays on concurring.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 25, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baldwin, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Buckland, Butler, Calk, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Calum, Delano, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Elia, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Fields, Garfield, Gravelly, Griswold, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Jencks, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, Koontz, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Peters, Pike, Pile, Poliste, Pomeroy, Price, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Ward, Wadswader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Walker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and the Speaker—102.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Beck, Brooks, Cary, Chandler, Eldridge, Getz, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Holman, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, McCormick, Mungen, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Prayn, Stone, and Taber—25.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Baker, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Bingham, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Burr, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Ferry, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Hawkins, Hopkins, Asahel H. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Kelley, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, Morrissey, Newcomb, Nunn, Perham, Plants, Poland, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Selye, Sigreaves, Spaulding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Auker, Bart Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—63.

So the resolution was concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAIL SERVICE IN DAKOTA AND MONTANA.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 184, authorizing a change of mail service between Fort Abercrombie and Helena; which was taken up, and read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution, which was read, authorizes the Postmaster General to change the character of mail service from Fort Abercrombie, Dakota Territory, to Helena, Montana Territory, to post-coach service.

Mr. DONNELLY. This is a change from "pony service," as the present service is called, to coach service. This joint resolution has been informally examined by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I am assured by the chairman of that committee [Mr. FARNSWORTH] that they are satisfied it should pass. I therefore ask for its present consideration, and call the previous question upon it.

Mr. WARD. I object to this way of passing bills without their being investigated by the committees appointed for that purpose.

Mr. DONNELLY. This is a Senate joint resolution, and could not possibly have been formally before the committee; and to refer it at this stage of the session will be to kill it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. How much increased expenditure does it involve?

Mr. DONNELLY. From fifty to sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. Will it not be more than $80,000?

Mr. DONNELLY. I do not think so.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is true, of course, this will cost the Government something. It is a proposition to change the mail service from horse service to stage-coach service, three times a week. There is now a tri-weekly line running to Fort Abercrombie; but there is only a "pony service," as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] styles it, from there to Helena, in Montana Territory. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have informally examined this joint resolution. While they have not directed me to report upon it, I believe they are not hostile to it. I took pains to inquire at the Post Office Department what would be the probable cost of this proposed change, and in reply I received a letter which I will ask to have read.

The letter was read, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, CONTRACT OFFICE, WASHINGTON, June 6, 1868.

SIR: In answer to your verbal inquiries of yesterday you are respectfully informed that this Department estimates the cost of mail service three times a week in four-horse post coaches on the route from Fort Abercrombie, in Dakota Territory, to Helena, in Montana Territory, supposing the distance to be nine hundred miles, at $135,000 per annum; and that such estimate is considered a liberal one.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE W. McLELLAN,

Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Hon. J. F. FARNSWORTH, Chairman of Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, House of Representatives.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The estimate made is quite large enough. I do not know how much the present costs; but it should be deducted from this estimate. I believe this is the first appropriation made to establish a stage line upon that northern Pacific route. I am in favor of it. There is a very large population in the northern portions of our western States and Territories, and I am in favor of doing something for them. This is on the line of the Northern Pacific railroad. It seems to me no more than just and proper that we should pass this joint resolution.

Mr. WARD. What is the additional expenditure?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Some sixty or eighty thousand dollars a year.

Mr. WARD. Does the gentleman from Illinois think we ought to consent to the expenditure of that large amount without any investigation of any committee of this House?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I think it far better that we should carry letters to the people there who are upon this route at this price than to vote a million to carry printed matter, as we have done a while ago for our other Territories. We have never yet done anything for this northern overland mail route. It supplies many forts and military stations where they have a large population. We have never yet given them anything but a pony mail.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, a statement from me may perhaps answer some of the objections in the minds of gentlemen here, and I ask the attention of the House for a few minutes.

I am no more interested in this change of mail service than other gentlemen upon this floor. An examination of the map will show that the Territories of Montana and Idaho lie immediately west of the Territory of Dakota and the State of Minnesota; that they go to form part of our great northern belt or tier of States. At the present time intercourse with that country over the mail and stage routes is by way of the Salt Lake valley. Direct communication in a line due East and West, as proposed by this joint resolution, will shorten the distance between New York and Montana one thousand miles, and that, sir, seems to me a sufficient justification of this bill. If any member of this House, or if any citizen of this country starts to go by railroad and stage from the city of New York to the Territory of Montana he has to travel one thousand miles further than he would have to travel if this stage line were established. That is to say, he has to descend from the latitude of New York city to the line of St. Louis, and thence to the Salt Lake country, and thence to ascend north to a point even higher than the latitude of New York.

The expense of the change is considerable compared with the evil which it remedies. The service by horses, or pony service conducted by Indians, now costs the Government $84,000. If this change is made according to the letter from the Post Office Department, just referred to, it will cost the Government $134,000, or $50,000 additional, and in exchange for this increased outlay we get a stage line that will shorten communication between Montana and our northern tier of States one thousand miles.

What are those Territories? They are rapidly developing into mighty Commonwealths. The Territory of Montana shows to-day a population of fifty thousand, not an idle, unproductive population, but a population of miners who are taking out of the bosom of the earth that metal which is to add to the riches of this land.

We may talk here, Mr. Speaker, about our various policies of finance, of changing this form of bond into that form of bond, of recalling this form of indebtedness and issuing that form, but it is apparent to all sensible men that the best scheme of finance is to pay the debt, and that the means to pay the debt must be dug from the bosom of the earth either by the processes of agriculture or the processes of mining.

Now, sir, why should we not have this change? What is $50,000 compared with the development that country will receive? By shortening the line of communication one thousand miles a vastly increased emigration across the State of Minnesota, across the Territory of Dakota, will pour into Idaho and Montana, and this nation will receive back the abundant fruits of their industry in the shape of the precious metals to be used at home or to be shipped abroad in payment of our debts to foreign nations.

If there are no other questions to be asked I will call for the previous question.

Mr. WARD. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment.

Mr. DONNELLY. Certainly.

Mr. WARD. I do not know that I wish to make any opposition to this measure if it came properly before the House. What I mean by that is, that I think this House, as the guardian of the public Treasury, at this time especially, owes it to itself and to the country to see to it that no appropriations of public money are made unless for reasons of the gravest necessity. Now, what is the question before the House? A bill comes from the Senate proposing to create a new post route, and we have a proposition before us to expend from sixty to one hundred thousand dollars in the creation of that route. Gentlemen interested in the section of territory to be affected rise and recommend the proposition; but the chairman of the committee on the Post Office and Post Roads says that he cannot, from the informal examination he has been able to make, favor it. So, after all, we have no recommendation of a committee of this House. Now, I say let it be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; let them examine the matter and make their report upon it. Let it have a deliberate consideration, and if it is found to be wise and proper to expend this amount of money to establish this new route, let it be done.

Mr. DONNELLY. In answer to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WARD,] I will say that it is impossible that this bill should have been before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads except in an informal way. The Postmaster General was so solicitous that this change should be made, believing it was demanded by the growth of the country and by the emigration that was tending in that direction, that he at first sought to make the change without asking the permission of Congress. He believed he had the power so to do, but upon a critical examination of the law he came to the conclusion that he had not that power. So the matter was brought before the Senate of the United States. It was examined by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of that body, received their recommendation, and passed the Senate. It is now taken from the Speaker's table for action. It is absolutely impossible that it could have been before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of this House, save as I said, in an informal manner. In that informal manner it has been considered, and the committee through their chairman tell us they are satisfied it ought to pass.

Mr. COVODE. I would ask the gentleman whether he is not aware that $80,000 were thrown away on this route last year and not a single mail was carried over it? A few mails were started by Indians but not one ever went through. And in this connection I call the attention of the House to the fact that a most enormous bill has been run through over the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to-day, without reference to that committee, a bill in which $1,000,000 are involved. I want this bill to go to the committee. Let us have a fair report on the subject.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Will the gentleman from Minnesota permit me to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COVODE?]

Mr. DONNELLY. Certainly.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I desire to say that I know more about this mail route than it is possible for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COVODE] to know. I know that the mail was carried from St. Paul by the way of St. Cloud and Fort Abercrombie, and came as regularly as possible under the circumstances to the town of Helena, my home. I know that the mail was carried over that route during the last summer, and a portion of the last winter, and the contractors were so earnest in the discharge of their duty that for hundreds of miles the letter mail was carried on the backs of men traveling on snow-shoes. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COVODE] is answered, and that he is satisfied.

Mr. DONNELLY. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. CAVANAUGH] seems to have given a sufficient answer to the remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DELANO. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether a motion to refer this bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is in order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] surrenders the floor without demanding the previous question it will then be in order; or if the previous question should be voted down it will then be in order.

Mr. WARD. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. DELANO. I desire to inquire of the gentleman upon what authority he limits the expenditure of this enterprise to $40,000. If I correctly understood the chairman of the committee he said he was not himself informed as to the probable cost. I hear from different parts of the House different opinions as to this increased expense. Many gentlemen estimate it much higher than the gentleman from Minnesota does. I know very well that these estimates are very often made, and I want to know the gentleman's authority for his estimate.

Mr. DONNELLY. My answer to the gentleman is simply this: I have been informed, and believe, for I was cognizant of the circumstances at the time the service was let, that the present service costs $84,000 a year. The chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has clearly stated to the House that the Postmaster General has informed him by letter read here, that if this bill passes, the service will cost, "at a liberal estimate," $134,000, which, as I figure it, is an increase of precisely $50,000 per annum.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the justice and fairness of this House to treat this northwestern country liberally. We well know that there is not a human probability that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will have an opportunity to report again this session. We know, therefore, that if we commit this joint resolution to that committee we defeat it for this session. If it is a just and righteous measure let us pass it. If it is not, let us vote it down, and not resort to what I may almost call subterfuges to kill the measure.

Mr. WARD. How do we know that it is a just and righteous measure if we do not find it out through the instrumentality of the committee appointed for the purpose of ascertaining the facts? How do we know it?

Mr. DONNELLY. By that common sense and judgment with which God has endowed most men. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARD. The gentleman has more than his share, and I was inquiring for a little of his. [Laughter.]

Mr. DONNELLY. I should be happy if time permitted it to fully enlighten the gentleman, but it would take time.

Mr. MAYNARD. This is not a question for levity, it strikes me, but for serious, substantial information. I wish to know what the present service is that costs $80,000?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. What are the postal receipts from the pony service now there?

Mr. DONNELLY. We did not ask these questions when the liberality of this country spread over the uninhabited wastes of the South the mighty net-work of the postal service, and we have no right to put such questions here to this great and growing northwestern loyal country—loyal all the way through.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the gentleman refuse to answer my question and tell me what the present service is?

Mr. DONNELLY. I have already twice stated that it is a "pony" or horse service.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is fair that I should state to the House that if this joint resolution is referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, it is not at all likely that the committee will have an opportunity of reporting it at this session. If the joint resolution is to be passed at all it ought to be passed now, so that whoever shall contract for the service may be able to provide the necessary teams, forage, &c., for the seasons in that country are not as long as they are here and the men who propose to contract for the service will require all the time between now and the fall to get ready.

As I said when I was up before, I will say now, in reply to the question put by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WASHBURN] to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DONNELLY,] as to what the postal receipts are upon this route, that I presume they are very trifling. The postal receipts on every route are very trifling until you get the route established. The postal receipts on the central route to California were very trifling until you had the route established, and a line of stages to carry the mails. While you are only carrying the mails by Indian and pony service, which is irregular, fugitive, spasmodic, the people are not going to travel or send their letters that way. They will rather go round two or three hundred miles. If you wish to develop the country and to facilitate its settlement, the only way is to do as we did in the case of the central route, to give them some facilities, to put a stage route on and thus pave the way for settlement.

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads are of the opinion, from the cursory examination they have given to it, that this is a fair joint resolution. While it will cost the Department something, it will only cost about one tenth as much at the most as will the bill that has just passed, and passed, too, to afford the booksellers, publishers, and dealers greater facilities in their trade. It seems to me that it is very much like straining at the gnat after we have swallowed the camel to refuse to give these people away up there in the North, these military posts, and these remote territories, a tri-weekly stage line after you have opened the door to all the booksellers in the United States to send their books all over the Territories by stage coaches.

Mr. DONNELLY. I now call the previous question.

Mr. DELANO. Is it in order to move to lay this joint resolution on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DELANO. Unless the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] will withdraw his call for the previous question I must make that motion.

Mr. DONNELLY. I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. DELANO. Then I move that the joint resolution be laid on the table.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 34, noes 58; no quorum voting.

Mr. DELANO. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HIGBY. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CHANLER: The protest of Edward Hincken, president, George M. Clearman, vice president, Thomas M. Sandford, secretary, of the Ship-owner's Association of the State of New York, against the passage of a bill relative to the mercantile marine of the United States.

By Mr. EGGLESTON: The petition of all the principal liquor merchants of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying that the tax on whisky may be reduced to twenty-five cents per gallon.

By Mr. KOONTZ: The petition of Thomas J. Eddowes and 100 others, of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, asking for the establishment of a post route from Orleans, on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, Alleghany county, Maryland, to Bloody Run, Bedford county, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. MOORHEAD: The petition of S. Chadwick, farmer, and others, citizens of Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, a memorial of the Board of Trade of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, recommending that Government aid or subsidy be extended to the Kansas branch of the Pacific railroad.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 20, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. A. D. GILLETTE, D. D.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

TERRITORIAL LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the acts, resolutions, and memorials of the Territory of Montana, passed by the fourth Legislative Assembly, convened at Virginia City November 4, 1867; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and widows of soldiers of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Duncan Jordan, praying an extension of the time for applications in bankruptcy; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of stone cameo cutters of the city of New York, praying an increase of the tax on cut cameo; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Louisiana, against the recognition of the constitution of that State by Congress; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the petitions of Walter Scribner, Francis Hart, Henry Conklin, and two hundred and thirteen others, printers and bookbinders of New York city, representing that the industry of the country is paralyzed for want of efficient protection against the cheaper labor and capital of foreign countries; that much of the distress now prevalent and increasing daily would be relieved by the legislation suggested in Special Commissioner Wells's report of last year, and perfected in the tariff bill (as passed by the Senate) which failed in the House of Representatives March, 1867, for want of time, and praying that Congress will resume consideration of that measure and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and the widows of soldiers of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and the widows of soldiers in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the memorial of John Beeson, known to many Senators as having devoted his life to philanthropic efforts in behalf of the Indians, in which he represents that the enormous waste of life and money and the demoralization from the frauds and wars upon the Indians demand immediate redress, and he proceeds to set forth several particulars under different heads, of which he proposes a reformation. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD presented a petition of E. and A. Betts, H. B. Seidel, Casper Kendall, D. Lammot, jr., and one hundred and thirteen others, manufacturers and workmen of Wilmington and Dover, in the State of Delaware, complaining of the paralysis of domestic industry resulting from the want of efficient protection against the cheaper labor and capital of foreign countries, and praying for the enactment of a general tariff law, similar to the bill which was matured but not finally passed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of W. Jones & Co. and others, Morocco manufacturers of Wilmington, Delaware, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for such an increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee, presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and the widows of soldiers in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and the widows of soldiers in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLEY presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and the widows of soldiers in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. YATES presented a petition of citizens of the United States, praying the adoption of a law investing all men with the equal exercise of the elective franchise in all the States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 214) to authorize the Secretary of War to settle the claims of the State of Kansas for services of the militia called out by the Governor of that State, upon the requisition of Major General Curtis, the commander of the United States forces in that State, to repel the invasion of General Price, reported it with amendments.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARLAN. If the morning business is through, I move that the Senate proceed to consider House joint resolution No. 201, in relation to the Rock Island bridge.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are several Senators who have examined that question and are opposed to that measure who are not here, and as this day was specially set aside for pension business I doubt very much whether we ought to proceed with a matter that is disputed.

Mr. HARLAN. I think the special order referred to by the Senator from Ohio was fixed for one o'clock, and we have ample time to dispose of this joint resolution in the mean time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But there are not more than a dozen Senators in the Chamber, and there are several gentlemen absent who are opposed to that resolution. It would not be right to take it up now in their absence.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is not a quorum present, and I think it will be very unwise to take it up now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Iowa does not press his motion at this moment, I wish to move to take up another bill.

Mr. HARLAN. I shall not press it in view of the observations made by other Senators, and therefore withdraw my motion; but I desire that the subject shall be properly considered, and I shall repeat the motion at the first opportunity.

DISTRICT COURT OF CAIRO.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 347, to which, I presume, there is no objection. It is a bill to authorize the holding of a district court at Cairo.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 347) to amend an act to divide the State of Illinois into two judicial districts, approved February 13, 1855, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, in the following words:

That, in addition to the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, now held at Springfield, terms of said circuit and district courts shall hereafter be held at the city of Cairo, in said district, to begin on the first Mondays of March and October of each year.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the clerks of the said circuit and district courts shall keep clerks' offices for said courts at the city of Cairo, and all the records and papers pertaining to business in said courts at the city of Cairo shall be kept therein, and they shall appoint deputy clerks for said courts, who shall reside in said city of Cairo.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the district attorney for the southern district of Illinois shall perform the duties of his office in the circuit and district courts held at the city of Cairo, and the marshal of said district shall keep an office at the city of Cairo, and appoint a deputy, who shall reside in said city of Cairo.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That, in addition to the terms of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, now required by law to be held at the city of Springfield, terms of said court shall hereafter be held at the city of Cairo, in said State, commencing on the first Mondays of March and October in each year.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Its title was amended so as to read: A bill for holding terms of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois at the city of Cairo, in said State.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO.

Mr. YATES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 11, to admit the State of Colorado into the Union.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. YATES. I wish to say to the Senate in relation to this bill that the committee have again had it under consideration and have reported it back with amendments, to which nobody will object, to refer the whole matter back to the people, and the State is only to be admitted on the condition that it adopts the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. I am sure in its present shape there will not be any objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I should like to make a statement to this effect: several Senators who are now absent called on me yesterday to know what I intended to do with regard to the pension bills, and I told them that I intended to call them up as soon after the reading of the Journal as I could; and I apprehend that several Senators, not being interested, are absent with that understanding. I have no objection to this bill in the form which I understand it assumes; but I do not think, perhaps, it would be strict justice, as I may have led them into the error myself, to take up any bill of this sort when so many Senators are absent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think we ought to take up such a bill to-day.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to make an inquiry of the honorable Senator from Illinois. Is it his purpose to take up the bill now and dispose of it in the morning hour?

Mr. YATES. Yes, sir. I presume the Senator from New York did not hear the statement I made a moment ago. I stated the bill had been again under consideration before the committee, and this is a compromise bill to which there is no objection, I believe, from anybody in the Territory. It simply proposes to refer the matter back to the people.

Mr. POMEROY. The bill is now merely an enabling act, and I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. CONKLING. I know in general terms what the amendment is that is suggested to the Colorado bill. It is an amendment which I believe is calculated to remove objections to it. At the same time I have no idea that the bill can be taken up and passed in any form in the morning hour to day. In addition to that, there is not a quorum of the Senate present, as we all see; and the understanding was that this day was to be devoted to another purpose, and that that particular business was certainly to occupy the day. Now, I submit to my honorable friend, without wishing to interfere at all with him in getting up his bill, that this is an unfortunate time to select to do it. If the amendment is satisfactory to all interests, and if it shall avoid all objections, certainly there can be no purpose in pressing it now, in the absence of Senators; whereas a majority being absent, and absent upon an understanding that no business of this sort was to be considered to-day—for the understanding went as far as that—I submit to the honorable Senator that it would rather provoke suspicion and distrust of the amendment and the bill than to win for it the consent of those who otherwise might be inclined to concur in it. Therefore, not making the suggestion in enmity to the measure or the amendment, it seems to me it would be better to wait until a day comes that general business is in order, and in expectation, too, and then take up Colorado, and if the amendment is satisfactory, as I hope it will be, there will probably be no objection to its passage.

Mr. YATES. I should not have moved to take up the bill but for the understanding that all objections to it were removed by the amendment; and even now I shall not press it, although I do not understand the force of the points made by the Senator from New York. I withdraw the motion for the present.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

Mr. SUMNER. There was a resolution which I offered some months ago relating to the railroad between Washington and Baltimore, which I wish to call up, and, after making a single remark with regard to it, I propose to withdraw it. I wish to assign the reason for my action.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. SUMNER on the 17th of February last:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to consider if any additional legislation is necessary in order to secure the rights of colored persons on the railroad from Washington to Baltimore.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, when I offered that resolution I had in my hands a great deal of evidence showing abuses on that road; that colored persons, very respectable, of both sexes, had been treated very badly on the road between Washington and Baltimore. Having that information I felt it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to it. The consideration of the resolution at the time was objected to by the Senator from Maryland, who is not now in his seat, [Mr. JOHNSON.] Since then I am happy to say a change has taken place on that road, and I am not aware now that there is any occasion for inquiry. By way of confirmation of this statement I beg to read a letter which I have received from one of the former complainants, one whose family had been badly treated on the road, George T. Downing, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 18, 1868.

DEAR SIR: I have the pleasure to inform you that the managers of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad have yielded to the progressive spirit of the age; a point which will not be appraised until men shall be respected according to their merit, regardless of their color, until color shall not be a badge either of distinction or of contempt.

I have been assured by the managers of the above road that its passengers shall enjoy its advantages regardless of their color, and that its managers will punish by dismissal any of its employees who shall disregard this, its rule.

Yours, &c.

GEORGE T. DOWNING.

HON. CHARLES SUMNER.

Under these circumstances, considering that the managers have come into this explicit understanding with Mr. Downing, who is a representative of the colored race, I do not propose to press the inquiry any further, and I therefore ask leave to withdraw the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be withdrawn, if there be no objection.

ISRAEL T. CANBY'S SURETIES.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up the bill that was before the Senate yesterday morning in the morning hour. It will take but a moment, I presume, to consider it. The report is now printed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 428) for the relief of the sureties of Israel T. Canby, late receiver of public moneys at Crawfordsville, Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. I know something about the character of this application, and I think the bill ought to pass. The liability of these parties has been suffered to slumber for full forty years until nearly all the bondsmen are dead, and I think it would be a matter of gross injustice now to press the collection of this money upon two old men, one of whom is a paralytic and cannot raise his hand, as I am told, and the other is an old man living in the town where I reside who has but a few days before him. It occurs to me where the Government has suffered a liability of this kind to sleep for forty years that there is no equity or justice in attempting to collect it after that time, and especially under the circumstances that surround these parties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVY-YARD BRIDGE.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate take up for consideration a resolution introduced some time since by me in relation to a survey for a bridge across the Eastern Branch. There will be no objection to it, I am sure, and it is necessary to be passed now in order that we may obtain the information for the consideration of a bill that has been referred to the District Committee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by Mr. HARLAN on the 28th of May last:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to make a survey of the lower bridge, known as the navy-yard bridge, across the Anacostia, and report a plan for a permanent structure across the same at or near the present site capable of sustaining a railway track and cars, with a footing on each side of the carriage track, with an estimate of the cost of the same.

Mr. HARLAN. Perhaps the resolution ought to be amended so as to read, "the officer acting as Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. POMEROY. With the leave of the Senate I ask that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 557) for completing a direct and continuous line of railroad from Washington city to Mobile and other points South, creating a postroute from Washington city to Mobile and New Orleans, thereby securing a more certain, speedy, and economical transportation of the United States mails, military stores, and munitions of war, which I had referred by mistake to that committee a day or two ago. I desire to have it referred to the select committee on the subject of national railways, of which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

DISTILLED SPIRITS FOR ARMY HOSPITALS

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House joint resolution No. 262.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 262) authorizing certain distilled spirits to be turned over to the Surgeon General for the use of the Army hospitals. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the Surgeon General of the Army all the distilled spirits produced during the experiments made by the late commission for testing meters for the internal revenue service, to be used for the Army hospitals, and to be paid for at a reasonable cost out of any moneys appropriated for the purchase of Army hospital stores, the amount received to be applied toward the expenses of the commission.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HYGEIA HOTEL AT FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up House joint resolution No. 266.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) to authorize the enlargement of the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permission to Henry Clark, proprietor of the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, to enlarge the hotel in such a manner as may be compatible with the interests of the United States; but such enlargement, or any building hereafter erected by any person or persons upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, are to be at once removed, at the expense of the respective owners, whenever the Secretary of War shall deem such removal necessary; and no claim for damages therefor is to be made upon the Government of the United States; and the building so to be enlarged is to be subject to taxation under State and national authority the same as other property.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRITISH STEAMER LABUAN.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 528, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to carry into effect a decree of the district court at New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 528) to carry into effect the decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York in the case of the British steamer Labuan was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to William Bailey, William Leetham, and John Leetham, of England, or their legal representatives, owners of the British steamer Labuan, of $131,221 30, with interest from June 2, 1862, to the time of payment, and $5,000 without interest; also, to Messrs. De Jersey & Co., of England, or their legal representatives, part owners of the cargo of the same steamer, $3,613 92, with interest from May 21, 1862, to the time of payment; and to Francisco Amendiaz, of Matamoros, Mexico, or his legal representatives, part owner of the cargo of the same steamer, $2,067 17, with interest from June 6, 1862, to the time of payment; such sums being due under a decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York, pronounced March 25, 1868, on account of the illegal capture of the British steamer Labuan and her cargo by a cruiser of the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, always manifests a great degree of promptness in reporting bills for the payment of British ships. I suppose that ascertained debts should be paid, but I am sorry to see that there is not an equal promptness by him in reporting bills for the protection of the rights of Americans abroad. There have been times—and I should be sorry if they had passed—when the rights of men demanded protection and immediate attention quite as much as the property of men. My friend would scarcely wish to occupy the position of being here as the special advocate of the rights of property and the payment of debts as contradistinguished from the support and sustenance of the rights of men, either white or black.

When a question was under consideration a few days since cognate to the subject, I took the liberty to inquire of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations when we could expect a report upon the House bill now long with that committee, and he made answer that the committee would take it up at its next meeting. Since that time it has been stated in the public press, I hope not correctly, that the committee has agreed to lay that bill over, postpone it until the next session of Congress.

Now, Mr. President, it would scarcely become me to criticise the action of a committee of this body, and particularly to assume that this statement is a correct one to base such criticism upon; and until the honorable chairman shall state that it is correct I shall not be understood as criticising the action of the committee; but I will say now, while I am up, that it is scarcely the thing, as it appears to me, upon an important subject, that a committee shall agree to postpone consideration of it without submitting that question to the body which had referred it to them. I am of the opinion that there is no one requirement greater now at our hands than that there be American law as the basis of action for our Government upon the great subject to which I have adverted, and which is comprehended by the bill before the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I rise, Mr. President, to call attention to that bill, and to invite the attention of the country to it, and to give notice that at an early day I intend to move to discharge the committee from its further consideration, and get the yeas and nays upon that question, unless there shall be a report made. I want the privilege of voting that American citizens, being abroad upon their own proper business, shall not be subject to interference, interruption, arrest, or imprisonment by any foreign Power on earth; and upon that proposition I intend to have, in one way or another, an early vote.

It was stated in the newspaper connection that I have referred to that the action was taken to some extent in deference to diplomatic representatives of foreign Powers at Washington. That can scarcely be true, sir; it cannot be true.

Mr. SUMNER. And of Mr. Seward, it was said.

Mr. CONNESS. And of Mr. Seward, it was said. That can scarcely be true, either. I will not, however, undertake at this time to discuss the Secretary of State in this connection, because I do not think it would be proper; but as one Senator here, and as a citizen feeling a deep interest in this subject, but not claiming any exclusive interest in it, as was intimated on another occasion by the honorable Senator, I do claim that it is a subject worthy of our attention, and which demands our early attention.

And, Mr. President, the tone of public feeling upon this subject is sound and true. It is not ephemeral, nor asserted at this time for local political effect; but the opinion is made up in the face of the arrest of our citizens abroad and their incarceration in foreign prisons, from which they are gradually being discharged by the grace of her majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, if not other potentates of Europe.

As I said on another occasion, if this Government is not able, ready, willing, and determined to support its citizens abroad, it must be held to have abdicated one of its most essential functions; and I intend to ascertain how many American Senators there are who will hesitate to give earnest effect to this opinion. I do not intend to occupy my seat here and vote for the payment of damages to British ships while American citizens are in British prisons; and I hope, sir, there will be an end to it. We are constantly engaged in acts of courtesy, civility, comity, toward foreign nations, and especially toward that nation which never makes and never has made any ceremony in putting its strong arm upon our people whenever it suited its policy.

I should like now, Mr. President, in this connection to know how long the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is to give precedence to bills for the payment of British ships, and to neglect from one session of Congress to another the important question I have referred to?

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, the Senator from California addresses a question directly to me, apparently holding me responsible for the order of business and the reports made by the Committee on Foreign Relations. Sir, he does me too much honor and assigns to me too great a responsibility. I am here on this floor a Senator like himself, and the representative of that committee; that is all. So far as I act on questions from the committee, it is only as its representative. I do what I am instructed to do. Now, that committee has instructed me to report a bill to carry into effect a decree of the district court for New York with regard to which I presume there can be no objection. It has as yet given me no instructions on the matter to which the Senator calls my attention and the attention of the Senate. I refer to the bill from the House of Representatives with regard to the rights of American citizens abroad. When the Senator called attention to that on a former occasion I said that it was then under the consideration of the committee. It has been on three several occasions considered by the committee, and the action of the committee thus far is not my action but the action of the committee, and I may say unanimously. I will not go into the consideration of that action now. I prefer not to step aside from the bill actually before the Senate; there is no occasion for it. If the Senator pursues his motion according to the notice he has given, there may be then occasion for it.

I shall content myself with simply one observation. There has been a report in the newspapers with reference to the action of the committee on the bill referred to. The report is entirely without foundation. It is stated that the chairman of the committee had had a conference with the Secretary of State, and acted in pursuance of the Secretary's suggestions. On that statement I have this to say, that I have never once exchanged a word with the Secretary of State on that bill, nor have I ever received any suggestion from him, direct or indirect. That is the answer that I give to that report. So far also as the report pretends to attribute influence to foreign diplomacy I may make the same remark. The bill was considered by the committee independently, without any influence from any quarter, and the conclusion that they have reached thus far was founded on their own judgment, looking at the best interests of the country, and with a desire, I believe, as sincere as that of the Senator himself to maintain the rights of American citizens abroad. If thus far they have not been able to see their line of duty precisely as the Senator sees his, I hope the Senate will be candid enough not to attribute to them any want of interest in the cause to which he refers.

He reminds the Senate that the committee can report bills relating to property and neglect bills relating to human rights. I am not aware that I have reported from that committee during this session any other bill that falls within the category to which the Senator refers. This is the first bill of the kind—the bill I now hold in my hand—because it is the first with regard to which there has been any occasion for action. It was a bill almost of necessity, because it was to carry out a judgment of one of our own courts declaring that the United States stood in debt to certain persons, and this bill simply proposes to provide the means for the payment of that debt. I cannot well understand why a committee which thus simply discharges its duties should be arraigned for some imagined neglect of the great cause of human rights to which I believe all its members are as sensitive as the Senator from California himself. Certainly I will not yield to that Senator on that subject in any form in which it can be presented. My opinions of the rights of American citizens, whether at home or abroad, have been too often declared. I desire that those rights shall be asserted and maintained. Possibly I may differ from the Senator as to the way in which those rights should be asserted and maintained; but I cannot allow that Senator to consider himself more devoted to that cause than I am.

Now, I hope, if the Senate please, unless the Senator wishes to remark further, they will act on the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I do wish to make some further remarks. This is a very curious answer, and full of instruction, to the question that I had the honor to propound to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. What is most noticeable in it—and I call the attention of Senators and the country to the honorable Senator's answer—is that he does not step with firm tread, but he steps forward in dealing with this subject as though his feet were clothed with moccasins. He says, in the first place, that he is not the committee. Does he imagine that we do not know that? He tells us not what the committee has done, but intimates that it has with unanimity determined to postpone this great question. Well, Mr. President, I did not arraign the committee; but it is my right to inquire into this subject here. Nor did I claim any superior interest in this subject to any other Senator. I wish it distinctly understood that upon this question I am peculiarly and only American.

But, Mr. President, I intend to pursue the notice that I have given, and I shall invite the attention of the few representatives of the opposite party on the other side of this Chamber, and hope, when the question comes up, to get their votes; and that the party I belong to here, peculiarly representing, as I believe, human rights, shall be, if not voluntarily spring into this contest, shamed into it. I do not intend that it shall be left unacted upon.

If this subject were near the heart of my honorable friend from Massachusetts as other subjects that he takes hold of, think you that he would not press it upon the attention of the committee of which he is chairman, and then upon the attention of the Senate? Why, sir, with what eagerness he rises in his place when he has a petition to present here involving an alleged outrage upon a single individual, and that within the reach of our right hands or right arms! But upon this subject month after month may pass, season after season—nay, year after year—and American citizens may rot and die in foreign prisons!

I now, Mr. President, conclude by giving notice that at an early day of the coming week I shall propose a resolution to discharge the Committee on Foreign Relations from the further consideration of the subject, that the Senate of the United States may vote upon it.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask now action on the bill before the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I hope there will be no action taken immediately on this bill. We should at least understand something more about it.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator will be good enough to look at the printed letter which accompanies it, and the decree of the district court, I think he will find that there is no occasion for delay. The bill simply carries out the decree.

Mr. STEWART. There is no written report of the committee.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon; it is all in print.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the bill lie over that I may look into it.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator raises the question that the United States is not to carry into execution a decree of the district court adjudging that the United States shall pay a certain sum of money, then there may be occasion for it to lie over.

Mr. STEWART. I must certainly raise that very question. If any of our courts have awarded damages to British subjects for illegal captures, or anything of the kind, I am opposed to making any appropriation for paying them until the Alabama claims are settled, and particularly the claims of those whalers in the Pacific ocean who were destroyed by Waddell, who was afterward harbored in England. Six weeks after the fall of the rebellion, this man, Waddell, destroyed an entire whaling fleet, destroying the whole property, the substance of their lives, of the poor men who owned those vessels. They were burned by him when he had before him papers announcing the end of the rebellion, but he said he did not care for that; and he afterward went to Great Britain and was harbored there. I understand he has been here at Annapolis since, and is now harbored by our Government. No steps have been taken to relieve those sufferers; and until there can be mutual justice done, until there can be some arrangement made in regard to the damages done by the privateers that Great Britain sent out to destroy our commerce, I think we should refuse all appropriations to pay just or unjust claims to British subjects for damages sustained during our war. I do not complain of the decision of the court in the case, because I know nothing of the facts; but I would not pay any such claim until there shall be a settlement of the claims of our citizens. They have been treated a great deal worse than British subjects have been, have been subjected to much greater losses, and under more cruel and aggravating circumstances. I do not think it is a very good time to make appropriations to pay claims of British subjects at this session, and I hope the bill will be postponed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is one o'clock, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To-day was set apart for the consideration of pension bills at this hour.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that the Senator from Indiana proposed to ask a question in regard to the bill which has been under discussion.

Mr. CONNESS. I think that had better go over to-day.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was going to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the court has decided the question?

Mr. SUMNER. The court has decided, and the bill is to carry into effect the decree of the court.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is this a question of restitution?

Mr. SUMNER. It is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Was the vessel sold?

Mr. SUMNER. The vessel was sold.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What became of the money? Was it paid into the Treasury? Is this to pay the amount that the vessel sold for?

Mr. SUMNER. It is to pay that amount. It is a case of restitution where there was an illegal capture.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the money has not been paid into the Treasury, the court can pay it on a restitution.

Mr. SUMNER. The money has been paid into the Treasury, and the decree of the court now adjudges the United States responsible to this amount, and distributes the same according to the proportions mentioned in the bill among the owners of the vessel and of the cargo.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What is the aggregate?

Mr. SUMNER. It is mentioned in the bill, but I have forgotten the precise amount. There is a report accompanying it. I went over the facts of the case in drawing the bill some time ago, and I cannot remember the precise figures. The bill was founded precisely on the decree.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to proceed with the pension bills.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the Senator calls up his bills, I wish to understand whether the pending bill will lead to debate? If so, I shall not press it now.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to examine the papers; and if there is a report there I hope it will be printed.

Mr. SUMNER. It is printed and on your table; it has been printed for some time.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say that I desire to be heard on this subject again. I have some information now touching the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and will state what that is on another occasion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the order of the day, being the bills reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 176) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for carrying the mails from the United States to foreign ports, and for other purposes," approved March 25, 1864;

A bill (H. R. No. 593) to continue the Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 538) to extend the boundaries of the collection district of Philadelphia so as to include the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia;

A bill (H. R. No. 861) relating to the Supreme Court of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 198) to reestablish the boundaries of the collection districts of Michigan and Michilimackinac, and to change the names of the collection districts of Michilimackinac and Port Huron; and

A bill (H. R. No. 764) for the relief of certain exporters of distilled spirits.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the concurrent resolution of the Senate tendering the thanks of Congress to Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, late Secretary of War.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 184) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Corcoran.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 426) for the relief of Thomas Crossley; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 134) authorizing a change of mail service between Fort Abercrombie and Helena, severally without amendment.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 563) for the preservation of the harbors of the United States against encroachments; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY E. MORSE.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to consider House bill No. 152.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 152) for the relief of the widow and children of Henry E. Morse was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the names of the widow and minor children under sixteen years of age of Henry E. Morse, late a private in company G, ninth regiment Vermont volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILTON ANDERSON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 246.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 246) granting a pension to Milton Anderson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Milton Anderson, late a private in company K, of the one hundred and fifteenth regiment Illinois infantry volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence from the 1st day of May, 1863, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to inquire of the honorable Senator from West Virginia whether all these bills which are being passed have received his personal examination?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. They have not only received my personal examination, but are House bills, and have been examined and approved by the committee there and then have passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONKLING. That of course we know. As they are House bills, they have passed the House, or they would not be here. But I would like to know whether, independent of that, the Senator has himself examined them?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I can assure the Senator that I have examined and I believe read every paper in all the cases, and they have also been canvassed before the Pension Committee of the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES L. DICKERSON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 257.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 257) for the relief of James L. Dickerson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its terms the Secretary of the Interior is to place on the pension-roll the name of James L. Dickerson, late a private in company D, first West Virginia artillery, in the war of 1861, and to pay him the same pension allowed privates, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, to commence on the 27th day of June, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY B. CRAIG.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 258.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 258) for the relief of Mary B. Craig was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Mary B. Craig, of Marshall county, West Virginia, widow of Samuel F. Craig, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st day of July, 1865, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET HUSTON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 280.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 280) to grant a pension to Margaret Huston was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Margaret Huston on the roll of pensions as a widow, at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, from January 1, 1865, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID VAN NORDSTRAND.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 455.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 455) granting a pension to David Van Nordstrand was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of David Van Nordstrand, late of company H, of the one hundred and twenty-seventh regiment of Indiana volunteer infantry, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "the passage of this act," and inserting "9th day of October, 1864."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator what is the reason for going back?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The law expressly puts it at the date of the injury or discharge. This bill was founded principally on the evidence of Mr. Speaker COLFAX. He drew the bill himself, and made a mistake in drawing it, which he did not perceive until it had passed the House of Representatives. He then came to me and asked me to offer the amendment. It is strictly in accordance with law.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the amendment make the pension date from the time of the disability, or from the discharge?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I cannot say which. The disability was the loss of a leg.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the disability was so marked as the loss of a leg, why could not the person get his pension in the regular way?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. This man lost his leg when he was sent off on particular duty. He was on a railroad car and fell from the top of the car, and his leg was crushed. At the time this occurred the Pension Office was not in the habit of allowing pensions in such cases; but I am entirely satisfied on examination that it is a correct case, and that the man should have his pension according to the amendment.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CORNELIA K. SCHMIDT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 517.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 517) granting a pension to Cornelia K. Schmidt, widow of Adam Schmidt, deceased, late a private in company A, thirty-seventh Ohio volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its terms the Secretary of the Interior is to place on the pension-roll the name of Cornelia K. Schmidt, widow of Adam Schmidt, deceased, a private in company A, thirty-seventh regiment Ohio volunteers, and to pay her the pension allowed a private during her widowhood, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, to commence on the 10th day of April, 1864; and in case of her death or marriage the pension is to be paid to the minor children of Adam Schmidt, deceased, who may be under sixteen years of age, subject to the provisions of the general pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA J. RENNARD.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 517.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 517) granting a pension to Eliza J. Rennard, widow of William K. Rennard, deceased, late a private in tenth Ohio volunteers, of war of 1861, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza J. Rennard, widow of William K. Rennard, deceased, a private in tenth Ohio battery of volunteers of the war of 1861, and to pay her the pension allowed a private during her widowhood, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, to commence on the 1st day of March, 1865; and in case of her death or marriage the pension is to be paid to the minor children of William K. Rennard, deceased, who may be under sixteen years of age, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPHINE K. BUGHER.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 520.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 520) to place the name of Josephine K. Bugher on the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its terms the Secretary of the Interior is to place the name of Josephine K. Bugher, of Missouri, on the pension-roll, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, commencing on the 1st day of August, 1861, as widow of Captain William J. Bugher, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN A. MITCHELL.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 526.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 526) increasing the pension of Susan A. Mitchell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan A. Mitchell, mother of Lieutenant Leander F. Alley, late of company I, twentieth Massachusetts regiment volunteer infantry, as the mother of a second lieutenant, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN Q. A. KECK.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 236.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 236) granting a pension to John Q. A. Keck, late a private in the third Missouri cavalry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of John Q. A. Keck, late a private in the third Missouri cavalry, on the pension-roll, to commence on the 19th day of December, 1862, and to be subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill by inserting after the word "roll," in line four, the words "and to pay him a pension of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ALMIRA WYETH.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 411.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 411) for the relief of Almira Wyeth was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, in these words:

That the name of Almira Wyeth, widow of James M. Wyeth, late a private in company I, seventy-fifth regiment Illinois volunteers, be placed on the pension-roll in pursuance of existing law in such cases, commencing on the 5th day of March, 1863.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Almira Wyeth, widow of James M. Wyeth, late a private in company I, seventy-fifth regiment Illinois volunteers, on the pension-roll, and allow and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 5th day of March, 1863, to continue during her widowhood.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE F. GORHAM.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 518.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 518) granting a pension to George F. Gorham, late a private in company B, twenty-ninth regiment Massachusetts volunteer infantry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of George F. Gorham, late a private in company B, twenty-ninth regiment Massachusetts volunteer infantry, in the war of 1861, and provides that he be paid the same amount of pension allowed in similar cases, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, to be computed from the 16th day of January, 1865.

The second section provides that inasmuch as George F. Gorham is now insane, and his father, John J. Gorham, appointed guardian, it is ordered and directed that the pension money be paid over to said guardian to be applied to the support of George F. Gorham during his insanity.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, to strike out in lines seven, eight, and nine the words "paid the same amount of pension allowed in similar cases, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws," and to insert "allowed and paid a pension at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move, in the second line of the second section, to strike out the words "and his father, John J. Gorham, appointed guardian;" and also to strike out the word "said" and insert "his," in the fourth line. The bill provides that the pension shall be absolutely paid to his father. His father may die and another guardian be appointed. The amendment is that the pension shall be paid to his guardian, whoever it may be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time; the bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. W. G. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 19th instant approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. No. 322) granting a pension to Sherman H. Cowles;

An act (S. No. 323) granting a pension to Michael Kelley;

An act (S. No. 344) granting a pension to Caroline and Margaret Swartwout;

An act (S. No. 420) granting a pension to James A. Guthrie;

An act (S. No. 421) granting a pension to Caroline E. Thomas; and

An act (S. No. 424) granting a pension to Bartlett and Carrie Edwards, children of David W. Edwards, deceased.

W. W. CUNNINGHAM.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 522.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 522) granting a pension to W. W. Cunningham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of W. W. Cunningham, late a sergeant of company C, thirteenth New York cavalry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, to commence from the 25th day of October, 1865.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill by inserting after the word "roll," in line six, "and to allow and pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES S. TODD.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 523.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 523) granting a pension to James S. Todd was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James S. Todd, of North Carolina, father of two sons who died in the first regiment North Carolina volunteers.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill by adding to it "and to allow and pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the passage of this act, and to continue during his natural life."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AUSTIN M. PARTRIDGE.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 524.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 524) granting a pension to Austin M. Partridge was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Austin M. Partridge, late a wagoner in company F, twenty-sixth regiment of Iowa infantry, commencing March 26, 1864.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, to insert in line seven, after the word "infantry," the words "and allow and pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be considered as withdrawn if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAHALA M. STRAIGHT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 373.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 373) to place the name of Mahala M. Straight upon the pension-roll of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill by striking out the letter "A," in the fourth line, and inserting "M;" and also by inserting after the word "deceased," in the fifth line, the words "late a private in company E, one hundred and twenty-ninth regiment Illinois volunteers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the words "United States," in line seven, the words "and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 5th day of September, in the year 1862, and to continue during her widowhood."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed; and its title was amended so as to read, "a bill to place the name of Mahala M. Straight upon the pension-roll of the United States."

NANCY WEEKS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 463.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 463) increasing the pension of Nancy Weeks, widow of Francis Weeks, a soldier of the war of 1812, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to increase the pension of Mrs. Nancy Weeks, widow of Francis Weeks, late of the State of Georgia, and a soldier of the war of 1812, to ten dollars per month, from and after the passage of this act, and to continue during her natural life.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment in line six, to strike out the words "a soldier of the war of 1812" and to insert "an ensign in the revolutionary war;" and in line nine to strike out the words "natural life" and insert the word "widowhood."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed; and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill increasing the pension of Nancy Weeks, widow of Francis Weeks, an ensign in the revolutionary war."

JOHN KELLEY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 454.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to John Kelley. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of John Kelley, late a private in company H, sixty-seventh regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, to date from the 16th of January, 1865, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "volunteers" the words "and to allow and pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee withdraw that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLEASANT STOOPS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 456.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 456) granting a pension to the minor children of Pleasant Stoops. The bill instructs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the names of the minor children of Pleasant Stoops, late a member of company F, eighteenth regiment of United States infantry, to date from the day of his death, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were, in line five to insert the names of "David Henry Stoops, Pleasant Stoops, and Sturges Stoops;" in line six to strike out the word "minor" before "children," and after the word "children" to insert "under sixteen years of age;" and in line eight, after the word "infantry," to insert "and to pay to them or their legally-authorized guardian or guardians a pension of eight dollars per month;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to place upon the pension-roll the names of David Henry Stoops, Pleasant Stoops, and Sturges Stoops, the children, under sixteen years of age, of Pleasant Stoops, late a member of company F, eighteenth regiment of United States infantry, and to pay to them or their legally-authorized guardian or guardians a pension of eight dollars per month, to date from the day of his death, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed; and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to the children of Pleasant Stoops."

BENJAMIN B. NAYLOR.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 516.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of the widow and minor children of Benjamin B. Naylor, late a pilot on the gunboat Patapsco. By the bill the Secretary of the Interior is directed to place the names of the widow and minor children under sixteen years of age of Benjamin B. Naylor, late a pilot on the gunboat Patapsco, on the pension-roll, at the rate allowed by law to pilots in the Navy, to commence on the 15th day of January, 1865, the same to be subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and paid out of the naval pension fund.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments, in line four to strike out the word "minor" before "children," and in line seven to strike out the words "allowed by law to pilots in the Navy," and to insert the words "of fifteen dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee withdrew those amendments.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLOMON ZACHMAN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 521.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 521) to place the name of Solomon Zachman on the pension-roll.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were in line six after the word "roll" to insert the words "and to pay him;" in line seven to strike out the words "commencing on" and to insert the word "from;" in lines eight and nine to strike out the words "subject to the limitations and requirements of the pension laws," and to insert "to the 6th day of June, 1866, and thereafter at the rate of fifteen dollars per month during his natural life;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to place the name of Solomon Zachman, of Marion county, Ohio, formerly a member of company D, eighty-second Ohio volunteers, on the pension-roll, and to pay him at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 30th day of May, 1864, to the 6th day of June, 1866, and thereafter at the rate of fifteen dollars per month during his natural life.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed; and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to Solomon Zachman."

JEREMIAH T. HALLETT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 525.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 525) granting a pension to Jeremiah T. Hallett. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jeremiah T. Hallett, late a member of company I, first United States infantry, commencing March 10, 1864.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "infantry," in line seven, the words "and to allow and pay him a pension at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SARAH E. PICKELL.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 659.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 659) granting a pension to Sarah E. Pickell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Pickell, widow of John Pickell, late of the thirteenth regiment New York volunteers, at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, commencing April 6, 1866.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment to the bill, to insert after the word "volunteers" the words "and to pay her a pension."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee withdrew that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM CRAFT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 661.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 661) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of William Craft was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill, as passed by the House of Representatives, directed the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the names of the widow and minor children of the late William Craft, late of company H, eighty-second Pennsylvania regiment, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, to commence April 6, 1865.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were in line five to strike out the word "the" and to insert "Susan F. Craft;" and also to strike out the words "and minor children" and to insert "and the child under sixteen years of age;" in line six to strike out the words "the late;" in line seven to strike out the letter "H" and to insert "D;" and in line eight, after the word "regiment," to insert "and to pay her a pension at the rate of ten dollars per month;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of Susan F. Craft, widow, and the child under sixteen years of age of William Craft, late of company D, eighty-second Pennsylvania regiment, and to pay her a pension at the rate of ten dollars per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, to commence April 6, 1865.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed; and its title was amended, so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to the widow and child of William Craft."

GEORGE R. WATERS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 662.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 662) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of George R. Waters. The bill, as it passed the House of Representatives, directed the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the widow and minor children of George R. Waters, late a member of the fiftieth regiment New York engineers, commencing November 17, 1864.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were in line six to insert the name of "Mary Waters," and also to insert the words "the three," and to strike out the word "minor" before "children," and after the word "children" to insert the words "under sixteen years of age;" in line eight to strike out the word "fiftieth," and insert "fifteenth," and also to strike out the word "engineers" and to insert the words "volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of fourteen dollars per month;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Mary Waters, the widow, and the three children under sixteen years of age, of George R. Waters, late a member of the fifteenth regiment New York volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of fourteen dollars per month, commencing November 17, 1864.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed; and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to the widow and children of George R. Waters."

CYRUS D. WOOD.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 663.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 663) granting a pension to Cyrus K. Wood, the legal representative of Cyrus D. Wood. The bill, as it passed the House of Representatives, proposed to direct the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Cyrus K. Wood, of Auburn, Maine, father and legal representative of Cyrus D. Wood, late of company H, tenth regiment Maine volunteer infantry, eight dollars per month from the 8th of May, 1863, to the 6th of June, 1866, and twenty-five dollars per month from the 6th of June, 1866, to the 8th of April, 1867.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were, in line four to strike out the words "pay to Cyrus K. Wood, of Auburn, Maine, father and legal representative of," and to insert the words "place on the pension-roll the name of," and in line seven, after the word "infantry," to insert the words "and to pay to him a pension at the rate of;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Cyrus D. Wood, late of company H, tenth regiment Maine volunteer infantry, and to pay to him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month from the 8th day of May, 1863, to the 6th day of June, 1866; and twenty-five dollars per month from said 6th day of June, 1866, to the 8th day of April, 1867.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed, and the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed; and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to Cyrus D. Wood."

CHARLES GOULER.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 664.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 664) granting a pension to the minor children of Charles Gouler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the minor children of Charles Gouler, late a private in company F, ninth New Hampshire volunteers, commencing April 18, 1866. The bill also repeals an act approved April 18, 1866, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler," and an act approved July 13, 1866, entitled "An act amendatory of an act entitled 'An act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler.'"

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were in section one, line six, to strike out the words "the minor" before "children" and to insert "Willie, Ellen, and Tellis Gouler," and after the word "children" to insert "under sixteen years of age;" in line eight, after the word "volunteers," to insert "and to pay them a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month;" and in line ten to insert "to continue until they severally attain the age of sixteen years;" so that the first section will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Willie, Ellen, and Tellis Gouler, children under sixteen years of age of Charles Gouler, late a private in company F, ninth New Hampshire volunteers, and to pay them a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing ing April 18, 1866, to continue until they severally attain the age of sixteen years.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed. The title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to the children of Charles Gonler."

SUSAN V. BERG.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 665.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 665) granting a pension to Susan V. Berg. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan V. Berg, widow of Charles Berg, who was killed in the employ of the quartermasters' department, in Kansas, on or about the 12th day of November, 1864, at the rate of eight dollars per month.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert in line nine the words "and to pay her a pension."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee withdrew that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY H. HUNTER.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 666.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 666) granting a pension to Henry H. Hunter. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry H. Hunter, a resident of Knox county, Kentucky, who was wounded while serving with the first regiment of Kentucky volunteer cavalry, commencing October 7, 1861.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, in line seven to strike out the word "and," and in line eight, after the word "cavalry," to insert the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH BUTLER.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 668.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 668) granting a pension to Elizabeth Butler, widow of Cyrus Butler. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Butler, widow of Cyrus Butler, late a special agent in the provost marshal's office in the nineteenth Pennsylvania district, and pay her as the widow of a private, commencing October 31, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MYRON WILKLOW.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 669.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 669) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Myron Wilklow. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the widow and minor children of Myron Wilklow, late a member of company B, forty-seventh Ohio volunteers, commencing June 2, 1865.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were, in line six to insert the name "Sarah A. Wilklow," and also to strike out the word "minor," and insert "Almira, Emma, and Mary Wilklow;" in line seven, after the word "children," to insert "under sixteen years of age;" and in line nine, after the word "volunteers," to insert the words "and to pay her a pension of fourteen dollars per month;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Sarah A. Wilklow, the widow, and Almira, Emma, and Mary Wilklow, children under sixteen years of age, of Myron Wilklow, late a member of company B, forty-seventh Ohio volunteers, and to pay her a pension of fourteen dollars per month, commencing June 2, 1865.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed; and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to the widow and children of Myron Wilklow."

ANDREW HOLMAN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 670.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 670) granting a pension to the widow and children of Andrew Holman. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the widow and minor children of Andrew Holman, late a private in company G, twenty-ninth regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry, commencing March 26, 1865.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were, in line six to insert the name "Kezia Holman," and also to strike out the word "minor," and insert the words "the three;" in line seven, after the word "children," to insert the words "under sixteen years of age;" and in line nine, after the word "infantry," to insert the words "and to pay her a pension at the rate of fourteen dollars per month;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Kezia Holman, the widow, and the three children under sixteen years of age, of Andrew Holman, late a private in company G, twenty-ninth regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of fourteen dollars per month, commencing March 26, 1865.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

HENRY KANEDAY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 671.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 671) granting a pension to the widow of Henry Kaneday. The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the widow and minor children of Henry Kaneday, late a private in company I, fifteenth regiment Iowa infantry, commencing May 5, 1862.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were in line six to insert the name of "Elizabeth Kaneday," and also to strike out the words "and minor children," and in line eight, after the word "infantry," to insert the words "and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Kaneday, the widow of Henry Kaneday, late a private in company I, fifteenth regiment Iowa infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing May 5, 1862.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES W. WILCOX.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 672.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 672) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Charles W. Wilcox. The bill, as passed by the House of Representatives, directed the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the widow and minor children of Charles W. Wilcox, late of company B, ninety-seventh Illinois volunteers, commencing March 16, 1863.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments, to insert in line six the name of "Martha J. Wilcox," and also to strike out the word "minor," and to insert "James W., Clarinda I., Ira E., and Charles E. Wilcox;" in line seven, after the word "children," to insert "under sixteen years of age;" and in line nine, after the word "volunteers," to insert "and to pay her a pension at the rate of sixteen dollars per month;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Martha J. Wilcox, the widow, and James W., Clarinda I., Ira E., and Charles E. Wilcox, children under sixteen years of age, of Charles W. Wilcox, late of company B, ninety-seventh Illinois volunteers, and to pay to her a pension at the rate of sixteen dollars per month, commencing March 16, 1863.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed, and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to the widow and children of Charles W. Wilcox."

THOMAS CONNOLLY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 676.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 676) granting a pension to Thomas Connolly. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Connolly, late a member of company A, sixty-ninth New York volunteers.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the following:

And to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, commencing on the 30th day of June, 1865.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES HEATHERLY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 677.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 677) granting a pension to the minor children of James Heatherly. The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the minor children of James Heatherly, late of company E, eleventh West Virginia volunteers, commencing December 19, 1866.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were, in line six to insert the names of "Joseph, Sarah, Loami, Francis, and James Heatherly;" in line seven to strike out the word "minor" before the word "children," and after the word "children" to insert the words "under sixteen years of age;" in line nine, after the word "volunteers," to insert "and to pay them a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month;" in lines ten and eleven to strike out the words "December 19, 1866," and insert "January 24, 1865, and to continue until they severally attain the age of sixteen years;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Joseph, Sarah, Loami, Francis, and James Heatherly, the children under sixteen years of age of James Heatherly, late of company E, eleventh West Virginia volunteers, and to pay them a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing January 24, 1865, and to continue until they severally attain the age of sixteen years.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to the children of Thomas Heatherly."

JOHN H. FINLAY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 770.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 770) granting a pension to John H. Finlay. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Finlay, late a member of company G, second Illinois cavalry, commencing October 6, 1864.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with two amendments. The first amendment was in line seven, to strike out the word "commencing" and to insert the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month from."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the bill the words "until June 6, 1866, and thereafter at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

MARY GRAHAM.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 667.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 667) granting a pension to Mary Graham. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Graham, mother of John Graham, alias Patrick Ryan, late of company A, eighteenth United States infantry, commencing September 10, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORNELIUS L. RICE.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now move to take up for consideration House bill No. 675.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 675) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Cornelius L. Rice.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were, in line six to insert the name of "Elizabeth Rice," and also to strike out the words "minor children" and insert the words "William T. S. Rice, the child under sixteen years of age;" and in line nine, after the word "volunteers," to insert the words "and to pay her a pension of ten dollars per month;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Elizabeth Rice, the widow, and William T. S. Rice, the child under sixteen years of age, of Cornelius L. Rice, late a member of company B, ninety-first regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, and to pay her a pension of ten dollars per month, commencing December 4, 1866.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed. The title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to the widow and minor child of Cornelius L. Rice."

CAPTAIN WILLIAM M'KEAN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 828.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 828) for the relief of Captain William McKean. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William McKean, late captain company I, ninety-second regiment New York volunteers, on the pension-roll, and to pay to him the same pension allowed by the general pension laws to persons having lost the sight of both eyes in the military service of the United States, to be paid under the restrictions and limitations imposed by the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID HOWE.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 769.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 769) granting a pension to David Howe. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David Howe, late a special agent in the provost marshal's office for the fourth Massachusetts district, commencing April 21, 1865.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert in line seven, after the word "district," the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee withdraw the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN D. LAY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 771.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 771) granting a pension to John D. Lay. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John D. Lay, a citizen of Daviess county, Missouri, commencing on the 1st of January, 1862.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "Missouri," in line six, the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT M'CRORY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 772.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 772) granting a pension to Robert McCrory. The bill makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert McCrory, late third assistant engineer on the steamer John Raine, commencing May 19, 1863.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert in line seven the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I withdraw that amendment; and I will state, in explanation of the withdrawal of so many of these amendments, that I do it in consequence of a conference with the committee of the other House. Wherever there is anything on the face of the bill which indicates the rate of pension I shall withdraw the amendments of the Committee on Pensions. Therefore, I withdraw this amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPherson, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 538) to extend the boundaries of the collection district of Philadelphia so as to include the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia;

A bill (H. R. No. 861) relating to the Supreme Court of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 176) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for carrying the mails from the United States to foreign ports, and for other purposes," approved March 25, 1864;

A bill (H. R. No. 764) for the relief of certain exporters of rum;

A bill (H. R. No. 598) to continue the Bureau for the relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 198) to reestablish the boundaries of the collection districts of Michigan and Michilimackinac, and to change the names of the collection districts of Michilimackinac and Port Huron; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 216) to authorize the Secretary of War to place at the disposal of the Lincoln Monument Association damaged and captured ordnance.

WILLIAM H. M'DONALD.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 773.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 773) granting a pension to William H. McDonald. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. McDonald, late of company F, sixtieth regiment New York volunteers, commencing March 11, 1862.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "volunteers," in line seven, the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

AMOS WITHAM.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 774.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 774) granting a pension to Amos Witham. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amos Witham, father of Amos O. Witham, late a member of company A, thirtieth Maine volunteers, commencing August 3, 1864.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert in line seven, after the word "volunteers," the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I withdraw that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERASTUS KINSEL.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 775.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 775) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Erastus Kinsel. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the widow and minor children of Erastus Kinsel, late a private in company A, one hundred and twenty-fifth regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, commencing April 7, 1863.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Since this bill was reported by the Committee on Pensions, the lady has married; and so I desire to offer a substitute for the bill giving the pension to the child. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca Jane Kinsel, the only child under sixteen years of age of Erastus Kinsel, late a private in company A, one hundred and twenty-fifth regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing April 7, 1863, and to continue until she attains the age of sixteen years.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire what is the object and effect of this substitute?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The woman has married again, and the child succeeds to the pension. The bill originally gave the pension to the widow, but now the widow's name is left out and the name of the child inserted. It does not increase, but on the contrary diminishes the amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed; and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to Rebecca Jane Kinsel."

ZEPHANIAH KNAPP.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 776.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 776) granting a pension to Zephaniah Knapp, of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania. The bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Zephaniah Knapp on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to be computed from the 1st of January, 1867, and to continue during his natural life.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment to insert in line five, after the word "roll," the words "and to pay him a pension."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee withdraw that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAMPTON THOMPSON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 822.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 822) granting a pension to Hampton Thompson. The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hampton Thompson, late a private in company G, sixty-third regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, commencing September 13, 1865.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "volunteers," in line seven, the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. LOCKER.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 823.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 823) granting a pension to George W. Locker. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Locker, late a private in company G, fifteenth Iowa volunteer infantry, commencing June 7, 1862.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "infantry," in line seven, the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. We withdraw that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE VAUGHN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 824.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 824) granting a pension to Annie Vaughn. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie Vaughn, widow of Daniel Vaughn, late a private in company A, fifty-eighth Pennsylvania volunteers, commencing December 25, 1863.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "volunteers," in line seven, the words "and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee withdraw that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. PHELPS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 673.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 673) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of John S. Phelps. The bill, as it passed the House of Representatives, directed the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the widow and minor children of John S. Phelps, late a lieutenant in the thirty-fifth regiment of Kentucky mounted infantry, commencing July 23, 1863.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were, in line six to insert the name "Saffrona C. Phelps;" and also to strike out the word "minor" and insert "Caleb S. Phelps;" in line seven to strike out the word "children" and insert "child under sixteen years of age;" in line eight to insert the word "second" before "lieutenant;" in line nine after the word "volunteer" to insert "and to pay her a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month for herself during widowhood, and two dollars per month for the said child until he shall attain the age of sixteen years;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Saffrona C. Phelps, the widow, and Caleb S. Phelps, child under sixteen years of age of John S. Phelps, late a second lieutenant in the thirty-fifth regiment of Kentucky mounted infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month for herself during widowhood, and two dollars per month for the said child until he shall attain the age of sixteen years, commencing July 23, 1863.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed. The title was amended so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to the widow and child of John S. Phelps."

JOHN W. HUGHES.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 825.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 825) granting a pension to John W. Hughes. By the bill the Secretary of the Interior is directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Hughes, late a private in company I, nineteenth Iowa volunteers, commencing February 21, 1863.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "volunteers," in line seven, the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of — dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to fill the blank in the amendment with "fifteen." It is an accidental omission.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL MELLON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 826.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 826) granting a pension to Michael Mellon. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Mellon, late of company H, sixty-second Illinois volunteers, commencing May 13, 1863.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment in line seven, after the word "volunteers," to insert "and to pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. We withdraw that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN WILSON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 827.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 827) granting a pension to Ann Wilson. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Wilson, widow of Michael Wilson, late of company F, seventy-first New York volunteers, commencing December 20, 1865.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "volunteers," in line seven, the words "and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee withdraw that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SUSAN TEN EYCK WILLIAMSON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 829.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 829) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Ten Eyck Williamson. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Susan Ten Eyck Williamson, widow of Charles L. Williamson, late a captain in the United States Navy, on the pension-roll, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence from and after the passage of this bill, and to continue during her widowhood, the pension to be paid out of the naval pension fund.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert after the word "roll," in line six, the words "and to pay her a pension."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. We withdraw that amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH BARKER.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 434.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 434) for the relief of Elizabeth Barker, widow of Alexander Barker, deceased, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to allow and pay to Elizabeth Barker, widow of Alexander Barker, late a private in company F, twenty-second regiment Massachusetts volunteers, a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 13th of July, 1862, the date of the death of her husband, until the 7th of October, 1867, on which date her present pension commenced. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARRIE E. BURDETT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 238.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Carrie E. Burdett. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Carrie E. Burdett, widow of James F. Burdett, late an acting assistant surgeon in the military service, on the pension-roll, at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, to commence on the 6th of August, 1866, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEON'S PENSIONS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 201, with a view of postponing it indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 201) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1865. By the provisions of the bill the widows, minor children, or the dependents of acting assistant surgeons dying while performing, or from any wound received or disease contracted while performing that duty, are to be entitled to the same benefits of the pension laws as if the deceased had actually been mustered into the service as assistant surgeons; and any application and depositions heretofore filed in behalf of any widow, minor child, or dependent of any contract surgeon dying from any wound received or disease contracted while performing duty, is to be received and regarded by the Commissioner of Pensions as if this amendment were enacted and in full force at the time of filing of the evidence.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

CHILDREN OF LA FAYETTE CAMERON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 175.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 175) for the relief of Joseph McGhee Cameron and Mary Jane Cameron, children of La Fayette Cameron, deceased, was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the names of Joseph McGhee Cameron and Mary Jane Cameron, residents of the District of Columbia, children under sixteen years of age, of La Fayette Cameron, deceased, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and to pay them a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, and to each the additional sum of two dollars per month from the 17th of December, 1862, until they severally attain the age of sixteen years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRIETTA NOBLES.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 232.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 232) granting a pension to Henrietta Nobles. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Henrietta Nobles, widow of Captain Daniel G. Nobles, of the fourth regiment of Tennessee infantry, upon the pension-roll, and to pay her a pension at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to commence on the 2d of November, 1862, and continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SYLVESTER NUGENT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 456.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 456) for the relief of Sylvester Nugent was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Sylvester Nugent, late a private in company F, eleventh regiment Massachusetts volunteers, and to allow and pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 19th of October, 1862, the date of his discharge, until the 14th of July, 1865, on which date his present pension commenced.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH J. MILLER.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 457.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 457) granting a pension to Elizabeth J. Miller, widow of General John Miller, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth J. Miller, widow of General John Miller, of Kentucky, and to allow and pay her a pension at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence from the 30th of August, 1862, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH STEEPLTON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 494.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 494) granting a pension to Elizabeth Steepleton, widow of Harrison W. Steepleton, deceased, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Steepleton, widow of Harrison W. Steepleton, late a private in company E, sixth regiment Indiana legion, and allow and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 9th of July, 1863, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY REENS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 495.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 495) for the relief of Henry Reens was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to allow and pay to Henry Reens, late a private in company I, thirtieth regiment Massachusetts volunteers, now on the pension-roll, his pension from the 3d of June, 1865, the date of his discharge from the service, until the 10th of March, 1867, on which day his present pension commenced.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RILEY H. SMITH.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 496.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S.

No. 496) granting a pension to Riley H. Smith was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Riley H. Smith, late a private in company D, third regiment West Virginia cavalry volunteers, and allow and pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, from the 6th of June, 1866, to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE WANDS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 497.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 497) for the relief of Catharine Wands was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to allow and pay to Catharine Wands, mother of John Wands, late a private in company I, seventh regiment New York heavy artillery volunteers, now on the pension-roll, her pension from the 3d of June, 1864, the date of her son's death, until the 22d of January, 1868, on which date her present pension commenced.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA M. HOWARD.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 498.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Anna M. Howard was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anna M. Howard, mother of George W. Howard, late a private in company C, eleventh regiment New Jersey volunteers, and allow and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month from the 12th of February, 1864, to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 450) relative to filing reports of railroad companies, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1035) authorizing the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York to change its location; and a bill (H. R. No. 1282) authorizing certain banks named therein to change their names, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS—VETO.

The message further announced that the President of the United States having returned with his objections the bill (H. R. No. 1039) to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress, to the House of Representatives, in which House it originated, the House had, in conformity with the Constitution, proceeded to reconsider the bill, and having passed the same by a two-thirds vote, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding, transmitted it, with the President's objections, to the Senate.

MARTIN WHITT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 499.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 499) granting a pension to the widow and child of Martin Whitt, deceased, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Whitt, widow of Martin Whitt, late a private in company B, fourth regiment Kentucky volunteers, and to allow and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month for herself during widowhood, and two dollars per month for the child of Martin Whitt until it shall attain the age of sixteen years, commencing September 19, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCINDA R. JOHNSON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 500.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 500) granting a pension to Lucinda R. Johnson was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda R. Johnson, widow of Doctor Bluford Johnson, of Illinois, late a contract surgeon in the military service of the United States, and to pay her a pension at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, to commence March 7, 1865, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET W. POND.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that we proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 501.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 501) granting a pension to Harriet W. Pond was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Harriet W. Pond, wife of ——— Pond, formerly Harriet W. Stinson, and to allow and pay to her as in her own right, and not subject to the claim or control of her husband, a pension at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, to commence on the 21st day of August, 1864, and to continue during her natural life.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. There are some peculiarities about this bill, which, as it is an original Senate bill, I think it proper to bring to the notice of the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. Let it go; I understand all about it.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. If no explanation is desired, very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIA WHISTLER.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 516.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 516) granting a pension to Julia Whistler was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julia Whistler, widow of William Whistler, late a colonel in the United States Army, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence December 3, 1863, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY BROWN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move now to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 517.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 517) granting a pension to the widow and children of Henry Brown, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Rehma Brown, the widow, and Nancy J., Alvey F., Sarah C., and Henry, children under sixteen years of age of Henry Brown, late a private in company K, tenth regiment Tennessee cavalry volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month during widowhood, and two dollars per month for each of the children, until they shall attain the age of sixteen years, commencing January 31, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN P. FETTY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move now to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 518.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 518) granting a pension to the widow and child of John P. Fetty was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior, under its provisions, is to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Fannie Fetty, the widow, and Ethel May Fetty, child under sixteen years of age, of John P. Fetty, late a private in company I, fourteenth regiment West Virginia infantry volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month for herself during widowhood, and two dollars per month for the child until she shall attain the age of sixteen years, commencing October 31, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA M. MOORE.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 519.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 519) granting a pension to Mrs. Emma M. Moore was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its terms the Secretary of the Interior is to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Emma M. Moore, widow of Edwin W. Moore, and to pay her a pension at the rate of thirty dollars per month, from the 5th day of October, 1865, during her widowhood.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the bill by striking out "thirty dollars," in the seventh line, and inserting "twenty-five dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. This, Mr. President, is also a peculiar case; but as the Senator from Kansas says he knows all about it, I shall not explain it unless an explanation is asked for by some Senator.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA STOUT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to take up next for consideration Senate bill No. 520.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 520) granting a pension to Martha Stout was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha Stout, widow of Tinson Stout, late a private in the Daviess county company of home guards, Kentucky militia, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 11th day of August, 1864, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. WOOTEN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 521.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 521) granting a pension to the children of William M. Wooten, deceased, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Alfred C. Wooten, Susan M. T. Wooten, Jesse Wooten, and Rosalia M. Wooten, children under sixteen years of age of William M. Wooten, deceased, late a private in the Daviess county company of horse guards, Kentucky militia, who, or their legally appointed guardian or guardians, are to receive a pension at the rate of fourteen dollars per month, to commence on the 11th day of August, 1864, and to continue until they severally attain the age of sixteen years.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALLY GRIFFIN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 413) granting a pension to Mrs. Sally Griffin, which has been reported adversely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

HANNAH COOK.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to take up next Senate bill No. 545.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Hannah Cook was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah Cook, widow of Lyman N. Cook, deceased, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $22 50 per month, to commence from the 2d day of April, 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE M'MURRAY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that we proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 546.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 546) for the relief of Jane M'Murray was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Jane M'Murray, of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, widow of Ezekiel M'Murray, a soldier of the war of 1812, a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, in lieu of the sum of four dollars per month now received by her, to commence from the 14th day of July, 1862.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN SHEETS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 547.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 547) granting a pension to John Sheets was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Sheets, late a private in company F, twelfth regiment West Virginia volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence on the 14th day of March, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARKS J. STACKHOUSE.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move now to take up Senate bill No. 548.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 548) granting a pension to Amanda Stackhouse, and the children of Parks J. Stackhouse, deceased, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its provisions the Secretary of the Interior is directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amanda Stackhouse, widow of Parks J. Stackhouse, late a private in company G, second regiment Pennsylvania reserves volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month for herself during widowhood, and two dollars per month for each child of Parks J. Stackhouse under the age of sixteen years, to commence on the 29th day of March, 1868, and to continue until they severally attain the age of sixteen years.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE ECKHARDT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 549, which is the last pension bill I shall trouble the Senate with to-day.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 549) granting an increase of pension to Catharine Eckhardt was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Catharine Eckhardt, widow of Henry L. Eckhardt, late a private in company C, fifth regiment Missouri volunteers, in addition to the pension heretofore granted her, the further sum of two dollars per month, for and on account of the care, custody, and maintenance by her of Anna M. Eckhardt, a child under sixteen years of age of Henry L. Eckhardt by a former wife, from the 3d day of February, 1868, while she has such care, custody, and maintenance, until the child shall attain the age of sixteen years.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD REPORTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 450) relative to filing reports of railroad companies. The amendment was to add to the bill the following section:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That in addition to the eight subjects referred to in section twenty of the act of July, 1862, to be reported upon, there shall also be furnished annually to the Secretary of the Interior all reports of engineers, superintendents, or other officers who make annually reports to any of said railroad companies.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS—VETO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 1039) to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress, which had been received from the House of Representatives with the veto message of the President thereon.

The Secretary read the veto message, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my signature a bill entitled "An act to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress."

The approval of this bill would be an admission on the part of the Executive that the act for the more efficient government of the rebel States, passed March 2, 1867, and the act supplementary thereto, were proper and constitutional. My opinion, however, in reference to these measures has undergone no change, but, on the contrary, has been strengthened by the results which have attended their execution.

Even were this not the case, I could not consent to a bill which is based upon the assumption either that by an act of rebellion of a portion of its people the State of Arkansas seceded from the Union, or that Congress may, at its pleasure, expel or exclude a State from the Union, or interrupt its relations with the Government by arbitrarily depriving it of representation in the Senate and House of Representatives. If Arkansas is a State not in the Union, this bill does not admit it as a State into the Union. If, on the other hand, Arkansas is a State in the Union, no legislation is necessary to declare it entitled "to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union." The Constitution already declares that "each State shall have at least one Representative;" "that the Senate shall be composed of two Senators from each State," and "that no State without its consent shall be deprived of its suffrage in the Senate."

That instrument also makes each House "the judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," and therefore all that is now necessary to restore Arkansas in all its constitutional relations to the Government is the decision by each House upon the eligibility of those who, presenting their credentials, claim seats in the respective Houses of Congress. This is the plain and simple plan of the Constitution; and believing that had it been pursued when Congress assembled in the month of December, 1865, the restoration of the States would long since have been completed. I once again recommend that it be adopted by each House in preference to legislation which I respectfully submit is not only of at least doubtful constitutionality, and therefore unwise and dangerous as a precedent, but is unnecessary, not so effective in its operation as the mode prescribed by the Constitution, involves the additional delay, and from its terms may be taken rather as applicable to a Territory about to be admitted as one of the United States than to a State which has occupied a place in the Union for upward of a quarter of a century.

The bill declares the State of Arkansas entitled and admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union upon the following fundamental condition:

That the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall be duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all the inhabitants of said State: Provided, That any alteration of said constitution, prospective in its effect, may be made in regard to the time and place of residence of voters."

I have been unable to find in the Constitution of the United States any warrant for the exercise of the authority thus claimed by Congress. In assuming the power to impose a "fundamental condition" upon a State which has been duly admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, Congress asserts a right to enter a State as it may a Territory, and to regulate the highest prerogative of a free people—the elective franchise. This question is reserved by the Constitution to the States themselves, and to concede to Congress the power to regulate this subject would be to reverse the fundamental principle of the Republic, and to place in the hands of the Federal Government (which is the creature of the States) the sovereignty which justly belongs to the States or the people, to the true source of all political power by whom our Federal system was created, and to whose will all is subordinate.

The bill fails to provide in what manner the State of Arkansas is to signify its acceptance of the "fundamental condition" which Congress endeavors to make unalterable and irrevocable. Nor does it prescribe the penalty to be imposed should the people of the State amend or change the particular portions of the constitution which it is one of the purposes of the bill to perpetuate, but leaves them in uncertainty and doubt as to the consequences of such action, when the circumstances under which this constitution has been brought to the attention of Congress are considered. It is not unreasonable to suppose that efforts will be made to modify its provisions, and especially those in respect to which this measure prohibits any alteration. It is seriously questioned whether the constitution has been ratified by a majority of the persons who, under the act of March 2, 1867, and the acts supplementary thereto, were entitled to registration and to vote upon that issue. Section ten of the schedule provides that—

"No person disqualified from voting or registering under this constitution shall vote for candidates for any office, nor shall be permitted to vote for the ratification or rejection of the constitution at the polls herein authorized."

"Assumed to be in force before its adoption, in disregard of the law of Congress, the constitution undertakes to impose upon the elector other and further conditions. The fifth section of the eighth article provides that 'all persons, before registering or voting,' must take and subscribe an oath which, among others, contains the following clause:

"That I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons, on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men."

It is well known that a very large portion of the electors in all the States, if not a large majority of all of them, do not believe in or accept the political equality of Indians, Mongolians, or negroes with the race to which they belong. If the voters of many of the States of the North and West were required to take such an oath as a test of their qualification, there is reason to believe that a majority of them would remain from the polls rather than comply with its degrading conditions.

How far and to what extent this test-oath prevented the registration of those who were qualified under the laws of Congress it is not possible to know; but that such was its effect, at least sufficient to overcome them all and give a doubtful majority in favor of this constitution, there can be no reasonable doubt.

Should the people of Arkansas, therefore, desiring to regulate the elective franchise so as to make it conform to the constitutions of a large proportion of the States of the North and West, modify the provisions referred to in the "fundamental condition," what is to be the consequence? Is it intended that a denial of representation shall follow? And if so, may we not dread, at some future day, a recurrence of the troubles which have so long agitated the country? Would it not be the part of wisdom to take for our guide the Federal Constitution, rather than resort to measures which, looking only to the present, may in a few years renew, in an aggravated form, the strife and bitterness caused by legislation which has proved to be ill-timed and unfortunate?

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, June 20, 1868.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the message be printed, and that the subject be postponed until Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARIAN. I desire very much to have the attention of the Senate to several District bills, and it is not now quite the usual time for adjournment; and I think if the Senate would give the Committee on the District of Columbia an hour to-day we could dispose of several bills that will not elicit discussion, and, perhaps, in this way economize time very much.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was rather an understanding that we should not do anything but pension business to-day, and we have not a quorum, so that if there was any dispute on any bill it could not be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Ohio to persist in his motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 20, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LAWS OF MONTANA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a copy of the laws of Montana Territory; which were referred to the Committee on the Territories.

MAIL SERVICE IN DAKOTA AND MONTANA.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is that pending at the adjournment yesterday, being Senate joint resolution No. 184, authorizing a change of mail service between Fort Abercrombie and Helena. The joint resolution had been read three times, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] had called the previous question, pending which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] moved that the joint resolution be laid upon the table. The question was taken, but no quorum voted. The gentleman from Ohio called for the yeas and nays, pending which the House adjourned. The question now is upon ordering the yeas and nays on the motion that the joint resolution be laid on the table.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was again taken upon the motion to lay the joint resolution on the table, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon seconding the previous question.

Mr. WARD. If the previous question is not seconded, will it then be in order to move to refer this joint resolution to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. And it will kill it.

Mr. WARD. The chairman of that committee [Mr. FARNSWORTH] seems to be friendly to the measure, and I desire to refer it to his committee for investigation.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. We have investigated it informally.

Mr. WARD. Are the committee prepared to report in its favor?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I think they are.

Mr. DONNELLY. It is utterly impossible for the committee to report on this joint resolution at this session if it is referred to them. To refer it will be to kill it.

Mr. HIGBY. Have not the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a measure of a similar character now before them?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. HIGBY. I understood they had.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. O! yes; I think they have; a bill or petition or something of the kind.

Mr. HIGBY. Did not a majority of the House Committee and all the members of the Senate Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads unite in a joint request to the Post Office Department to make the change here contemplated?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I think that is so.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Is there any exigency in this business that justifies taking this joint resolution out of the ordinary course? Why not refer it to a committee for examination, even if they do not report upon it until the next session?

Mr. DONNELLY. It is very important that this joint resolution should pass now, so that the parties who may take the contract may have time to build the necessary station houses, depot houses, and bridges during the coming fall.

Mr. WARD. Is it not always made a pretext for putting large bills through at the heel of a session, that we have not time for committees to examine them? I have noticed that the largest jobs that have gone through Congress in the way of expenditures come up at the heel of the session, and the pretext always is that they cannot be examined by committees for want of time. I insist that we should take time to examine this scheme, involving, as it does, an increased expenditure to the extent of $70,000.

Mr. DONNELLY. I insist upon the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 44, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, and Mr. WARD, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DONNELLY and Mr. WARD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 60, noes 35.

The Speaker voted in the affirmative; and accordingly the previous question was seconded. The main question was then ordered.

The joint resolution was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WARD demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes eighteen, noes not counted.

Mr. WARD demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. More than enough have voted for tellers to order the yeas and nays, and they will be considered ordered, if there be no objection.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 57, nays 50, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Beaman, Beck, Blair, Coburn, Donnelly, Driggs, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Fox, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Higby, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Jones, Johnson, Jones, Judd, Kelsey, Knott, Koortz, Lincoln, Loughridge, Marvin, McClurg, McCormick, Moorhead, Morrell, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Poland, Price, Sawyer, Sitgreaves, Smith, Starkweather, Stokes, Taber, Taffe, Taylor, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Trump, Cadwalader C. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Boutwell, Buckland, Coker, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cornell, Cullom, Eckley, Eggleston, Eli, Ferriss, Garfield, Getz, Glossbrenner, Harding, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Chester D. Hubbard, Julian, Ketchum, George V. Lawrence, Maynard, McCarthy, Mercer, Moore, Mullins, Orth, Plants, Polsey, Pomeroy, Scofield, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, John Trimble, Van Wyck, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, and John T. Wilson—50.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Archer, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Butler, Cary, Chanler, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Covode, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Ferry, Fields, Finney, Gravely, Griswold, Halsey, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Kelley, Kerr, Kitchen, Lufkin, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Lynch, Mallory, Marshall, McCullough, Miller, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, Perham, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Pile, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Schenck, Selye, Shaaks, Shellabarger, Stewart, Stone, Thomas, Upson, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburn, William Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—82.

So the joint resolution was passed.

During the vote,

Mr. HILL stated that Mr. MYERS was paired with Mr. RANDALL.

The reading of the vote was, by unanimous consent, dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DONNELLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ANN CORCORAN.

Mr. VAN AERNAM: I submit a report from a committee of conference.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the bill (S. No. 184) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Corcoran, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same.

H. VAN AERNAM,

G. F. MILLER,

Managers on the part of the House.

P. G. VAN WINKLE,

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS CROSSLEY:

The SPEAKER stated that the House resumed in the morning hour, which had just commenced, the consideration of Senate bill No. 426, for the relief of Thomas Crossley, reported yesterday from the Committee on Patents by Mr. MYERS.

The bill was read. It provides that Thomas Crossley have leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of the letters-patent issued to him for improvements in machines for printing woolen and other goods for the term of fourteen years from April 5, 1854, the letters-patent bearing date June 20 in that year, in the same manner as if the petition for such extension had been filed at least ninety days before the expiration of the patent, and that the Commissioner be authorized to consider and determine this application in the same manner as if it had been filed ninety days before the expiration of the patent.

Mr. JENCKES. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making an explanation. It is simply to enable the petitioner to make a correction as to a date. It gives him no rights. It makes no grant. It does not control the action of the Patent Office or any person employed there. It permits him to file his petition now as if he had filed it at the time allowed by law. There was an accidental mistake.

I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JENCKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 861) relating to the Supreme Court of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 538) to extend the boundaries of the collection district of Philadelphia so as to include the whole consolidated city of Philadelphia;

An act (H. R. No. 598) to continue the Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 764) for the relief of certain exporters of rum; and

An act (H. R. No. 176) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for carrying the mails from the United States to foreign ports, and for other purposes," approved March 25, 1864.

ANDREW S. CORE.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, the bill (S. No. 522) to authorize the Commissioner of the Revenue to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Core was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ABELARD GUTHRIE.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business, to whom was referred the memorial of Abelard Guthrie, praying to be allowed mileage and per diem as Delegate from the Territory of Nebraska to the Thirty-Second Congress, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

That the memorialist, on the 17th day of December, 1852, presented a memorial to the House of Representatives, asking to be admitted as a delegate from the Territory of Nebraska. The matter was referred by the House to their Committee of Elections. On the 3d of March, 1853, the Committee of Elections reported to the House that the memorialist was not entitled to admission as a Delegate, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the case; and the House unanimously so ordered.

It does not appear that the memorialist made any application to Congress for compensation until the 23d of February, 1854, when his memorial for that purpose was presented, and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the matter has been kept before the House in some form from that time to the present. The committee have not studied its history closely enough to be able to give the precise dates or order of its transfer from one committee to another, but it appears to have been before the Committees on the Judiciary, of Elections, on Appropriations, on Claims; and more than once before some of them.

The Committee of Elections, in 1856, and again in 1862, reported in favor of paying the memorialist five dollars per day, from the time of presenting his memorial to the close of that Congress, and his mileage, not exceeding $2,000.

All the other committees who have had the matter before them have reported adversely to the payment of any sum to the memorialist, or have been discharged from its consideration without reporting thereon.

This committee, having at last been intrusted with the investigation of this claim, consider that justice to the memorialist, as well as to the House, requires that it should be finally disposed of, and they have therefore endeavored, as far as possible, at this late day, to ascertain the facts upon which its merits rest.

Such election as was held was in the month of October, 1852. There was at that time no organized government in the Territory of Nebraska. What was called the territory of Nebraska embraced all the present States of Nebraska and Kansas, and a considerable amount of territory beside. What extent of settlement or number of people there were in that extensive region we have not had opportunity to investigate. Some part, and perhaps all the people there, desired to have a territorial government established, and it was deemed advisable by some of them that some one should be sent to represent their wishes and intents before Congress.

The memorialist stated before us that meetings were held in four places, and that about one hundred votes were cast in all. It should be stated, however, that when the Committee of Elections reported upon the memorialist's right to a seat, they stated that there was voting at but two places. What notice was given of these meetings that were held, or how extensive this notice was, or whether any other part of the people of that region had any opportunity to hold meetings and vote, did not appear. If any evidence was ever before Congress as to these meetings, or anything in the character of credentials to the memorialist, none can now be found. There were no election officers to call or hold elections, and such meetings as were held were mere voluntary and informal meetings of a few persons who had become resident in that new region.

It is not claimed now by the memorialist that he was legally entitled to a seat as a delegate, or that he is by any law entitled to compensation as such. He claims compensation upon the ground that he performed valuable public service in promoting the establishment of a territorial government for Nebraska. He also urges that claims of a character similar to his have been recognized and paid by order of Congress.

An act establishing a territorial government for Nebraska passed the House in February, 1853, but failed to pass the Senate.

The committee have no special evidence on the subject, but they do not doubt the memorialist used his best efforts and influence to promote the establishment of a territorial government. The history of that region since that time is of a public character, and need not be repeated. But we cannot regard the service of the memorialist as of such a public character, or as being for the benefit of the Government in any such sense as to entitle him to be paid therefor out of the public Treasury.

The precedents upon which the memorialist relies are the cases of Hugh N. Smith, of New Mexico, and A. W. Babbitt, of Utah, who claimed and asked to be admitted to seats as Delegates from those Territories respectively before any territorial organizations therein. They were denied seats, but were allowed their mileage and per diem.

It appears, however, that those gentlemen were chosen by conventions of delegates chosen from all parts of those Territories, so that in some sense they might be said to be representatives of the entire people of such unorganized districts. But in the case of the memorialist, he cannot be considered as the representative of any more than a few individuals, and the request upon which he came here is no better than if no meeting had been held, and he had come by the private and personal request of each of them.

But the committee are of opinion that the precedents themselves are mischievous in principle and ought not to be followed, even if the memorialist brought his case within them. He came here as the agent and representative of private wishes and interests; and though those wishes and interests were to be forwarded by procuring a law of the most public character, still his character and responsibility are not changed thereby. If Congress recognize the validity of that class of service, and the liability of the Government to pay therefor, there will be no limit to calls upon the public funds. In this or any similar case, two or half a dozen agents might be sent to operate upon Congress, and if their services were equally beneficial, they would all be equally entitled to be paid for their services out of the public Treasury.

The committee therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of said memorial, and recommend that the same be laid on the table.

Mr. POLAND. I am not able to state any further facts than are contained in the report.

The committee was accordingly discharged from the further consideration of the memorial, and the same was laid on the table.

VENTILATION OF THE HALL.

Mr. COVODE, by unanimous consent, made a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in relation to ventilation of the Hall of the House of Representatives; which was ordered to be printed, and recommended to the committee.

Subsequently Mr. COVODE entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was recommended.

PAYMENT OF WITNESSES.

Mr. COVODE also, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be paid as mileage and per diem to George H. Haupt and Lewis W. Leeds, witnesses before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, $124 each.

LEONIDAS SMITH.

Mr. KERR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1280) for the relief of Lieutenant Leonidas Smith, late of the twenty-second regiment Indiana volunteer infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JACOB BIGGS.

Mr. KERR also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1281) for the relief of Jacob Biggs; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills were referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANK IN NEW YORK.

Mr. POMEROY. I report back from the Committee on Banking and Currency a bill (H. R. No. 1035) authorizing the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York to change its location, with a recommendation that it do pass. Without reading the bill I will state that it simply authorizes this bank to change its location from New York city to Brooklyn. It was formerly located in Brooklyn, but at the time it formed itself into a national bank it changed its location to New York city. It now desires to go back to Brooklyn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POMEROY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAMES OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. POMEROY, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1282) authorizing certain banks named therein to change their names; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides for the change of the name of the City National Bank of New Orleans to the Germania National Bank of New Orleans, whenever the board of directors of said bank shall accept the new name by resolution of the board, and cause a copy of such resolution, duly authenticated, to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency; provided such acceptance shall be made within six months after the passage of this act.

Section two provides that all the debts, demands, liabilities, rights, privileges, and powers of the City National Bank of New Orleans shall devolve upon and inure to the Germania National Bank of New Orleans, whenever such change is effected.

Sections three and four contain similar enactments providing for the change of the names of the National Bank of Plattsburg to the Vila National Bank of Plattsburg.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is this a private bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair regards this as a private bill. On page 15 of the Digest will be found this language:

"It has been the practice in Parliament and also in Congress to consider as private such as are for the interest of individuals, public companies or corporations, a parish, city, county, or other locality."

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I would suggest that this bill, if I understand it, changes a public law.

The SPEAKER. That is very often done by private bills.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Would a bill in relation to the Pacific railroad changing the existing law be a private bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule upon that question when it comes up. There is a general pension law, but every special pension law passed by Congress changes that general law in regard to certain persons, and yet such bills are always held to be private bills.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Those are bills for the relief of private persons.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this is clearly a private bill, and the question is on ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It seems to me that this is a way of whipping the devil round the stump, by closing up the affairs of one bank and starting another without going through the process required by law at the present time; and if that is the case, I am against it.

Mr. POMEROY. I will state that the object of the bill is not to accomplish any such purpose. I am as strongly opposed to that as the gentleman is. Its object is simply this: The House all understand that at the original organization of these national banks the old original bank names had to be surrendered, and, as was the case in the celebrated Stickney family, whose children were all named: first Stickney, second Stickney, third Stickney, and so on, these banks were required to be named first national bank, second national bank, and so on; and all that is sought to be accomplished is simply to change the names of the banks to such names as the parties desire. This is now allowed, the original system adopted of requiring them to be known by numbers having been abandoned by the Treasury Department itself. In the organization of national banks for some time past the old system has been abandoned and they have been allowed to take such names as they desired. There is a particular reason why they desire to have the name of this bank in New Orleans changed to the "Germania National Bank." The bank stock and the bank have passed almost entirely into the hands of Germans, and they wish to make it in its character and in its direction such as to attract the confidence and support of the German citizens of New Orleans, and they are very anxious to have it known as the Germania National Bank. The reasons assigned were such that the Committee on Banking and Currency unanimously agreed to it, as they did also in the other case. In the other case the change proposed is simply to insert the name of the individual who is and has been at all times the ruling man of the bank in place of "second." That is all. It does not change the location of the bank; it does not change the securities nor the circulation nor the liabilities in any way or manner. I will ask the previous question on the bill.

Mr. MUNGEN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. POMEROY. Certainly.

Mr. MUNGEN. As I understand the original national banking law, or by the Treasury regulations, the banks were required to take the name of the locality and a number in numerical order. Now, it seems to me that there is something in a name. I think the security of United States stocks ought to give faith and assurance enough to the Germans of New Orleans or of any other place as to the redemption of the notes of a bank—their issue being based on Government bonds. You might call it the Hamburg bank or the Amsterdam bank or the Rotterdam bank or any other bank, but I do not think it would add to the credit or responsibility thereof. I like German names, as General Scott did; but I fail to see the necessity for this change of name. I apprehend it will involve some new and additional expense. I presume the next step will be to return the old issue and have a new issue printed with the new name on it. I think it is only an additional expense, without any corresponding benefit. I see no particular objection to it, neither do I see any particular necessity for it.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not know that there is any public necessity requiring this to be done. But it is only giving to these banks the same right in adopting names that half of the other banks have had. In pursuance of regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, and not according to law, banks at first were required to adopt numerical designations, but afterwards that was not required. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POMEROY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. PRICE. I ask consent to report back, with an amendment, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, Senate bill No. 450, relative to filing reports of railroad companies.

The SPEAKER. This is a public bill, and will require unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read. The first section provides that the reports required to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the 1st day of July of each year, by the corporations created by or entitled to subsidies under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and the acts supplemental to and amendatory thereof, shall hereafter be made to the Secretary of the Interior on or before the 1st day of October of each year, the reports to furnish full and specific information upon the several points mentioned in the twentieth section of the act of 1862, and shall be verified as therein prescribed, and on failure to make the same as herein required, the issue of bonds or patents to the company in default shall be suspended until the requirements of this act shall be complied with by such company; and the reports hitherto made to the Secretary of the Treasury under that act shall be transferred and delivered by him to the Secretary of the Interior, to be filed by him.

The second section provides that the corporations created by the provisions of the acts of Congress approved July 2, 1864, and July 27, 1866, and known as the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, shall make reports to the Secretary of the Interior on or before the 1st of October of each year, as are required to be made by the Union Pacific railroad and branches, under the provisions of the first section of this act, and on failure so to do shall be subject to the like suspension.

The third section provides that the reports required from the commissioners appointed to examine and report in relation to the road of any of the corporations whereto reference is made in this act, shall be addressed to and filed in the Department of the Interior; and so much of any and all acts as requires any reports from such companies, or any officers thereof, to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby repealed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I understand that this is merely a proposition to change the method of making reports on the part of these companies. Under existing laws some are to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury and some to the Secretary of the Interior. This bill simply requires that all the reports shall be made to the Secretary of the Interior. I think that is very proper, and therefore will make no objection to it.

The amendment reported from the committee was to add to the bill the following:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That in addition to the eight subjects referred to in section twenty of the act of July, 1862, to be reported upon, there shall also be furnished annually to the Secretary of the Interior all reports of engineers, superintendents, or other officers who make annual reports to any of said railroad companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—M'KEE VS. YOUNG.

Mr. COOK. I now call up the contested-election case of McKee vs. Young, in relation to the ninth congressional district of Kentucky.

The resolution, reported by the majority of the Committee on Elections were read as follows:

Resolved, That J. D. Young was not legally elected a member of the House of Representatives of the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky.

Resolved, That Samuel McKee was duly elected a member of the House of Representatives in the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of the State of Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. There was another resolution reported from the Committee of Elections some time before those just read. I ask that it also be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John D. Young, having voluntarily given aid, countenance, counsel, and encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States, is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky, or to hold a seat therein as such Representative.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, if I can get the attention of the House for a short time, I think I can make clear the reasons for the adoption of the resolutions just reported.

On the 9th of July, 1867, the Committee of Elections made their first report in relation to the Kentucky election cases, which report was adopted by the House. In that report the committee say:

"The committee are of opinion that no person who has been engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, or who has given aid and comfort to its enemies during the late rebellion, ought to be permitted to be sworn as a member of this House, and that any specific and apparently well-grounded charge of personal disloyalty made against a person claiming a seat as a member of this House ought to be investigated and reported upon before such person is permitted to take the seat; but all charges touching the disloyalty of a constituency in a State in which loyal civil government was not overthrown during the late rebellion, or the illegality of an election, are matters which pertain to a contest in the ordinary way, and should not prevent a person holding a regular certificate from taking his seat."

After that report was made, the House directed the Committee of Elections to inquire during the coming vacation of Congress whether certain named gentlemen claiming seats in this House as Representatives from the State of Kentucky had been guilty of such acts of personal disloyalty as disqualify them from holding seats on this floor as Representatives from Kentucky.

After that investigation in Kentucky, the Committee of Elections made a report December 3, 1867, which reported their conclusions as follows, referring to the first-named report:

"The committee adhere to the views expressed in that report, that no man who has been engaged in an attempt to overthrow the Government and subvert the Constitution by force of arms, or who has voluntarily given aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons so engaged, ought to be admitted to a seat in this House to make laws for the nation he has traitorously sought to destroy, and it is apparent that there must be power in this House to prevent this, the House being the judge of the qualifications of its members, of which fidelity to the Constitution is one, and that this end can only be certainly accomplished by the investigation of any specific and apparently well-grounded charge of personal disloyalty made against a person claiming a seat as a member of this House, before such person is permitted to take the seat."

In the same report the committee said:

"Whenever it is shown by proof that the claimant has, by act or speech, given aid or countenance to the rebellion he should not be permitted to take the oath, and such acts or speech need not be such as to constitute treason technically, but must have been so overt and public, and must have been done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion."

In this report the principle is announced that any one who has given aid or comfort to the rebellion shall not be permitted to take the oath.

Now, sir, the Committee of Elections believe that the evidence shows Mr. Young, one of the claimants to this seat, from the State of Kentucky, comes fairly within the rule laid down by the committee in this report to which I have referred. The evidence shows both by speech and act he has given aid and countenance to the rebellion, and that such speeches and acts in their nature tended to give countenance to the rebellion, and must have been so designed. And the proof on this point I will first call to the attention of the House; and from that proof the House will become satisfied, as the committee has already become satisfied, that John D. Young is not entitled to a seat as Representative from Kentucky, unless, indeed, the House is prepared to reverse the decision of the House in sustaining the previous reports of the committee.

This proof I will proceed to lay before the House. Now, first as to the charges of personal disloyalty against John D. Young. The committee say in their report if the claimant to the seat has by act or speech given aid and countenance to the rebellion he is not entitled to a seat in this House. The proof is that John D. Young did repeatedly give aid and countenance to the rebellion by speech and act. His position was a prominent one. He was the leader of public opinion. His opinion guided that of the community where he resided in reference to public affairs. His opinion was in favor of the rebellion, and its expression was designed manifestly to give aid and countenance to the rebellion. He was county judge before and during the rebellion. It was impossible, then, that such a man, occupying such a position, declaring himself openly for the rebellion, against the Union and national Government, and in favor of the pretended confederacy, could be considered in any other light than as giving aid and countenance to the rebellion.

First, I will refer to the proof of what were his declarations. Mr. Sharp testifies:

"In an interview with him [Young] he took the ground that the war was not a rebellion, but a revolution. I recollect distinctly asking him if he thought the South had just cause for the revolution. He said he thought it had. I laid his case before General Boyle, and was ordered by him to send Mr. Young to camp Chase."

On page 59, Mis. Doc. 47, G. W. Parsons testifies:

"In the year 1861, one day Mr. Young stayed for dinner," &c. "I was there." "After dinner Mr. Gill, Mr. Young, and myself got into conversation on the subject of the war. It was after Mr. Lincoln had called for seventy-five thousand men, and that was the subject of the discussion. Mr. Young took position against the action of the President, and remarked, among other things, that Mr. Lincoln ought to be impeached and hung as high as Haman. I asked him what ought to be done with Jefferson Davis, and he said 'nothing'; that Mr. Davis had violated no constitutional obligation."

On page 58, Mis. Doc. 47, Spotswood Deadman (colored) testifies:

"He [Young] always talked in favor of the rebellion."

On page 57, same book of testimony, John Miller testifies:

"All took him to be a rebel. He was a rebel. I heard Josh Ewing talking to him one day and saying that he could take his [Ewing's] sons into the rebel army, but could not go himself. That was on the street in Owingsville."

And this is confirmed on page 65, same book, by W. H. T. Moss, who testifies:

"Mr. Joshua Ewing and Mr. Young and a crowd were chatting in the street one morning, and I heard Mr. Young remark to Mr. Ewing, 'I expect to have a company in South Carolina to fight the Yankees, and I expect to take your boys with me.' Ewing replied, 'Perhaps you will. If you do not like this country you had better leave.'"

On page 72, same book, James Hall testifies:

"He [Young] was in favor of the South gaining its independence. I heard him speak of it frequently on the street in Owingsville."

These declarations are repeated by a man holding the office of county judge of that county. They were accompanied by acts to which I desire, very briefly and as succinctly as I can, to call the attention of the House.

It is in proof that at different times, Mr. Young gave food to bands of rebels who were organized in the commencement of the war in the vicinity of his residence. On page 58, said Mis. Doc. 47, Spotswood Deadman (colored) testifies:

"When the rebels were passing through Owingsville, where I was then living, and where Mr. Young lived, he took a very active part in feeding them and conveying provisions to them." "When rebels were passing through he would take them to his house and feed them." "At this time nobody was forced to feed them unless he chose. It was voluntary." "Sometimes he would go out and meet them, and he would welcome them to town."

POINTS OUT A UNION SOLDIER.

But Union soldiers were not favorites with those who were in favor of "the South gaining its independence."

Another fact to which I wish to call attention is the charge which is made against Mr. Young, and which the committee believe is sustained by the proof, that at one time when a squad of rebel cavalry came into the town of Owingsville, where Young resided, they were met by Young, who, after a very pleasant interview, in which there seemed to be an entire concurrence of opinion between the rebels and Young, the latter said to the commanding officer that in such a house was a Yankee soldier, and suggested that they should go for him. Thereupon the party of men went to the house and captured the Union soldier who was there found. I ask the attention of the House to the evidence upon that point.

Greenup Nickell, on pages 16 and 17 Miscellaneous Document No. 13, above named, testifies as follows:

"By SAMUEL MCKEE:

"Question. State where you reside, your age, and what position you occupied during, in 1863, the late rebellion."

"Answer. I reside in Centre county; I am forty years old; I was a captain, company A, fifty-fourth Kentucky mounted infantry, Federal Army; went into the Army in 1864, in the fall season."

"Question. Please state if you have any knowledge of any disloyal act or acts committed during the rebellion by Judge John D. Young, now claiming a seat in the Fortieth Congress from the ninth Kentucky district—anything in aid or encouragement of the rebellion, or those who were in arms against the Government of the United States."

"Answer. In the spring of 1863, I was on my way from Mount Sterling, Kentucky, home. After passing Owingsville, between Owingsville and State Bridge, I was met by a squad of confederate soldiers, as they called themselves, in number from fifteen to twenty; as near as I remember; they told me they were going into Owingsville and did not allow anybody to go out until they got ready, and that I must go back with them, which I did. After they rode into the town there was a pretty general rushing of the town people, who came up or out to see them. Among others who came, there was a certain gentleman who came down toward where I was, and up to the men who had me in charge, and close by where I was standing; he was pointing his finger in the direction of a certain house, and named the house, but I don't now remember the name of said house, and told the men that in that house there was a 'Yankee soldier,' and to go for him, which the rebel soldiers did. A part of the lot went to the house, and some who remained near me turned toward the gentleman, whom I did not know, and spoke to him and said 'How are you, Judge Young?' This same man whom they called Judge Young, and a part of the rebel soldiers, turned away from me and engaged in conversation, in rather a lower tone of voice than at first; I did not hear what was then said, but in a very short time a part of the same men went off and in a few minutes returned with some horses, upon one of which they mounted the prisoner they had taken, and soon after moved off. Before they returned with the horses, the man whom they called Judge Young went off, and I did not then again see him any more.

"Question. Have you seen him since? And if so, state the circumstances."

"Answer. I don't know whether I have ever seen him since or not, but at February court, just previous to the May election last, I was in court, in the court-house at Moorehead, and while the court was going on I heard some one speak out, 'How are you, Judge Young?' I was at once reminded of the same expression I had heard at Owingsville, and turned to see who it was. Tom Hayes, who had been a captain in the rebel army, was standing near, and I took him to be the man, from the voice, who then addressed the man he called Judge Young. I was not acquainted myself with Judge Young, but when I saw him there in the court-house at Moorehead, I took him to be the same I had seen at Owingsville, and believe that he was the same man. These are the only two times I have seen Judge Young, if this was him."

"Question. Please describe the man whom you saw, and whom they called Judge Young."

"Answer. As near as I recollect, he seemed to be about a common man in height and size. He was a good-looking man, as I thought; had very dark hair, dark whiskers, and a very keen black eye; thought about as keen an eye as I had ever seen."

"Question. Were you a soldier or citizen when captured near Owingsville in 1863?"

"Answer. I was a citizen, dressed in citizen's clothes, and had nothing to do with the Army at that time."

"Question. Did the rebel soldiers capture the Yankee soldier from the house to which Young pointed?"

"Answer. They captured the soldier, brought him out, and took him off with them; released me, and told me I could go where I pleased."

"Cross examined:

"Question. Please state who was in command of the rebel squad that captured you near Owingsville, Kentucky, in the spring of 1863; and state what time of year it was."

"Answer. I did not know any of the squad of rebels that captured me in 1863. I was captured in the spring, I think, the last of February, or the first of March."

"Question. Please state whether you were acquainted with any of the citizens of Owingsville when you were taken there; and if so, who were they?"

"Answer. When I was taken back to Owingsville, I did not recognize anybody that I knew living there. I recognized Jo. Wells, who resided in the neighborhood; he was with me when I was arrested and went with me to Owingsville."

"Question. Did you hear J. D. Young use any disloyal language; and if so, what was it?"

"Answer. A man whom the soldiers called Judge Young came to them and pointed to a house, and told said soldiers that there was a Federal soldier there, and to go for him, which they did; this is all the language I heard the man called Judge Young use. The soldiers that arrested me professed to belong to Colonel Clarke's command."

"Question. State the height, age, weight, &c., of the man that was called Judge Young by said squad of soldiers."

The evidence, in my opinion, fully identifies this Judge Young named by the parties as the person who pointed out where this Federal soldier could be found and captured.

One witness, J. W. Moore, an ex-member of the rebel Congress, was introduced by Mr. Young, and testified before the committee, and the attempt was made to prove by him that Captain Greenup Nickell was not entitled to belief on oath.

This ex-rebel congressman testifies that he had been in Kentucky but one day since, in 1861; that he knew two men by name of Greenup Nickell, of Morgan county, one sixty, and the other "perhaps thirty years of age," and that "the younger was of a bad character,"

The testimony shows the witness, Captain Nickell, to be Greenup Nickell, of Carter county, and forty years of age; so that there is nothing conflicting in the testimony of this ex-rebel congressman and this Federal captain.

The contestee, Mr. Young, is fully identified in the testimony as the same person alluded to by the witness Greenup Nickell. That witness (p. 17, Mis. Doc. No. 13) testifies:

"Question. Have you seen him since, and if so, state the circumstances?"

"Answer. I don't know whether I have ever seen him or not; but at February court, just previous to the May election last, I was in court in the courthouse at Moorehead, and while the court was going on I heard someone speak out, 'How are you, Judge Young?' I was at once reminded of the same expression I had heard at Owingsville, and turned to see who it was. Tom Hayes, who had been a captain in the rebel army, was standing near, and I took him to be the man, from the voice, who then addressed the man he called Judge Young. I was not acquainted myself with Judge Young, but when I saw him there in the courthouse at Moorehead, I took him to be the same I had seen at Owingsville, and believe that he was the same man. These are the only two times I have seen Judge Young, if this was him."

On page 40, same book of testimony, another witness testifies:

"There has not lived any other man called Judge Young in this county, except John D. Young, the party to this contest," &c.

On page 45, same book, another witness testifies:

"John D. Young is the only man by the name of Young in this county who has been a judge. He was judge of the Bath county court."

The testimony of Dr. John H. Williams, on page 31, Mis. Doc. No. 13, proves that Mr. Young gave "aid and comfort" to the enemies of the Government by associating with rebel soldiers. He testifies:

"I have been acquainted with John D. Young some ten or fifteen years, and do state that during the rebellion I saw John D. Young on Beaver creek and at Thomas Greenwald's, who confessed to be a captain in the rebel army; and I saw Mr. Young pass in toward Blackwater, where I was informed that there was a rebel camp on Blackwater; and I was told by the rebel soldiers that John D. Young was engaged in recruiting soldiers for the rebel army; and I never heard any person dispute his being a sympathizer with the rebels until he became a candidate for Congress. And I further state that I saw him in company with rebel soldiers that claimed to belong to Peter Everett, and were with him in his last raid in Kentucky, and, so far as I could judge, John D. Young seemed to be agreeably situated when with those soldiers; and I was informed by the rebel soldiers that John D. Young was an officer in their army; this I was told by Jacob Edwards and two of the Sexton boys, who were in the rebel army; and I saw Mr. Young passing some two or three times, and I think oftener."

There is one other point in this evidence to which I ask the attention of the House, and I will pass from it.

In 1861 there was a gathering of rebels at Prestonburg, Kentucky. They gathered there at a rendezvous for the purpose of organizing a regiment for the rebel service. While they were there gathered John D. Young was at that place. It is alleged by him, and there is proof tending to show it, that he went there for the purpose of dissuading a brother-in-law, I believe, from joining the rebel regiment. But it is in proof that when he went there, understanding fully the design of that gathering, and that a rebel regiment was to be formed, he took with him a minie rifle. It is in proof that arms were very scarce among the rebels at that point. It is further in proof that when Young left Prestonburg he said to one of the sons of Joshua Ewing, who was a Union man, whose son Young had threatened to have with him in South Carolina to fight the Yankees, who was then there for the purpose of joining that rebel organization, and who did join it, "There is a good gun; take care of it;" that Ewing took the gun, carried it with him into the rebel army, and when he left the rebel service gave it to his cousin, who continued in the army. He never was asked for the gun by Young; he never was called to account for it at all. The gun passed from Young to Ewing, a rebel soldier, manifestly with the intent of supplying what was then the greatest need of the rebel soldiers gathered there, arms to fight against the Government.

Mr. BECK. I know the gentleman does not desire to misstate the testimony.

Mr. COOK. Certainly not.

Mr. BECK. I know you do not. You will find by the testimony that it is not shown that Judge Young carried that gun there at all; and it is expressly proved by young Ewing himself that he was not in the rebel army, did not go into the rebel army then, and did not join it for more than a year afterward.

Mr. KERR. In the September following.

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; in the September following. I know the gentleman does not wish to misrepresent anything.

Mr. COOK. I will read the testimony exactly.

Mr. BECK. You will find that he was not in the rebel army, and did not join it for some time after.

Mr. COOK. I read the proof precisely as it is reported by the committee.

"Henry H. Ewing sworn and examined.

"To Mr. McKee:

"I live in Owingsville, Kentucky. I am acquainted with Mr. Young. I do not know anything about his disloyalty. I believe he was a southern sympathizer. He was at Prestonburg when there were a parcel of men there collected to be organized into the confederate service. They were not organized at the time. I have no knowledge of Mr. Young having been a candidate for an office in that organization. I do not know that he had a gun there. He showed me a gun standing in the porch of the House where he was staying, and asked me to take care of it. He said, 'There is a good gun; take care of it.' He never spoke to me about going into the rebel army."

"To Mr. Kinkead:

"I am a son of Mr. Joshua Ewing. I and my two brothers were in the confederate army. Mr. Young had nothing to do with inducing me to join the confederate army. I understood at the time that Mr. Young was at Prestonburg that his object was to get his brother-in-law to go home."

"To Mr. Scofield:

"I took care of the gun for three or four weeks, and then, when I was coming home, I gave it to a cousin of mine in the army, and I think he sold it. I afterward went back to the army, and stayed till the surrender. The gun was a minie rifle. I do not know why Mr. Young brought it there. He never inquired of me what became of it. I never told him."

"To Mr. Kerr:

"I do not know whether Mr. Young knew I was going into the rebel army."

"To Mr. McKee:

"Guns were scarce there at the time. There were no guns there of any consequence."

"To Mr. Cook:

"It was understood for what purpose the men were there in camp; that they were preparing to go into the southern army."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President, by Mr. Moore, his Private Secretary, informing the House that the President had returned, with objections thereto, the bill (H. R. No. 1059) to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress.

Mr. COOK resumed the floor.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Before the gentleman proceeds I ask him to yield to let the veto message from the President on the Arkansas bill be presented.

Mr. COOK. I yield for that purpose.

ADMISSION OF ARKANSAS TO REPRESENTATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the President of the United States returning to this House, in which it originated, a bill with his objections.

The Clerk read the message, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my signature a bill entitled "An act to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress."

The approval of this bill would be an admission on the part of the Executive that the act for the more efficient government of the rebel States, passed March 2, 1867, and the act supplementary thereto, were proper and constitutional. My opinion, however, in reference to these measures has undergone no change, but, on the contrary, has been strengthened by the results which have attended their execution.

Even were this not the case, I could not consent to a bill which is based upon the assumption either that by an act of rebellion of a portion of its people the State of Arkansas seceded from the Union, or that Congress may, at its pleasure, expel or exclude a State from the Union, or interrupt its relations with the Government by arbitrarily depriving it of representation in the Senate and House of Representatives. If Arkansas is a State not in the Union, this bill does not admit it as a State into the Union. If, on the other hand, Arkansas is a State in the Union, no legislation is necessary to declare it entitled "to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union." The Constitution already declares that "each State shall have at least one Representative;" "that the Senate shall be composed of two Senators from each State;" and "that no State without its consent shall be deprived of its suffrage in the Senate."

That instrument also makes each House "the judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members;" and therefore all that is now necessary to restore Arkansas in all its constitutional relations to the Government is the decision by each House upon the eligibility of those who, presenting their credentials, claim seats in the respective Houses of Congress. This is the plain and simple plan of the Constitution; and believing that had it been pursued when Congress assembled in the month of December, 1865, the restoration of the States would long since have been completed, I once again recommend that it be adopted by each House in preference to legislation which I respectfully submit is not only of at least doubtful constitutionality, and therefore unwise and dangerous as a precedent, but is unnecessary, not so effective in its operation as the mode prescribed by the Constitution, involves the additional delay, and from its terms may be taken rather as applicable to a Territory about to be admitted as one of the United States than to a State which has occupied a place in the Union for upward of a quarter of a century.

The bill declares the State of Arkansas entitled and admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union upon the following fundamental condition:

"That the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall be duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all the inhabitants of said State: Provided, That any alteration of said constitution, prospective in its effect, may be made in regard to the time and place of residence of voters."

I have been unable to find in the Constitution of the United States any warrant for the exercise of the authority thus claimed by Congress. In assuming the power to impose a "fundamental condition" upon a State which has been duly admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatever, Congress asserts a right to enter a State as it may a Territory, and to regulate the highest prerogative of a free people—the elective franchise. This question is reserved by the Constitution to the States themselves, and to concede to Congress the power to regulate this subject would be to reverse the fundamental principle of the Republic, and to place in the hands of the Federal Government (which is the creature of the States) the sovereignty which justly belongs to the States or the people, to the true source of all political power by whom our Federal system was created, and to whose will all is subordinate.

The bill fails to provide in what manner the State of Arkansas is to signify its acceptance of the "fundamental condition" which Congress endeavors to make unalterable and irrevocable. Nor does it prescribe the penalty to be imposed should the people of the State amend or change the particular portions of the constitution which it is one of the purposes of the bill to perpetuate, but leaves them in uncertainty and doubt as to the consequences of such action, when the circumstances under which this constitution has been brought to the attention of Congress are considered. It is not unreasonable to suppose that efforts will be made to modify its provisions, and especially those in respect to which this measure prohibits any alteration. It is seriously questioned whether the constitution has been ratified by a majority of the persons who, under the act of March 2, 1867, and the acts supplementary thereto, were entitled to registration and to vote upon that issue. Section ten of the schedule provides that—

"No person disqualified from voting or registering under this constitution shall vote for candidates for any office, nor shall be permitted to vote for the ratification or rejection of the constitution at the polls herein authorized."

Assumed to be in force before its adoption, in disregard of the law of Congress, the constitution undertakes to impose upon the elector other and further conditions. The fifth section of the eighth article provides that "all persons, before registering or voting," must take and subscribe an oath which, among others, contains the following clause:

"That I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons, on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men."

It is well known that a very large portion of the electors in all the States, if not a large majority of all of them, do not believe in or accept the political equality of Indians, Mongolians, or negroes with the race to which they belong. If the voters of many of the States of the North and West were required to take such an oath as a test of their qualification, there is reason to believe that a majority of them would remain from the polls rather than comply with its degrading conditions.

How far and to what extent this test-oath prevented the registration of those who were qualified under the laws of Congress, it is not possible to know; but that such was its effect, at least sufficient to overcome them all and give a doubtful majority in favor of this constitution, there can be no reasonable doubt.

Should the people of Arkansas, therefore, desiring to regulate the elective franchise so as to make it conform to the constitutions of a large proportion of the States of the North and West, modify the provisions referred to in the "fundamental condition," what is to be the consequence? Is it intended that a denial of representation shall follow? And if so, may we not dread, at some future day, a recurrence of the troubles which have so long agitated the country? Would it not be the part of wisdom to take for our guide the Federal Constitution, rather than resort to measures which, looking only to the present, may in a few years renew, in an aggravated form, the strife and bitterness caused by legislation which has proved to be ill-timed and unfortunate?

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, June 20, 1868.

The SPEAKER. The question under the Constitution is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to the passage of this bill?

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I move the previous question on that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is not the privileged question which has been up, the contested-election case, the matter now in order, and can we not insist on going on with that question?

The SPEAKER. As the Constitution is higher in authority with the House than the rules, this question is higher in authority than the question which the House has been considering—the contested-election case.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not remember that part of the Constitution, sir.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will read the Constitution and the rules of the House together he will find that the Chair is correct.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. It would be very well for the gentleman to begin and read it through.

The SPEAKER. The rule can be found on page 188 of the Digest.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I object to its being read. Let the gentleman read it himself.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged question under the Constitution, which is higher in authority than the rules of the House.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Constitution requires that this question shall be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 31, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Banks, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Buckland, Butler, Calk, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Delano, Donnelly, Briggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Ela, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Griswold, Harding, Hawkins, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Loan, Logan, Loughbridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercier, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Peters, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Pomroy, Price, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and the Speaker—111.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Axtell, Beck, Boyer, Brooks, Cary, Eldridge, Fox, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Holman, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, McCormick, Morrissey, Mungen, Niblack, Pruyn, Robinson, Sitgreaves, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, and Woodward—31.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Barnum, Bronwell, Broomall, Burr, Chandler, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Finney, Gravely, Halsey, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Kelley, Kitchen, Koontz, Laffin, William Lawrence, Marshall, McCullough, Miller, Myers, Nicholson, Nunn, Orth, Perham, Phelps, Randall, Raun, Ross, Selye, Stone, Thomas, Van Anken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Thomas Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—48.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. GETZ. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. RANDALL, is paired with my colleagues, Mr. MYERS and Mr. STEPHEN F. WILSON.

Mr. KOONTZ. I desire to state that I am paired with Mr. McCULLOUGH, of Maryland, on this question. If I voted I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BENJAMIN. My colleague, Mr. VAN HORN of Missouri, is detained from the House by sickness. If he were present he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WARD. My colleague, Mr. VAN HORN of New York, is detained from the House, for what reason I cannot tell. If he were present I have no doubt he would vote aye.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BURR, is paired with my colleague Mr. HOPKINS. I think Mr. BURR would vote against this bill; and I think very likely my colleague, Mr. HOPKINS, would vote the other way.

Mr. RAUM. My colleague, Mr. MARSHALL, is absent by leave of the House. Before leaving I paired with him on this bill. He would be against the bill and I for it.

Mr. ROBINSON. My colleague, Mr. BARNES, is absent on leave. He would vote against this bill if he were here.

Mr. BOYER. My colleague, Mr. VAN AUKEN, is absent on leave. If he were present he would vote against this bill.

After the conclusion of the call of the roll, The SPEAKER said: On the question, "Will the House on reconsideration agree to the passage of an act to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress?" the yeas are 111, and the nays 31. Two thirds having voted in the affirmative, the bill has again passed the House, and will be transmitted, with the message of the President, to the Senate for their reconsideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is it in order now to move a reconsideration of the vote just passed?

The SPEAKER. It is not, according to the Digest.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I was put down by the Constitution, I do not want to be now put down by the Digest.

The SPEAKER. The rule, to be found on page 188 of the Digest, is as follows:

"A vote on the passage of a vetoed bill cannot be reconsidered."

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cook] is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment to make an explanation?

Mr. COOK. I cannot yield for any explanation.

COVINGTON AND OHIO RAILROAD.

Mr. POLSLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment to introduce a bill for reference?

Mr. COOK. Certainly.

Mr. POLSLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1282) relating to the Covington and Ohio railroad, and its establishment as a post route and military road of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. POLSLEY. I ask that the bill, with the accompanying memorial, be printed.

The motion to print was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—M'KEE VS. YOUNG.

The House then resumed the consideration of the contested-election case of McKee vs. Young, ninth congressional district of Kentucky; on which Mr. Cook was entitled to the floor.

Mr. COOK. I was in error in saying that the evidence shows that Mr. Young himself took this gun to the rebel rendezvous; but the evidence is that the gun was there; that there Young assumed to control it; that he pointed it out to Ewing; told him it was a good gun, and that he must take care of it; that Ewing took the gun with him into the rebel army, and was never asked for it afterward; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] was in error in saying that there was no proof that Ewing was in the rebel army. He stated himself:

"I and my two brothers were in the confederate army. I took care of the gun for three or four weeks, and then, when I was coming home, I gave it to a cousin of mine in the army, and I think he sold it. I afterward went back to the army and stayed till the surrender."

Now, sir, the proof is that at this encampment where men were being enlisted for the rebel army there was a minie rifle over which Mr. Young exercised control. Mr. Ewing took charge of the gun; he took it and kept it. Under all these circumstances it is perfectly apparent that this gun was furnished by Mr. Young for the rebellion to supply a need in the rebel camp for offensive weapons.

I pass now to refer to the pointing out to a squad of rebel cavalry where a Union soldier might be captured. The only question that can be raised is as to the identity of the man who pointed out the house where a Union soldier was to the rebel squad. The witness testifies that when they came into the town of Owingsville, the place of Judge Young's residence, this man met them there. The witness says that he pointed out the house where the Union soldier was, and he told the rebel soldiers to go for him. Some time afterward he was seen by the witness in court and recognized by him. The question of identity is the most material one on this point, and it being in the power of Judge Young when the committee was in Kentucky to present himself before this witness and ask whether he was the man or not, and not having done so, it seems to me that the proof is conclusive that it was Judge Young who pointed out this house where this Union soldier was captured.

I pass now from this point and this resolution. If the rule adopted by the House is not to be reversed, that any man who by act or speech gave aid and comfort to the rebellion, and under such circumstances as to show it was designed to give aid and encouragement to the rebellion, shall not be entitled to take a seat upon this floor, if that rule is not to be done away with and the decision, then I think it certain that this first resolution reported by the committee must be adopted.

I now come to the other resolutions. I am aware there may be honest difference of opinion as to the conclusions to which the committee have arrived. I will give briefly the reasons which induced the committee to come to the conclusion that Mr. McKee was entitled to the seat from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky. The official majority returned for Mr. Young was 1,479 votes. From the testimony I think it is clear that of these 625 votes were cast by men who had been soldiers in the rebel army. The condition of these soldiers at that time was this: the rebel armies had surrendered to the Union armies, and upon the condition that the company and regimental officers signed paroles for their men and the men were allowed to return to their homes, there to be unmolested by the United States authorities so long as they remained faithful to their paroles and obeyed the laws where they resided. This is a part of the public history of the country. These men, then, were in the condition of paroled prisoners of war. They were not included in the amnesty proclamation of the President. Prior to this election, on the 29th of May, 1865, the President of the United States issued an amnesty proclamation specially excepting from such amnesty, under the tenth exception, all men in the rebel army who had been citizens of States in which loyal State governments had not been overthrown. These men, then, were paroled prisoners of war, specially exempted from amnesty in the President's proclamation. They were like the rebel soldiers in the field, excepting the fact that they had been captured.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOK. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. The ground upon which the gentleman places himself is that these soldiers are paroled prisoners of war, and especially excepted from this amnesty.

Mr. COOK. I do not think that is quite a fair statement of it.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the way I understood it: that they were in the condition of paroled soldiers excepted from amnesty. If they had not been excepted from amnesty they would not be in the condition of paroled prisoners. Is that your position?

Mr. COOK. My position is this: that having been surrendered on parole they were in the condition of paroled prisoners of war; that their condition had not been changed by any amnesty proclamation.

Mr. ADAMS. That is what I want to come at. You say they were in the position of paroled prisoners of war because they had surrendered and gone home. Now, I desire to ask if there is any proof that any considerable portion of the men who are charged with being rebels were in the war at the close of it, or were included in the terms of surrender. On the contrary, is there not an absence of proof to show that they were in the war at its close and that they were under the terms of surrender?

Mr. COOK. The proof is that these men were soldiers in the rebel army. In relation to many of them the time is identified when they were such rebel soldiers, but in relation to many others it is not so identified by the proof. But if they were soldiers in the rebel army and residents of the State of Kentucky who had left the State for the purpose of joining the rebel army, they were either men who had been surrendered by the officers of the rebel army at the time the surrender was made, or there is no proof whatever that they had left the army and had changed their condition as rebel soldiers. If, indeed, they were citizens of Kentucky, and had left that State for the purpose of joining the rebel army, then I insist they came within the provisions of the act of Congress which declares that where men desert from the service of the United States, or go away so as to avoid the draft, they are considered as having waived their right of citizenship in the United States. In either event they were not entitled to vote at this election.

It seems to me absurd to say that men who were fighting to destroy this Government might be shot on the field of battle, might be made prisoners of war and confined in prison for the purpose of preventing their destroying the Government by force of arms, and yet that it is impossible to prevent their voting to accomplish the same object. I desire to submit this question fairly to the House. The proof in relation to the matter is that these men were at some time or other during the continuance of the war rebel soldiers.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not wish to be troublesome, but a question occurs to me here. The gentleman remarked—

Mr. COOK. I yield only for a question.

Mr. ADAMS. It is necessary to preface it in order that it should be understood. The gentleman stated that he could not see the difference, inasmuch as the war was over, in their condition now and when they were in the army except that they had been captured. I will ask the gentleman if he does not know that Congress, wherever it professes to have the right to regulate the question of suffrage, has not undertaken to deny to rebels the right to vote simply because they were rebels? Has it been the policy of Congress, in States where they have the control of this question, to deny to rebels the right to vote simply because they were rebels except such as were officers above a certain rank?

Mr. COOK. I understand it to have been the policy, first of the proclamation of the President, and then of the reconstruction acts of Congress, to prescribe who may vote in the organization or reconstruction of those State governments; that is, in the preliminary proceedings therefor.

Mr. ADAMS. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think the vote to establish or institute a form of government is just as important and as great an act of sovereignty as a people can perform; and if it does not require as full and as complete an amnesty, and as full and complete a removal of disabilities for the purpose of voting upon that subject, as for the purpose of voting for the government of a State reformed and reestablished?

Mr. COOK. I will answer that question by saying that I do not believe that a rebel soldier, captured or otherwise, whether paroled or not, ought to vote in the election of men who are to make laws for the nation in this House; and that if the rule which the House has adopted be right to refuse seats here to men who have been engaged in armed hostilities to this Government, it is right to reject the votes of men who have been endeavoring by force of arms to overthrow the Government. That is my view of the subject.

Now, it is proven that 625 men who voted for Mr. Young were rebel soldiers; and this proof embraces but a portion of the district. It is alleged by the contestant that it was impossible to take proof through the whole of the district in relation to rebel soldiers, because he could not get the officers before whom the notices were given, or any officers in some portions of the district, to take the proof. Eight hundred and eighty-three of the majority given for Mr. Young in this district was given in precincts where some one or more of the officers of the election had been a rebel soldier. I understand the law of Kentucky to be that rebel soldiers were disqualified from acting as judges of election in any manner. That is my understanding of the law. I will quote the law upon which I rely as sustaining this view. Before I do that, however, I wish to refer very briefly both to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and the decision of the supreme court of the State of Kentucky as to what the status of these rebel soldiers was who were not included in any act of amnesty, nor included in any law removing disabilities.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the celebrated prize cases, uses this language in relation to these men:

"They have cast off their allegiance and made war on their Government, and are none the less enemies because they are traitors."

The supreme court of the State of Kentucky, in the case of Blaine vs. Adams Express Company, which I hold in my hand, in speaking of Morgan's band—a band raised in Kentucky, commanded, as I understand, by an officer of the State of Kentucky, and in all respects standing on the same ground as men who had served in the rebel army—used this language:

"Public policy, and consequently the law, holds common carriers to a peculiar responsibility extremely stringent, admitting no excuse for the loss of goods except an act of God or of a public enemy which could not by any proper care or available form have been averted. No other human force than that of a public enemy will exonerate the carrier, because otherwise he might fraudulently muster or combine with a force to rob himself. The only question in the case is, was Morgan's band, in the technical sense, a public enemy, and the answer depends on whether the strife in which they were fighting is a civil war. War is either international or civil, foreign or domestic. Insurrection, however violent or formidable, is not war. Civil war is preceded by insurrection, which, however magnified and matured into war in its legitimate sense, and when so characterized, the parties are belligerents and respectively entitled to belligerent rights. And history records no civil war more flagrant or gigantic than that in which our country is now engaged. If this be not war what is war, and when or where did it ever race and desolate and destroy? It has been so treated at home and abroad by our own Government in all its Departments as well as by foreign Governments, and if it be war now it was as certainly war, and as much war, on the 11th of May, 1862."

Both by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and by the decision of the supreme court of Kentucky these men are held to be public enemies, and the question, it seems to me, presents itself whether men who have been enrolled in the armies of the public enemies of the United States are legal voters to select the law-makers of the Government, the officers of the Government, at a time when they have not in any manner received the benefit of any amnesty or any law removing disabilities? That is the simple question which I desire to present to the House.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. COOK. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask him if he is not aware that the Kentucky Legislature passed a law in the year 1865 granting an amnesty to all persons who joined in the rebellion?

Mr. COOK. No, sir; I am not. I am aware that they repealed the law which formerly existed on the statute-book.

Mr. JONES. They passed a law in 1865 that all persons who joined in the rebellion should be restored to their rights as citizens.

Well, then, I would ask the gentleman another question. The Constitution of the United States says that electors for Representatives in Congress shall have the same qualifications as electors for the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. That being the fact, had not the Legislature of Kentucky a right to grant that amnesty and to say who shall be voters?

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, if the laws of Kentucky provided that the whole confederate army which was in Kentucky, composed in considerable part of the residents of Kentucky, should have the right to vote in electing members of this House, I do not think that this House ought to recognize that right, and that the public enemies of the United States ought not to control the Government of the United States.

Mr. JONES. That may be the gentleman's opinion, but I ask him to look to the Constitution of the United States. The only provision in the Constitution in regard to the qualification of electors for Representatives in the Congress of the United States is that which I have referred to.

Mr. COOK. I cannot yield for an argument.

Mr. JONES. The States have a right to regulate suffrage, and no law of Congress has yet been passed in contravention of that.

Mr. COOK. It is contended that men who have been engaged in armed hostility to the United States, unless disqualified by the laws of Kentucky, have a right to vote in elections of members of this House. That is the proposition, and that proposition I deny. The same right to protect itself which authorized the Government to send troops into the State of Kentucky, not upon the call of her Governor, not upon the call of her Legislature, to subdue an armed rebellion against the United States by capturing and destroying the rebel armies upon the soil of Kentucky. The same right exists to prevent the destruction of the Government by the election of officers who shall control the Government for the same ends.

The Constitution provides, in the second section of the first article, that—

"The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States."

Now, my position is that a public enemy is no portion of the "people of the several States."

Mr. JONES. Read on a little further.

Mr. COOK, (reading:)

"And the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature."

Mr. JONES. Exactly.

Mr. COOK. It is incompetent for the Legislature of the State of Kentucky to make electors of men who are not people of the State of Kentucky; and if any persons are public enemies they are not people of Kentucky, not a part of the body-politic and public enemies at the same time.

Mr. JONES. Then I would ask the gentleman to show me any law of Congress which provides that these gentlemen shall not vote?

Mr. COOK. I decline to yield further. I will give the gentleman full opportunity to make his speech. I hold that armed enemies of the Government in Kentucky are not people of the State of Kentucky within the meaning of the Constitution. And these men are, by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and of the supreme court of the State of Kentucky, public enemies of the Government. I will now refer to the laws of the State of Kentucky, which I think disqualify these enemies of the Government from being judges of election. In Myers's Supplement, page 456, is the following:

An Act to amend section one, article three, chapter thirty-two, title "Elections," of the Revised Statutes.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That hereafter, so long as there are two distinct political parties in this Commonwealth, the sheriff, judges, and clerk of election, in all cases of election by the people under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and under the constitution and laws of Kentucky, shall be so selected and appointed as that one of the judges at each place of voting shall be of one political party, and the other judge of the other or opposing political party; and that a like difference shall exist at each place of voting between the sheriff and clerk of elections: Provided, That there be a sufficient number of the members of each political party resident in the several precincts as aforesaid to fill said offices. And this requirement shall be observed by all officers of this Commonwealth who have the power to appoint any of the aforesaid officers of election, under the penalty of a fine of $100 for each omission, to be recovered by presentment of the grand jury.

That act was passed February 11, 1858. On the 15th of March, 1862, the following act was passed:

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section one, article three, chapter thirty-two, title 'Elections,' of the Revised Statutes," approved February 11, 1858.

SEC. 1. That in construing the act approved February 11, 1858, to which this is an amendment, those who have engaged in the rebellion for the overthrow of the Government, or who have in any way aided, counseled, or advised the separation of Kentucky from the Federal Union by force of arms, or adhered to those engaged in the effort to separate her from the Federal Union by force of arms, shall not be deemed one of the political parties in this Commonwealth within the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment.

SEC. 2. This act to take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COOK. Not now.

Mr. JONES. I want to read an act passed by the Legislature in 1865.

Mr. COOK. I am familiar with that law, and the gentleman can read it when he comes to speak.

I understand that the law which I have just read provides that judges of election shall not be selected from those who were engaged in the rebellion for the overthrow of the Government, or who in any way aided, counseled, or advised the separation of Kentucky from the Union by force of arms, or adhered to those engaged in the effort to separate the State from the Federal Union by force of arms. That constitutes the disqualification.

And the rule has been well settled that where an officer of election is disqualified from holding the office, that election is invalid. The rule is different where the judge selected is competent to hold the office, but has not been qualified according to the forms of law. But if the judge or clerk or sheriff of the election is disqualified by the law from holding the office, it is precisely the same in principle as though the election was held without any officer whatever.

There are numerous authorities upon this question. It has been repeatedly settled in this House. I will refer to the authorities without reading them particularly. The first case is that of Eastman vs. Scott, in the first volume of Contested Election Cases, page 275, in which that rule was held. The same rule was held in another case, and the same rule was held during the present session in the case of Delano vs. Morgan, which has been decided and approved by the House. In the case of Bennett vs. Chapman, of Nebraska, this same rule was also held. I will now read from the Contested Election Cases, from 1834 to 1865, page 212, Bennett vs. Chapman:

"Persons assumed to act as judges of election and clerks were appointed without the requirements of law. This is quite sufficient of itself, according to well-settled principles repeatedly established by this House for the rejection of the entire poll at Archer. In the case of James Jackson vs. Anthony Wayne, of Georgia, first session of Second Congress, it was decided by this House that when the law regulating the election required that three magistrates should preside at the election, a return by three persons, two of whom were not magistrates, was defective. The right of suffrage, great and inestimable as it may be, is nevertheless a right regulated and qualified by law. Indeed, it can only be properly exercised in conformity to the requirements of law; without these it would soon cease to be valuable."

I hold, therefore, the law to be well settled that where persons acted as officers of election who were disqualified by the law from holding that office, the entire poll where such officers officiated should be rejected. Such a poll has no more authority than if it were held by officers who were non-residents or not citizens of the United States. It gives no validity to the election. But I will not discuss this question at any length at present.

Mr. BECK. I ask the gentleman how he answers the provisions of two statutes of Kentucky, which I ask permission to read, as they are short. First, the act of December 19, 1865, provides:

"That an act entitled 'An act to amend the fifteenth chapter of the revised statutes entitled 'Citizens, Expatriation, and Aliens,' passed March 11, 1862, be and the same is hereby repealed, and all persons who may have lost any constitutional, legal, or other right or privilege by the operation of said act shall be and are hereby restored to the full and free use and enjoyment of the same as completely as if such act had never been passed; and this act shall be a bar to any prosecution or indictment growing out of said act."

The other act, passed January 13, 1866, provides that the power to pardon persons who have committed treason is vested in the General Assembly, and that all persons who have at any time before committed treason against the Commonwealth shall be absolved from all pain and penalties.

Mr. COOK. I cannot yield further. I understand that repealed an act different from the one the gentleman has stated. It applied to the act I hold in my hand, an act in reference to the expatriation of citizens, and it does not refer to the act I have quoted. The act I quoted was the act of March, 1862, and is not the act repealed by the act quoted by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Now, if you reject the votes of men who had been in the rebel army, if you throw out the votes taken and certified by the men disqualified by the law of Kentucky from acting as officers of election, then Mr. McKee is entitled to a seat upon this floor by a majority of forty-one votes. The whole question as to the right of Mr. McKee to a seat, in my opinion, turns upon the decision of the two points:

First. Can a man be elected to a seat in this House by the votes of soldiers of the rebel army? and, second, can votes be counted which were taken and certified by men who were also rebel soldiers, who, by the laws of Kentucky, are disqualified from acting as officers of election? The decision of these questions by the House must determine the right of Mr. McKee to the seat claimed by him.

Mr. Speaker, before I sit down I move the following resolution, that the contestant may be heard in this case:

Resolved, That Samuel McKee, contestant in the case now being considered, be permitted to address the House.

Mr. UPSON. Under the rules of the House.

Mr. COOK. I accept that as a modification of my resolution.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, before I proceed to consider the last report which has been laid upon our tables from the Committee of Elections in this case, I desire briefly to reply to some positions assumed by my colleague on the committee, in his remarks this morning, because they seem to be somewhat disconnected from the other part of the subject.

It is said, in the first place, that Mr. Young, who received a majority of 1,479 votes in the race for election to Congress in this ninth district of Kentucky, is not a loyal man, and therefore ought not to be allowed to take the oath required by the act of 1862. In the minority report, which I had the honor, in the first instance, to submit to this House in reference to this case, I discussed this branch of the case at some length and examined in a spirit of fairness the evidence touching this point. I do not intend now to go over that evidence at any considerable length, for my time will not permit me to do it; but I do invite the attention of gentlemen to that report to the end that they may at least do themselves, if not me, the justice to be advised what the facts are touching this case, so that they can act and decide intelligently on the final vote. The report of the majority submitted on the 18th instant is strangely brief, meager, and unsatisfactory. It states conclusions, but gives no evidence.

It is first charged that he fed rebel soldiers. The proof on that point, Mr. Speaker, does show that on several occasions Judge Young did furnish provisions to men who were engaged in the rebel service. The testimony also shows, and in some instances from the mouths of the same witnesses, that some of the best Union men in the ninth congressional district did just the same thing; and that they did it under circumstances which divested the act of every element of criminality, of every particle of disloyalty; that they did it under circumstances under which every principle of law, of morality, and of humanity, justifies the doing of it, under circumstances under which you, Mr. Speaker, and I would have done it. Many times under circumstances of absolute compulsion. Many times under the influence of fear. Other times for the purpose of saving Union men from having their property taken from them by brute force.

I presume that the statement of Mr. Hall, with regard to the "basket of provisions," will not be taken by an intelligent jurist as evidence of anything except the mere fact that he may have seen a negro with a basket. He does not even know what was in the basket: the negro only told him. He does not say that it was intended for the rebels at Boyd's, or that he knows it ever reached them, and, what is more material than all, he neither says nor intimates that Young was at home at the time, or, if at home, that he knew a syllable about what the negro was doing with the basket, what he intended to do with it, what it contained, or anything about it. Whatever may have been the motive or intention of the transaction, it nowhere appears that Young had any knowledge of or connection with it whatever. And the same is true of the testimony of the negro man Spottswood Deadman, upon which the committee seem to have arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Young actually gave aid and comfort to the rebellion. The witness testifies as follows:

"Question. Where do you reside?
 "Answer. At Mount Sterling, Kentucky.
 "Question. What do you know of Mr. Young's loyalty during the war?
 "Answer. When the rebels were passing through Owingsville, where I was then living, and where Mr. Young lived, he took a very active part in feeding them and conveying provisions to them. He always talked in favor of rebellion, and when rebels were passing through he would take them to his house and feed them. He also swapped a horse with Colonel Morgan, who was in the rebel service.
 "Question. What do you know about Mr. Young feeding rebels?
 "Answer. I saw provisions going from his house, and saw him taking rebels to the house.
 "Question. Did not Union men give the rebels something to eat?
 "Answer. Of course they did. They were forced to do so.
 "Question. Is that the only aid you know of Mr. Young giving to the rebellion?
 "Answer. I believe it is.
 "Question. At the time you speak of, when Mr. Young sent provisions to the rebel camp, nobody was forced to feed them unless he chose?
 "Answer. No, sir.
 "Question. It was a voluntary act?
 "Answer. It was voluntary.
 "Question. There had been no force used on either side up to the time General Nelson came into the State?
 "Answer. No, sir.
 "Question. When was it that you speak of?
 "Answer. In 1861, at the commencement of the war. I saw Mr. Young's boy, Louis, carrying provisions to the camp, which was about two miles out."

Whether this witness is more intelligent than the general mass of negroes in Kentucky it is not necessary to inquire, but I would invite attention to the character of his statements, and let candid and impartial minds determine for themselves what weight they are entitled to. He says: "When the rebels were passing through Owingsville, where I was then living, and where Mr. Young lived, he took a very active part in feeding them, and in conveying provisions to them." But what does this "very active part" which Mr. Young took in feeding the rebels turn out to be! When carefully criticised, it seems, according to his own statements, that "in 1861, at the commencement of the war, he saw Mr. Young's boy, Louis, carrying provisions to the camp, which was about two miles out." How often? Let him answer himself:

"Question. About how often did you see food going out from Mr. Young's house to those camps or squads of rebels?
 "Answer. Two or three or four times."

The broad assertion which this witness makes with such avidity, that Mr. Young "took a very active part in feeding rebels and conveying provisions to them," seems to have been justified in his mind by having seen another person altogether, the "boy Louis," two or three or four times, "carrying provisions to the camp, which was about two miles out;" but does he show that Young had anything to do with it? Does he state the quantity or kind of provisions, or that Young ever knew of their being carried to the camp? Does he state how he knows that the provisions ever went to the camp at all, which was two miles out? But where is the "boy Louis?" He could have told whether Young sent him with the provisions, and surely his testimony was not omitted by the contestant on account of his color, race, or condition, and his industry in hunting up other witnesses justifies the conclusion that if he would have testified to anything to Mr. Young's prejudice Mr. McKee would have produced him. "He would take rebels to his house and feed them," says Deadman; yet how does he know whether they were fed or not? He may have seen rebels going to Young's house in company with Young, but does it necessarily follow that Young fed them or encouraged them in their enterprise in any way? He says that Young swapped horses with Colonel Morgan; yet Morgan himself swears that Young consented to or rather suggested this arrangement to save the horse of Mr. Barnes, one of his Union neighbors, less able to lose it, an act which should rather be applauded as one of neighborly kindness and generosity than paraded as an evidence of disloyalty and treason. Taking the whole of Deadman's testimony together, I am utterly unable to find that it furnishes anything like satisfactory evidence of an act or expression calculated or intended to forward the cause of the rebellion; and besides, it should be borne in mind, while considering the testimony of Hall and Deadman, that it is proved by John Trumbo and others that while the rebels were encamped at Boyd's, in 1861, they sent into town and compelled the citizens to send them food. It may be conceded that the boy Louis did take provisions out to the rebel camp two or three or four times in 1861; that rebels were seen in Young's company, and going to his house; yet I insist that there is not an iota of proof that Young even knew that the provisions were sent, or that he ever spoke a word of encouragement to the rebels; and surely it will not be said that a man whose integrity even his political enemies speak of as unimpeachable shall have a stigma cast upon his good name, be deprived of the position to which he has been fairly elected, and his constituents deprived of their right to be represented by the man of their choice, on such flimsy, unsatisfactory, and incoherent evidence as this.

Such is the case in reference to Judge Young's feeding rebel soldiers. He did sometimes take them to his house; he sometimes gave them food and lodgings; and the testimony shows in many cases he did these acts for the express purpose of protecting Union men in the town where he lived—his neighbors and fellow-citizens and friends—from being outraged by these men. Is that criminal? Will this House decide that the laws of humanity in times of public strife are suspended, and that men must act like brutes, like bitter personal enemies, like monsters of the forest, toward each other?

The next charge which the majority of the committee seem to have come to the conclusion "is made to appear by clear and satisfactory evidence" is, that Mr. Young pointed out a Union soldier to some rebels, who captured him and carried him off at Young's suggestion. The only witness who testified to this fact is Greenup Nickell, a worthless rascal and felon, who relates the circumstance as follows:

"In the spring of 1863 I was on my way from Mount Sterling, Kentucky, home. After passing Owingsville, between Owingsville and State Bridge, I was met by a squad of confederate soldiers, as they called themselves, in number from fifteen to twenty, as near as I can remember. They told me they were going into Owingsville, and did not allow anybody to go out until they got ready, and that I must go back with them, which I did. After they rode into the town there was a pretty general rushing of the town people, who came up or out to see them. Among others who came there was a certain gentleman came down toward where I was, and close by where I was standing; he was pointing his finger in the direction of a certain house, and named the house, but I don't now remember the name of said house, and told the men that in that house there was a 'Yankee soldier,' and to go for him, which the rebel soldiers did. A part of the lot went toward the house, and some who remained near me turned toward the gentleman, whom I did not know, and spoke to him and said: 'How do you, Judge Young?' This same man whom they called Judge Young, and a part of the rebel soldiers, turned away from me and engaged in conversation in rather a low tone of voice than at first. I did not hear what was then said, but in a very short time a part of the same men went off, and in a few minutes returned with some horses, upon one of which they mounted the prisoner they had taken, and soon after moved off. Before they returned with the horses the man whom they called Judge Young went off, and I did not then again see him any more."

Before proceeding to examine this statement it should be remarked that the testimony of this witness was taken under very singular circumstances. It seems, from an examination of the numerous notices served in this case, that Mr. Young was first notified that the deposition of Greenup Nickell would be taken in Carter county on the 4th of September. (See H. Doc. 13, pp. 88, 89.) Mr. Young attended, and the witness was not produced. Mr. McKee then gave notice that he would take the deposition of Nickell in Rowan county, on the 30th and 31st of October. Mr. Young's attorney was present to cross-examine, and again the witness was not produced. (H. Doc. 13, p. 75.) Mr. Young, on the 26th day of August, had notice served on Mr. McKee that he would take the deposition of Thomas W. Green in Maysville, Mason county, on the 14th and 15th days of November; and on the 2d day of November Mr. McKee again gave notice that he would take the deposition of this witness at Morgan county, on the 13th and 14th of that month, when it would be impossible, in the very nature of things, for Young to reach there from Maysville, or go from there to Maysville in time to take the depositions at the latter place. Had Nickell known Young personally there would, perhaps, have been nothing at all peculiar in the circumstance that his attendance could not be procured until Young was compelled to be absent, but it does become somewhat suspicious when taken in connection with the following statement in his testimony:

"Question. Have you seen him since? and if so, state the circumstances."

"Answer. I don't know whether I have ever seen him since or not, but at February court, just previous to the May election last, I was in court in the court-house at Moorehead, and while the court was going on I heard some one speak out, 'How are you, Judge Young?' I was at once reminded of the same expression I had heard at Owingsville, and turned to see who it was. Tom Hayes, who had been a captain in the rebel army, was standing near, and I took him to be the man, from the voice, who then addressed the man he called Judge Young. I was not acquainted myself with Judge Young, but when I saw him there in the court-house at Moorehead I took him to be the same I had seen at Owingsville, and believe that he was the same man. These are the only two times I have seen Judge Young, if this was him."

Could Young have been present and the witness been compelled to meet the question face to face, "Is this the man to whom you allude?" his answer might have exploded the whole testimony, just as Willis Hockaday's affidavit was when he was brought face to face with Young. But the statement of this witness does not seem to carry the air of truth upon its face. It has the limping, uncertain style of one who is conscious of swearing to a falsehood, who has a general idea of the outline of the lie he is to tell without having fixed up the minute details. He says, "After they rode into town there was a pretty general rushing of the town people, who came up or out to see them. Among others who came there was a certain gentleman came down toward where I was, and up to the men who had me in charge, and close by where I was standing; he was pointing his finger in the direction of a certain house, and named the house, but I don't now remember the name of said house," &c. This does not look like the simple, unvarnished language of truth. He carefully forgets the name of the certain house; cannot mention the names of any of the crowd who "came up or out;" and, besides, he is careful to place Jo. Wells, the only man he recognized at all, so far off as not to be able to see or hear the "certain gentlemen who came down toward where he was, and up to the men who had him in charge, and close by where he was standing." Superadded to those suspicious features, this witness is proved by Judge Moore, a lawyer of Washington city and former resident of Kentucky, who testifies to having known him well while he, Moore, was county judge in Kentucky, to be a man of notoriously bad character, and utterly unworthy of belief on oath; and besides all this, such conduct as the testimony of this witness would, by implication, attribute to Mr. Young is utterly inconsistent with his whole course during the war.

Why was not this man Nickell produced and examined by Mr. McKee when Judge Young or his attorney could be present? Why was the matter so managed by him that he could be sure of an ex parte examination of his witness? Is it an unjust conclusion to assume that he feared the result of a cross-examination or to have his facile witness confronted by his intended victim? If there had been a fair and proper examination of this scamp the result would have, no doubt, developed another such case as that of Willis Hockaday, in which another scandalous ex parte affidavit was tinkered up in the office of the contestant himself; but when the witness was called upon before your committee in Kentucky to testify in reference to the identity of the party, he took back every word he had said in that statement that was material to this case, and said that he did not know Judge Young at all. Why did not the contestant in this case, when your committee or the sub-committee was in Kentucky taking evidence in regard to the loyalty of Mr. Young, produce this man Nickell before us and examine him then, so that we could cross-examine him if Judge Young did not do it? He could have produced him then as well as before.

John Trumbo swears that Young "exerted himself to have him paroled when he was captured by Morgan's forces at Owingsville," when it was dangerous for him to make the journey for that purpose. That he also tried to procure the release of James Murray, and that he always manifested a willingness to assist in protecting the people of the town against outrages by confederate soldiers. (H. Doc., p. 80.) D. B. Lacy swears that Young was of service to him on one occasion when he was in danger from the rebels. (H. Doc., p. 81.) Joseph H. Richards testifies that he constantly interfered for the protection of Union men and all quiet citizens. (H. Doc., p. 82.) That he interfered to prevent the robbing of Mr. Brothers's store. Judge N. P. Reid, of the circuit court, A. J. Lee, James Murray, all of them Union men, near neighbors of Mr. Young during the war, testify substantially that he did everything in his power for the protection of Union men; and Colonel Morgan testifies to his exertions in behalf of Mr. Barnes. Even Mr. Sharp testifies that Mr. Young warned the messenger who had been sent to summon him to appear before the provost marshal of danger on account of the proximity of rebels, and advised him how he might avoid it. It is deemed unnecessary, however, to multiply citations from the evidence before the House, showing that Mr. Young's course throughout the war was that of a peaceable, law-abiding, good citizen, disposed to do everything in his power for the protection of all classes. I must, therefore, be pardoned for not believing that he could have, in this instance, so far departed from this course so universally known among his neighbors as to have been instrumental in the capture of a man whom nobody but Nickell ever heard of, and he even fails to name. Surely, if Young had taken the oath, and were on trial for having taken it falsely, no gentleman would hesitate as a juror to acquit him of perjury if the charge were sustained alone by the testimony of Nickell. Then why should he be deprived of his seat in Congress on that testimony, when the law declares that he shall forfeit it only on conviction of having falsely taken the oath, if, indeed, the oath applies to a member of Congress at all?

With regard to the gun at Prestonburg, the only evidence is that of Henry H. Ewing, which is as follows:

"To Mr. McKEE:

"I live in Owingsville, Kentucky. I am acquainted with Mr. Young. I do not know anything about his disloyalty. I believe he was a southern sympathizer. He was at Prestonburg when there were a parcel of men there collected to be organized into the confederate service. They were not organized at the time. I have no knowledge of Mr. Young having been a candidate for an office in that organization. I do not know that he had a gun there. He showed me a gun standing in the porch of the house where he was staying, and asked me to take care of it. He said, 'There is a good gun; take care of it.' He never spoke to me about going into the rebel army."

"To Mr. KINKADE:

"I am a son of Mr. Joshua Ewing. I and my two brothers were in the confederate army. Mr. Young had nothing to do with inducing me to join the confederate army. I understood, at the time that Mr. Young was at Prestonburg, that his object was to get his brother-in-law to go home."

"To Mr. SCOFFIELD:

"I took care of the gun for three or four weeks, and then, when I was coming home, I gave it to a cousin of mine in the army, and I think he sold it. I afterward went back to the army, and staid till the surrender. The gun was a minie rifle. I do not know why Mr. Young brought it there. He never inquired of me what became of it. I never told him."

"To Mr. KERR:

"I do not know whether Mr. Young knew I was going into the rebel army."

"To Mr. McKEE:

"Guns were scarce there at the time. There were no guns there of any consequence."

From this testimony the majority of the committee seem to have drawn the inference that Mr. Young had taken the gun to Prestonburg and given it to Henry Ewing, but to me it bears a very different interpretation. It does not show that Young owned or claimed the gun, or that he carried it there. It is true the author of the committee's report seems to lay much stress upon the witness's answer to a question by Mr. SCOFFIELD: "I do not know why Mr. Young brought it there;" but I submit that such is not a fair mode of dealing with the testimony. The witness had just testified that he did not know that Young had a gun there at all, and, of course, when his interrogator assumed that he had brought it there, and asked why he did so, the witness could only answer that he did not know, without desiring to be understood as saying that he had in fact done so. But treat this evidence fairly, candidly, and impartially, and it amounts simply to this and nothing more: Young had gone to Prestonburg, not to assist in the organization of rebel troops, but to persuade his brother-in-law to go home; that so far from assisting or encouraging the organization of rebel troops his influence was against it, as is clearly shown by the evidence of George M. Ewing, already quoted, who afterward opposed his election for county judge in 1865 on that account; that there was a gun sitting in the porch of the house where Young was staying. No one states who brought it there, or when it was brought there, and, as no one seemed to claim it, Young simply remarked to Ewing that there was a good gun, and suggested to him to take care of it. Young was not staying at the camp, as he probably would have done if he had gone there to participate in the organization of the rebel force. He never spoke to either Henry or George Ewing about going into the army, as he naturally would have done if he had favored their intentions, being his near neighbors as they were. He never inquired of Ewing about the gun afterward, as he would have been certain to have done had he given it to Ewing with a view of his taking it into the army, and afterward met him at home and found he had not joined the army as he had expected. Ewing does not swear that Young gave him the gun, or even pretended to have any claim to it, and the language used by him does not even imply as much. Had the gun been Young's, and had he intended to give it to Ewing, his language would not have been, "take care of it," but, "I make you a present of it," or, "I will give it to you," or, "you may have it," or some equivalent expression; while, if it was his in fact and he simply desired him "to take care of it," he would naturally have inquired about it afterward when Ewing returned home without going into the army. How, therefore, this testimony can possibly be tortured into evidence that Young owned the gun, that he carried it to Prestonburg, or that he gave it to Ewing, and all for the purpose of aiding the rebellion, is more than I can see. It is utterly inconsistent with the personal character of Judge Young, which was pure and spotless, and is sustained by no other testimony, and is negated by the established prudence, quiet bearing, and honorable official position of Mr. Young.

It is further alleged that Judge Young, when sent for by William S. Sharp, provost marshal of his county, who by his own testimony is proven to be one of those hypocritical, tyrannical, and detestable men, better denominated scoundrels and thieves, that too often disgraced the Federal service and brought true loyalty into contempt during the late war, he, the judge, took the ground that the war was not a rebellion but a revolution, and that the South had just cause for a revolution. This villain, Sharp, had been in the habit of summoning suspected persons, or such citizens as he did not like, and such as were able to pay such fees as he might demand of or extort from them, to appear before him and take the oath of allegiance to the Government, and requiring them to pay him from five to fifty dollars for administering it, assessed according to their ability to pay, all which sums he kept as the perquisites of his office, and retains to this day. All this was in palpable, disgusting, wicked violation of law, and is confessed by the guilty scoundrel, and yet by him it is attempted to defame the character of Judge Young.

His remarks to Mr. Sharp were made under such circumstances as to absolutely repel any such hypothesis. He had called Judge Young before him to offer him the oath and receive his fee, and was examining him with a view of testing his loyalty by his own statements, and the remarks attributed to him were made use of, if at all, during the course of that examination, within the hallowed precincts of a provost marshal's office, and in the sole presence of one whose loyalty was remunerated by a carte-blanche to extort money from his neighbors ad libitum for the high privilege of swearing allegiance to their own Government. They were not even voluntarily made, but extorted from him by the provost marshal in the exercise of his high inquisitorial functions. And will it be pretended, then, that these circumstances "fairly show" that in making use of these remarks Mr. Young "actually designed" to and that his remarks "in their nature tended to forward the cause of the rebellion?" Perhaps he may have been intending to seduce Mr. Sharp to descend from the exalted pedestal of power, resign the golden harvest of perquisites, and throw himself into the arms of the unpromising cause of the enemy, but it must be confessed that such a supposition is not very probable.

Nor is there any more ground for presuming that the other expressions testified to were designed or tended to forward the cause of the rebellion. In the conversation with Mr. Parsons, at Mr. Gill's, Mr. Young simply expressed the opinion that Mr. Lincoln should be impeached for his call of seventy-five thousand soldiers. In doing this he only stated the logical results of positions assumed by the most distinguished statesmen in Congress but a short time before. He said nothing calculated or intended to persuade any one to take up arms against the Government, and there was no one present who had actually done so, and who might have been thereby encouraged to persevere in his rebellion.

Nor can it be maintained that the conversation with Joshua Ewing, in 1861, detailed by Mr. Moss, comes within the rule laid down by the committee. To say nothing of the danger of predicating any important decision upon evidence of a casual conversation, six or seven years after it took place, arising from the defects of human memory, and the liability to misunderstand as well as misinterpret what was said; but admitting that he used the exact expression attributed to him, and still there is not a syllable in the proof to justify the conclusion that it was either "actually designed or in its nature tended to forward the cause of the rebellion." On the contrary, it will strike the candid mind simply as an idle expression made to an intense, blatant, super-serviceable, pretended Union man, in order to irritate him, and nothing more. There is no proof that Young said anything in that entire conversation either intended or calculated to induce any one to take up arms against the United States, or to continue in his hostility thereto if actually engaged in the rebellion. The inference is, further, that this remark, if made at all, was long before the war became flagrant, or had in fact begun, and while the scene of difficulty was confined to South Carolina; else why should he have said he expected to have a company in that State? But this testimony has been cited by the committee no doubt to create the impression that Young influenced Ewing's sons to join the rebel army. That this insinuation is, however, not only unfair, but in the very face of the proof will be seen by reference to the testimony of the Ewings themselves. If any one in the world knew whether Mr. Young had induced them to go into the rebel army they of course did. Yet Henry Ewing swears that he knows nothing of Young's disloyalty. "Mr. Young had nothing to do with inducing me to join the confederate army." (See H. Doc. No. 47, p. 60.) And George M. Ewing testifies, on the next page, that he "never heard Mr. Young encourage any man to go into the southern army."

With regard to the conversation detailed by James Hall, I can only express my amazement that any one should refer to it as a proof of disloyalty, much less that the remark there attributed to Mr. Young should be considered as intended "to forward the cause of the rebellion." The very opposite is the truth. Instead of trying to induce Mr. Hall to take up arms against the Government, or espouse the cause of the rebellion, he tells him that he has been to Prestonburg; tells him that there was a body of men there, and warns him as a Union man to be on his guard, as they were getting to be pretty well drilled. But this fact was, perhaps, elicited to create the impression that Young went to Prestonburg to assist in the organization of the rebel force being at that time collected there. And it may have been alluded to in the majority report for a similar reason. But what are the facts? Young never denied being there, but always declared that his intention in going there, so far from being to assist or encourage the organization, was to persuade his brother-in-law not to go into the rebel army. Henry Ewing, who was there at the time, says: "I understood at the time Mr. Young was at Prestonburg that his object was to get his brother-in-law to go home." George M. Ewing, who was also there, testifies as follows:

"I live in Owingsville, Kentucky. I always looked upon Mr. Young as a southern sympathizer. I know nothing of his acts. He never took any part, that I know of, in raising troops for the South. I never heard him encourage any man to go into the southern army. I heard him declare himself a State-rights man, but never that he was in favor of the confederacy. I joined the rebel army in September, 1861. I do not know anything of Mr. Young's being an applicant for a position in the rebel army. I heard it reported that he ran for colonel of my regiment at Prestonburg, but there was no regimental election at all. In the spring of 1863, when he was running again for county judge against Mr. Wylie, I was electioneering against Mr. Young, and I said that Wylie had gone to Prestonburg and stuck to the army for four years, but that Young had gone there and had nearly broken up the regiment by taking men off instead of letting them stick to the army, and that, therefore, I was opposed to him."

If this amounts to "clear and satisfactory" proof, then it is difficult to perceive what may not be so, especially when it is considered in connection with the testimony of Thomas M. Green, esq., who was a Union candidate in opposition to both the parties to this contest, and was anxious to fix upon Mr. Young the charge of complicity with the rebellion, and especially in this particular instance. He says:

"I here state upon oath, and with a full sense of the importance of telling the truth, that along the whole route, and more particularly at Prestonburg and at Owingsville, where Judge Young lived, I made diligent inquiry to ascertain if Judge Young had been guilty of any treasonable act. I interrogated those who intended to vote for Captain McKee, Union men who intended to vote for me, and rebel soldiers and rebel sympathizers alike. I was especially careful to question men who had been at Prestonburg at the time alluded to by Captain McKee. I made these inquiries for the purpose of using any information I might gain against Judge Young and for my own benefit. The result of all my investigations was that I could learn of no act on the part of Judge Young which was treasonable in its extent or nature, and to my own disadvantage I was compelled to acquit him, Judge Young, of any such act."

I hold, therefore, that the evidence wholly fails to show that Judge Young is or was at any time a disloyal man in any just legal sense. He was disloyal in the cant phrase and clap-trap demagoguery of the day. If such slang, however, is to be made the basis for conviction of the highest crime known to human laws, and for the deprivation of important rights, then I may as well admit that Judge Young has no standing in this House. But in every just sense, I hold him loyal and competent to take the test-oath.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, joint resolutions and bills of the House of the following titles:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) to authorize the enlargement of the Hygeia Hotel, at Fortress Monroe, Virginia;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 262) authorizing certain distilled spirits to the Surgeon General for the use of the Army hospitals;

A bill (H. R. No. 659) granting a pension to Sarah E. Pickell;

A bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of the widow and minor children of Benjamin B. Naylor, late a pilot on the gunboat Patasco;

A bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to John Kelley;

A bill (H. R. No. 524) granting a pension to Austin M. Partridge;

A bill (H. R. No. 526) increasing the pension of Susan A. Mitchell;

A bill (H. R. No. 520) to place the name of Josephine K. Bugher on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. No. 519) granting a pension to Eliza J. Renuard, widow of William K. Renuard, deceased, late a private in tenth Ohio volunteers of war of 1861;

A bill (H. R. No. 517) granting a pension to Cornelia K. Schmidt, widow of Adam Schmidt, late a private in company A, thirty-seventh Ohio volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 280) granting a pension to Margaret Huston;

A bill (H. R. No. 258) for the relief of Mary B. Craig;

A bill (H. R. No. 257) for the relief of James L. Dickerson;

A bill (H. R. No. 246) granting a pension to Milton Anderson; and

A bill (H. R. No. 152) for the relief of the widow and children of Henry E. Morse.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 347) to amend an act to divide the State of Illinois into two judicial districts, approved February 16, 1855;

A bill (H. R. No. 662) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of George R. Waters;

A bill (H. R. No. 661) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of William Craft;

A bill (H. R. No. 525) granting a pension to Jeremiah T. Hallett;

A bill (H. R. No. 521) to place the name of Solomon Zachman on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. No. 456) granting a pension to the minor children of Pleasant Stoops;

A bill (H. R. No. 453) granting a pension to Nancy Weeks, widow of Francis Weeks, a soldier of the war of 1812;

A bill (H. R. No. 373) to place the name of Mahala M. Straight on the pension-roll of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 523) granting a pension to James S. Todd;

A bill (H. R. No. 522) granting a pension to W. W. Cunningham;

A bill (H. R. No. 518) granting a pension to George F. Gorham, late a private in company B, twenty-ninth regiment Massachusetts volunteer infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 411) for the relief of Almira Wyeth;

A bill (H. R. No. 236) granting a pension to John Q. A. Keck, late a private in the third Missouri cavalry; and

A bill (H. R. No. 455) granting a pension to David Van Nordstrand.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 428) for the relief of the sureties of Israel T. Canby, late receiver of public moneys at Crawfordsville, Indiana; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

McKEE VS. YOUNG—AGAIN.

Mr. KERR. I will devote no more attention at this time to the consideration of the facts touching the loyalty of Judge Young; but I desire to be heard for a moment in reference to the history of this case. I want to call the attention of the House to its history. Its history has had no parallel, at least in my acquaintance with contested-election cases in Congress. It has had no parallel certainly in the history of that kind of cases in this Congress. Its history is extraordinary. It has pursued the most singular course up to its present attitude before the House; and its course has been so singular as to impress my mind with the conviction that there is something more intended to be obtained by the decision than the doing of justice to these parties upon the law and the evidence in the case. I fear the committee has suffered itself to be placed in an attitude of most doubtful propriety. Its conduct justifies the apprehension that a mere partisan end is to be attained in clear violation of justice and law.

In the Birch case the Committee of Elections decided, and the House sustained that decision, that each State in the Union has the exclusive right to regulate and control the suffrage to be enjoyed by its own citizens, to enlarge or limit it.

In that case from the State of Missouri, you will recollect the laws of Missouri and the newly-adopted constitution of that State had changed the right of suffrage in Missouri by greatly limiting it, and that, too, under the most extraordinary circumstances. Yet this House held the State of Missouri, being her own judge in all matters of this kind, could restrict or extend the right of suffrage to her own citizens, so as to increase or diminish the body of her electors at her own pleasure. In the case of Delano vs. Morgan, the same committee, in perfect inconsistency with their ruling in the case of Birch vs. Van Horn, and in numerous other cases held by indirection, not directly, that, under the pretense of punishing for desertion, they can regulate suffrage in any State of this Union by act of Congress, by mere legislative declaration that certain citizens, as a class, are guilty of crime, and without trial by civil or military tribunal, according to any system of law and without conviction, disfranchise such class, in flagrant violation, in my judgment, of the first principles of the Constitution, of our social compact, of natural justice, and of the reserved and most sacred rights of the States; and upon that pretense it was that, in my judgment, one of the greatest wrongs ever committed against the right of representation in this country, according to the will of the people themselves, was committed by this House. It was upon the basis of that sort of assumption that in the case of Delano vs. Morgan the honorable gentleman who now occupies the seat was elected by this House as the Representative of the thirteenth district of Ohio, and George W. Morgan, whom the people of that district had themselves elected, was expelled from his seat and sent home. Thus was committed by this House and by the Radical party of this country the first palpable attempt to establish the doctrine that Congress has the right to regulate suffrage in the loyal States, directly or indirectly. It was a most dangerous and alarming innovation. It now becomes more dangerous because likely to be so soon extended.

On the 23d of March last the Committee of Elections, in their report on this case, unanimously decided that Mr. McKee, the contestant, did not receive a majority of the legal votes cast in the ninth district of Kentucky, and that he was therefore not entitled to a seat in this House. They at the same time held that Judge Young was disloyal and was therefore not entitled to the seat. At a subsequent time my colleague on the committee [Mr. UPSON] made a minority report as against the original majority report in this case. In that original report the committee say that the proof shows that not more than 666 rebel soldiers voted in that district and voted for Judge Young. "But the committee finding that there is no law of Kentucky disfranchising rebel soldiers have not been able to see how those votes can be rejected." Yet after having given these two opinions, after having made these two solemn decisions, the same committee, by a report subsequently filed, and but a few days ago, take back all they said in those two cases.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to give way to me for a moment to report, in pursuance of the order of the House, from the Committee of Ways and Means, a bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually to secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco and to amend the tax on banks, for the purpose of having it printed.

Mr. KERR having yielded, the bill was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCHENCK. By the order of the House I have a right to proceed to the exclusion of all other business with this bill. I have ascertained that by giving it to the Printer by five o'clock this afternoon we can have it printed and ready on Monday morning. I desire, therefore, the unanimous consent of the House not to go on with the bill until it is printed, but that I may call it up on Monday morning. I give notice that I will call it up on Monday.

Mr. MÜNGEN. I ask whether it will be printed by that time?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir; I have ascertained that it can be.

Mr. MÜNGEN. I have no objection.

Mr. ADAMS. Will it be taken up in preference to the election case now pending before the House?

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish to accommodate the House, because whenever it is taken up it excludes everything else by order of the House. I do not want to break in upon this case to-day; I prefer to have the bill printed. I will therefore give notice that at a particular hour—say two o'clock on Monday if it is agreeable to the House—I will call it up.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest if this election case should go over till Monday, of which there is some possibility, the tax bill could be taken up immediately after this case is disposed of.

Mr. SCHENCK. We had better fix some hour and let the pending case accommodate itself to that hour.

Mr. JONES. I suggest that it be taken up immediately after the conclusion of this case.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not know how long this will run on.

Mr. JONES. Probably not more than till two or three o'clock on Monday.

Mr. SCHENCK. I prefer to agree on a certain time; naming the hour.

Mr. JONES. Say three o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is a motion of high privilege set down for Monday, to reconsider the vote by which the disability bill was rejected. That will come in.

Mr. SCHENCK. It cannot come in, for by the absolute order of the House, when this bill is reported back we have a right to go on with it to the exclusion of even the morning hour, all reports of committees, and all questions whatever, except reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know that, but I suggest that we fix an hour so as to be able to dispose of the disability bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose to fix an hour, but if gentlemen insist upon going on now under the stringent order of the House, that of course prevents our getting the bill printed, which everybody wants to see. In case we do not go on with it I want to know precisely when we can, and I propose two o'clock on Monday.

Mr. KERR. I have no objection if this election case be disposed of.

Mr. WARD. Say three o'clock.

Mr. JONES. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman's proposition cannot be entertained during the discussion of the question pending before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BOWWELL in the chair.) The Chair rules that the gentleman who had the floor [Mr. KERR] yielded.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will I have the power to take the floor on this bill under the absolute order of the House at such time as I may demand hereafter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman can take any member off the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not want to take anybody off the floor.

Mr. JENCKES. I understand it to be the order of the House that the tax bill shall be considered, and I object to any particular hour being assigned. I perfectly concede to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means the right to proceed with the bill.

Mr. KERR. I believe I must claim the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not want to do anything discourteous toward the gentleman from Indiana, who has kindly yielded to enable me to get the bill printed. But under the absolute order of the House I can go on with the bill at any time. I do not care to go on now. I want the bill printed for the information of the House. But I want to know if gentlemen will not agree that at two o'clock on Monday we shall go on with the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means can call up the bill at any time on Monday.

Mr. SCHENCK. I give notice then that I will try to get it up at two o'clock on Monday.

Mr. COOK. I give notice, then, that I shall call the previous question on the contested-election case to-night.

Mr. SCHENCK. Several members ask that there may be extra copies of the tax bill printed. I move that one thousand extra copies of the bill be printed.

The motion was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing.

PURCHASE OF ALASKA.

Mr. BANKS. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to give a notice to the House.

Mr. KERR. I think I ought not to yield any longer. What does the gentleman desire?

Mr. PILE. Only to give a notice.

Mr. BANKS. It is not in regard to this matter. I only want to give a notice. The Committee on Foreign Affairs do not wish to interfere with the consideration of the tax bill; but as soon as that bill is disposed of they will ask the House to consider the treaty for the purchase of Russian America.

Mr. PAINE. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question in regard to the Alaska bill?

Mr. KERR. I must decline to yield further.

M'KEE VS. YOUNG—AGAIN.

The House then resumed the consideration of the contested-election case of McKee vs. Young.

Mr. KERR. On the 17th day of June the Committee of Elections made a third, and, I hope, a last report in this case, in which they declare that Mr. McKee did receive a majority of the votes legally cast in the ninth district of Kentucky, and was therefore elected. In the case of Delano vs. Morgan the committee held that persons who had been guilty of desertion, under the twenty-first section of the act of Congress of March 3, 1865, on the subject of desertions from the military service, were not legal electors in the State of Ohio. The committee now extend that unjust rule to the ninth district of Kentucky; but they do not stop with the application of that rule to this case; they go further and apply another rule, hitherto not settled by any Congress, hitherto not considered or attempted by any Committee of Elections, hitherto not approved anywhere in this country by any legislative or judicial tribunal, and, I trust, not now to be approved or tolerated as it is recommended by the committee, and that rule is this: that it is the duty of this House, wherever persons are allowed to vote in any State of this Union, loyal or disloyal, who have been soldiers in the late war against the Union, to strike from the polls the names of such persons, and not allow them to be counted at all, notwithstanding the total absence of any law of Congress disfranchising them, and of any law of the States in which they vote disfranchising them, or of any law of this country, fundamental or statutory, on the subject of suffrage, that either attempts or pretends to disfranchise them. We are told now, for the first time, that rebel soldiers were allowed to vote in the ninth district of Kentucky, and that persons who have been in the rebellion as soldiers are not legal voters, although they are expressly made legal electors by the States of which they are citizens.

Will the honorable gentlemen of the majority of the committee point out to this House one single case, one single instance, in which Congress has attempted by law to disfranchise a citizen of a loyal State because he was in the rebellion? There is no such law; there never was any such law. And if Congress should ever attempt to enact that kind of a law, it would simply be attempting, as it has many times attempted, to enact laws without authority under the Constitution, in violation of the Constitution, and in violation of the rights of the States, and of civil liberty in this country. The regulation of suffrage belongs to the States alone, and the only safety for our institutions is in the faithful observance by this Government of the reserved rights of the States on this great question. When this barrier to congressional supremacy is overcome the establishment of centralism and despotism will speedily follow.

Is there any law of Kentucky which says that those ex-rebel soldiers should not, in 1867, be allowed to vote? Certainly there is not, and it is not pretended that there is. There was once a law enacted in Kentucky, in 1862, which declared that persons who had gone into the rebellion, or given aid and comfort to the enemies of the country, or attempted to overthrow the Government, or to take Kentucky out of the Union, should henceforth not be qualified to exercise the rights of suffrage in that State. But under that law a case was made and an appeal was taken to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky, and that court by unanimous opinion held that under the constitution of Kentucky that law was utterly void because unauthorized thereby; and thus the law was judicially repealed.

Subsequently, on the 15th of March, 1865, the Legislature of Kentucky, by a specific act of legislation, repealed that law, and declared that it should be as if it had never been enacted. And on the 19th day of December, 1866, there was enacted by the Legislature of Kentucky a law which declared that all persons who at any time had committed the offense or crime of treason against the Commonwealth of Kentucky were thereby pardoned and absolved from all the pains and penalties thereto attached.

Now, it will not be suggested by any lawyer in this House that it is not in the power of the State of Kentucky or of any State of this Union to grant amnesty to her own citizens as to offenses committed against her own laws. That is what Kentucky has done in this case, and what Kentucky had the right to do. She has pardoned those of her citizens who had committed treason against her, and has restored them to all the rights, all the privileges, and all the franchises that as citizens of Kentucky they hitherto possessed and exercised.

Mr. BENTON. Does the gentleman hold that the Congress of the United States cannot deny to a citizen of a State the right to vote on account of his having been engaged in waging war against the Government of the United States?

Mr. KERR. That question has nothing to do with this case. What the power of Congress may be is in no way material to the decision of this case. If Congress has any such power, it has not exercised it. Then why talk now about the existence or non-existence of any such power? Congress has not attempted to exercise any such power, and therefore that question has nothing to do with this case.

Mr. BENTON. Then I would inquire whether the State of Kentucky has any power to enact a law declaring that citizens of that State who tried to get the State out of the Union should be deprived of the right of suffrage?

Mr. KERR. That question has as little to do with this case as the other question has.

Mr. BENTON. The gentleman has been discussing both of those questions, if I understood him.

Mr. KERR. I have not discussed them, but have stated the absence of any such laws. The gentleman's last question has as little to do with this case as the first question, has because the State of Kentucky has not attempted, in this case, to disqualify any of the men who voted for John D. Young.

Mr. BENTON. Did not the State of Kentucky enact a law that the persons whom I have indicated had not the right to vote?

Mr. KERR. It did; but that law has long since been repealed, as I have stated. But I will answer both of the questions of the gentleman, not because they have anything to do with this case, but because the honorable gentleman seems to be vexed that I have not answered them.

Mr. BENTON. Oh! no.

Mr. KERR. I say that Congress has no power, under the Constitution of the United States, to disfranchise the citizens of a State for any offense until, under a law of Congress, legally and constitutionally enacted, the offenses shall have been defined and the punishments prescribed, and the persons shall have been legally and constitutionally charged with the commission of the offenses after the enactment of the laws, and convicted thereof by courts of legal and competent jurisdiction; and then, I say, they can only be disfranchised by being deprived of actual personal liberty.

Mr. BENTON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. KERR. I decline to yield further. They cannot deprive them of the right of suffrage. They can deprive them of the physical ability to exercise the right of suffrage by shutting them up in prisons or otherwise depriving them of personal liberty, but not otherwise. The loss of suffrage results, as an incident, from the loss of personal liberty. But Congress cannot adjudge disfranchisement to continue after the offender is discharged from all other punishment and set at liberty.

I say, as to the second question, it is competent for the Commonwealth of Kentucky, or any State in the Union, to disfranchise whom that State pleases. The State of Missouri did do so in pursuance of her own law. But if the constitution of Kentucky gave to her Legislature no power to make that disfranchisement then it could not be legally done. I concede that the State may have power to do that, to make a valid disfranchisement, but it has done nothing of the kind.

Mr. COOK. I will ask the gentleman a question. Now, if the Legislature of Mississippi sent Jefferson Davis to the Senate of the United States, I would inquire whether it would be bound to receive him before his trial and conviction?

Mr. KERR. If the honorable gentleman will tell me what that has to do with this case, I will gladly answer. I refer the honorable gentleman to the answer made to his inquiry by a distinguished Senator of his own party, Senator HOWE, when the inquiry was put in the Senate. He will find that is a satisfactory answer to his question. At this time I decline to go into that discussion.

But I invite the attention of my excellent colleague on the committee to the fact, if Jefferson Davis is a traitor, if he committed acts of treason, and I say he did, against the Federal Government, there are several gentlemen now about to be admitted upon this floor who have done the same thing, and by the gentleman's vote they are to come in here, and are to be allowed to take an exceptional sort of oath, as a qualification, I suppose, to get into this House.

Following the singular course of this committee in this case down to the present time, I cannot but remark, Mr. Speaker, upon the singular rapidity with which vicious examples, vicious acts of legislation, vicious acts of party power and supremacy, become precedents in this country, and are followed by others more revolutionary, and less justifiable acts of wrong on the part of this House. Shakespeare hath most truly said:

"'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the State."

The case of Delano vs. Morgan is referred to in the last report filed in this case as an authority to settle various grave questions here. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOK] in that report states, citing the case of Delano vs. Morgan, that—

"It has long been held that if the officers of election are not capable of holding the office the election has no more validity than would an election where no officers whatever were appointed; it is otherwise where persons capable of holding the office are appointed, although they may not have complied with the forms of the law. (Easton vs. Scott, 1 Contested-Election Case, page 272; Delano vs. Morgan, decided the present session.)"

My worthy friend also refers to other cases; and upon such authorities asks this House to reject the entire polls in many precincts, and thus disfranchise large numbers of electors for no fault or wrong of theirs, unless it is because they gave majorities for Judge Young. The ground alleged against them is that the election officers had been rebel soldiers, and therefore could not become legal and competent officers of the election.

The cases cited here, and several others cited by my colleague on the committee, have no bearing on the question before the House. I have not time to discuss them in detail. I say I challenge the production of one single case in the entire history of contested elections that sustains the position assumed by the majority of the committee. There is not a single case in this country, but, on the contrary, I can point out, and have in my possession at least one hundred cases in Congress, in legislative bodies, and in the reports of judicial tribunals, which are directly in the very teeth of this assumption, and show that in it there is no law, that it has no basis in authority or decent precedent anywhere.

Reference is made, for example, to the case of Jackson vs. Wayne, (1 Cont. Elec. Case, p. 47,) that came up from the State of Georgia to this House. Now, my worthy colleague is a lawyer, and I have a right to expect that when he invites the attention of the House to a decision he will at least have the kindness to give to that decision the only construction it will bear; that he will at least have the frankness to read that decision to the House, in order that the House may be its own judge, if he is not willing himself to put a construction upon the case.

What did the House decide in that case? I ask the attention of gentlemen to it. I read from the syllabus of the case, which faithfully indicates all there is in it affecting the case now before the House:

"The law of Georgia requires that three magistrates shall preside at elections; and it was held that a return by three persons, two of whom were not magistrates, was defective."

"Two of whom were not magistrates." Well, what has that to do with this case? If the law of Kentucky held that this election should have been conducted by three township trustees, and the officers were not trustees at all, then this decision would apply. But this decision has no application at all to this case. In Georgia two of the election officers were not magistrates at all. Therefore they were not acting under color of authority; they were neither officers de jure nor de facto. They had no legal right to preside at that election; they were not chosen magistrates at all, regularly or irregularly, under color of law or without it. In this case all officers were acting under the color of law, elected according to law in every particular. And the honorable gentleman only objects that the officers in these rejected precincts in Kentucky were not personally competent to be elected as judges, sheriffs, and clerks, because they had been rebel soldiers. The law of Kentucky disfranchising them had been repealed in 1865, both by the courts and by the Legislature, and amnesty had been granted them all by the State in December, 1866, and they had thus been fully restored to all their political rights, franchises, and privileges as citizens of that State; and the act of her Legislature of March 15, 1862, by clear implication and in legal effect had been repealed, and there could no longer exist any disqualification arising out of its provisions. The act of amnesty is the latest law, and, upon every principle of statutory construction, it repeals all inconsistent laws. Ex-rebel soldiers were thereafter as competent to become election officers under the laws of Kentucky as any other persons.

But it is insisted that the failure to comply with the provisions of the following law of Kentucky authorizes the rejection of the entire polls of the precincts in which the failure occurs. (Myers's Supplement, p. 456:)

An act to amend section one, article three, chapter thirty-two, title "Elections," of the Revised Statutes.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That hereafter, so long as there are two distinct political parties in this Commonwealth, the sheriff, judges, and clerk of election, in all cases of elections by the people under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and under the constitution and laws of Kentucky, shall be so selected and appointed as that one of the judges at each place of voting shall be of one political party, and the other judge of the other or opposing political party; and that a like difference shall exist at each place of voting between the sheriff and clerk of election; Provided, That there be a sufficient number of the members of each political party resident in the several precincts, as aforesaid, to fill said offices. And this requirement shall be observed by all officers of this Commonwealth who have the power to appoint any of the aforesaid officers of election, under the penalty of a fine of $100 for each omission, to be recovered by presentment of the grand jury.

In Blakey vs. Golladay, in the present Congress, the Committee of Elections and the House decided that the provisions of this law are merely directory, and neglect to comply with them cannot render illegal the elections. It may subject the offender to criminal prosecution.

Besides, it should be borne in mind that it is nowhere insinuated, either in the allegations or the evidence, that either of these officers failed in any particular to discharge his duties faithfully, honestly, and impartially; that there is not an iota of evidence that Young received a single vote more, or McKee a solitary vote less than if they had not been appointed. Wherefore, then, should the votes of these several precincts, honestly and fairly cast and truly and impartially returned, be rejected, even if it should be admitted that all the officers of the election belonged to the same party? What reason can be suggested for such a proceeding in justice, morality, or a decent regard to the freedom of the elective franchise, the cornerstone of civil liberty? But even granting that all the election officers in these precincts belonged to the same political party at the time of their appointment, and still the objection urged by the contestant on that account, to the validity of the votes cast is utterly futile. He admits that they were appointed by the officer or court legally authorized to do so, and, therefore, whether they were qualified according to the strict letter of the statute, or not, they exercised the functions of their several offices under color of authority. In a word they were officers de facto, and their acts, in so far as the public or third parties who have an interest in them are concerned, are as effectual and valid as if they had been officers de jure. There is, perhaps, not a principle better known to our entire system of jurisprudence than this. It was never doubted, even in England, where the statutes against the appointment of persons to office who have not taken the oaths of supremacy, adjuration, &c., are remarkable for their stringency, and it has, perhaps, never been questioned by any intelligent court in this country; on the contrary, it has been repeatedly affirmed by the supreme court of almost every State in the Union, as well as by the Federal courts.

My colleague refers to the case of Easton vs. Scott (1 Contested-Election Case, p. 272) to sustain his positions. In that case there is no question decided that in any respect bears materially upon this case. It is there decided that—

"If an election is required by law to be held by three judges, who are to be sworn, and it is held by two not sworn, their proceedings are irregular, and the votes taken by them are to be rejected."

In this case no such facts arose or are established. The boards were all full, the officers duly sworn, after having been chosen and qualified according to the laws of Kentucky, and their returns are all regular.

Reference is also made to the case of Howard vs. Cooper (2 Contested-Election Case, p. 282) and with equal misapprehension of its value and character. In that case but two persons pretended to act as judges. There was, therefore, no compliance with the law; but in the case under consideration there was an actual compliance with the law, and even if the officers were incompetent for the reasons alleged, yet no fraud being alleged or proved, they were officers de facto, and the election was clearly valid. In this connection I refer to Milliken vs. Fuller, Bartlett's Contested-Election Case, page 176; Ohio, &c. vs. Ritt, American Law Register for December, 1867, page 90; Barret vs. Reed, 2 Ohio, 410; Johnson vs. Stedman, 3 Ohio, 96; Elden vs. Sexton, 5 Ohio, 216, all of which are directly in point.

I hold, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that all these election officers were legally eligible and competent, and that if the contrary were true yet their proceedings were valid and legal, and must be held good by this House, because they acted under color of authority. They were legally chosen; their conduct was regular; there is no fraud alleged or proved; there is no bad faith or corruption shown. Under such circumstances the acts of the officer, whether he possessed the legal qualifications to constitute him an officer de jure or not, have always been held by all the courts of the country to be valid. In the leading case on this subject, of the People vs. Cook, 14 Barbour, 259, the court say:

"It is sufficient that they were inspectors de facto. They came into office by color of title, and that is sufficient to constitute them officers de facto. The rule is well settled by a long series of adjudications, both in England and this country, that acts done by those who are officers de facto are good and valid as regards the public and third persons who have an interest in their acts; and the rule has been applied to acts judicial as well as ministerial in their character. This doctrine has been held and applied to almost every conceivable case."

I could cite authorities to the same effect to almost any number. Out of the immense number of American cases in which this doctrine has been emphatically stated as the law, I deem it sufficient to cite the following: Commonwealth vs. Fowler, 10 Mass., 301; Mason vs. Dillingham, 15 Mass., 170; McGregor vs. Bach, &c., 14 Vermont, 428; Cummings vs. Clark, 15 Vermont, 653; Keyler vs. McKissom, 2 Rawle; Neal vs. Oversears, 5 Watts, 538;

Bond vs. Bank Washington, 11 S. & R., 411; McKean vs. Summers, 2 Penn., 297; Barrett vs. Reed, 2 Ohio, 410; Johnson vs. Stedman, 3 Ohio, 96; Elden vs. Sexton, 5 Ohio, 216; St. Louis Co. vs. Sparks, 10 Mo., 117; Pritchett vs. People, 1 Gilm., Ill., 529; Cook vs. Hall, 1 Gilm., 580; People vs. Ammon, 5 Gilm., 170; 13 Mich., 527; 1 Mon., (Ky.), 297.

For further example, in the State of Ohio in one case an officer of election was appointed by a county judge, who, at the time of his election was a resident of another county than that for which he was chosen, and therefore lacked the qualifications of residence and citizenship in the county over which he was to preside as judge. Yet the supreme court of Ohio held that inasmuch as he was elected under the forms of law and acted under color of authority, although he had not a shadow of legal authority or eligibility to that office, his action must be sustained.

Mr. Speaker, it is said by my colleague [Mr. Cook] that citizens of Kentucky to the number of 666 who voted for Judge Young had been in the rebel army, and that it would be singular if Congress had not the power to prevent rebels from voting, when it is conceded that it has the power to kill rebels, to shoot them down, or to imprison them when in a state of war. I hardly know how to answer that kind of logic. If it had anything to do with this case, or presented any difficulty in this case, I would cheerfully concede it was worthy of consideration. But what has it to do with the case? When these men were in actual rebellion against this Government who questions the right of the Federal Government to overcome their resistance by taking their lives or by effecting their capture or by imprisoning them or by doing anything consistent with the laws of war and of the country? But when this election took place there was no war in this country, there were no belligerents, but there was profound peace. There was no resistance to law. Where, then, do you get the authority to say that these men are now rebels and in rebellion, and that they therefore may be stricken down and deprived of their right to vote under the laws of their own State? There is no such law, and the inquiry, therefore, has nothing to do with this case, and can have no valid or legal bearing upon its decision. It is dragged in for prejudice rather than argument. The very object of the war was to suppress resistance to the laws, to vindicate the integrity of the country, to bring the citizens back to peaceful obedience and pursuits, and not to strip them of rights or franchises as citizens. It was not a war for conquest and subjugation.

It is said by my colleague, [Mr. Cook,] in his singular report, that these ex-rebel soldiers are embraced in no amnesty or pardon of the President. Let us see. On May 29, 1865, the President issued a proclamation of amnesty, the tenth paragraph of which says that "all persons who left their homes within the jurisdiction and protection of the United States, and passed beyond the Federal military lines into the pretended confederate States for the purpose of aiding the rebellion," shall have full amnesty and pardon. This embraces all the voters referred to. There is not a word of proof that they did not all avail themselves of it by taking the prescribed oath.

But it is said when they left their State and went into the rebellion they waived their right of citizenship in the State of Kentucky. Waived it! I would like to know under what law, in pursuance of what authority, the citizenship of any citizen of this country can be waived. What law of Congress provides the means by which a man may waive his citizenship in a State? What law in the State of Kentucky provides any such process? There is none. It is simply assumption. It is simply running into the cant logic of the day which has no foundation in law or in decent common sense. A man cannot waive sacred rights like those of citizenship and suffrage in this country in any such sense as to become disfranchised. To hold that a citizen can thus lose such rights is to put it in the power of Congress or of State Legislatures to decitizenize and disfranchise electors at their pleasure, without regard to any of the guarantees for civil liberty or prohibitions against ex post facto laws or bills of pains and penalties. The legislative power in the country may then declare that the doing of any act by the citizen shall ipso facto place him outside the pale of law, make him an alien and outcast from his country without a hearing or trial or conviction; without courts of justice or indictment, formal charge, or proof. The doctrine is absurd and monstrous.

When these ex-rebel soldiers left the State of Kentucky they continued to be citizens of the State; when they returned to that State they were no more citizens than they were before; they were no less citizens than they were before. They had no less rights as citizens of Kentucky than they had before, unless under a legal and constitutional law of Kentucky they had been indicted for the crime, tried, and convicted. Then their rights might have been diminished, their citizenship might have been taken from them, and their right to vote might have been lost. But that has not been done here as to one single voter out of this whole number. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ADAMS] very pertinently suggested in reference to this case, that, under the system of reconstruction, about which we have heard so much in this House of late, Congress has never even attempted to say that the common soldier of the South had forfeited in the least his right of suffrage. The very contrary is the truth. That right is recognized. That right has never been taken from him. That right continues. It is as sacred to-day as it was before the war. Certain classes, I agree, have been disfranchised, but that disfranchisement is in violation of the rights of those States, and of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I wish to ask my colleague on the committee a question. I understand him to say that persons engaged in the rebel service came back to Kentucky with precisely the same rights that they had before, and that those rights continued until they were convicted. Now, the question that I wish to ask is whether he holds that a person arrayed in war, and enlisted in the rebel army, could, in Kentucky, vote for members of Congress while so arrayed in war?

Mr. KERR. I say no.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. And yet they were not convicted?

Mr. KERR. I say no; and I do not need to tell so intelligent a lawyer as my colleague is why I say so. During war, in the midst of the clash of arms, one system of law prevails, while during peace, when war has ceased, when there is no public enemy, when there are no belligerents, when there is no resistance to law, then the civil law again reigns supreme, and under that changed condition of things I say these men hitherto engaged in war may vote as legally as he or I. If deprived of that right it must be according to law, upon conviction and judgment, under the laws of the State, for Congress has no power to regulate suffrage in the States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GOLLADAY obtained the floor.

Mr. KERR. I do not wish to encroach on the patience of the House, but I would like to have a few minutes longer.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask that by unanimous consent the gentleman's time be extended five or ten minutes.

Mr. KERR. Ten minutes will be enough.

Mr. COOK. I wish to say that I shall absolutely have to call the previous question within one hour from this time. If the ten minutes is to be taken out of the hour of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GOLLADAY] I have no objection; otherwise I must object.

Mr. GOLLADAY. I will yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. KERR resumed the floor.

Mr. SHELLABARGER rose.

Mr. KERR. I must decline to yield for further questions. I desire to state some facts in connection with this case.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I wish to say a single sentence.

Mr. KERR. I must decline to yield, as my time is so short.

We are told in the majority report in this case—the last one I mean—that 625 men who had been in the rebel army voted for Judge Young. Now, I desire to invite the attention of gentlemen to the fact that in this report, as made up by the committee, there is a total absence of proof to sustain these allegations. On the contrary, it appears that in all the election districts in this ninth congressional district of Kentucky the only persons who voted, even upon the theory of the majority of the committee, contrary to law, number 818; and I hold in my hand a statement, precinct by precinct, of all those votes, which shows upon all the testimony taken here that only 818 men are proved to have voted for Mr. Young who were ex-rebel soldiers, or to have been disqualified even upon the theory of the majority of the committee.

In every case in which the majority propose to reject either individual votes or entire polls the testimony is extremely vague and incomplete, and as to nearly all the precincts it is the merest hearsay, rumor, common political slang, or partisan denunciation, wanting every element of legal evidence. It is too worthless and trashy to be worthy of recital. The testimony as to the election officers is of the same general character. It is uncertain, unsatisfactory, and fails in most cases to identify the alleged incompetent officer with the alleged ex-rebel soldier whom the officer is said to be. In some cases there is an identity of names shown, but no identity of person. Yet upon such evidence it is proposed to commit the great outrage not only of refusing the seat to the legally elected representative, Judge Young, but to give it to his opponent, repudiated by the people, who has the good fortune to be the political partisan and satellite of the majority in this House. To this end the House is called upon to violate most important principles, to declare that Congress has power, even without formal law, to say who shall and who shall not vote in the States—to regulate suffrage in all the States.

The majority of the committee say that 883 persons who voted for Judge Young were disqualified because they voted at elections where disqualified officers presided. They say that there were 625 persons voted who were themselves rebels; and rejecting all those votes, they make the majority for Mr. McKee to be 41 votes; but as I make up the footing of their own figures, I find the actual majority their own figures indicate is but 37 instead of 41.

Then, by turning to the evidence by which they hope to sustain their case, I find that they reject the vote of Centreville precinct, Fleming county, upon the testimony of Samuel McGuire alone, which I will read. He says:

"Mason Caywood and William H. Cord (judges of election) have been publicly known as southern sympathizers and in favor of the so-called southern confederacy, both during and since the war."

The majority for Mr. Young in that precinct was 132. The only evidence is that those election officers were "known as southern sympathizers." There is no testimony that they were rebel soldiers; there is no testimony that they committed one single act of disloyalty or that they were guilty of any act of treason. There is no testimony upon which a court and jury would for one moment hold that those men were disqualified to sit as judges or clerks of that election. The only testimony is that the witness himself, a friend and partisan of the contestant, had heard other people say that those men were "southern sympathizers."

I do not need to tell intelligent gentlemen here that that was the common clap-trap in political circles in the State of Kentucky during the last seven years. Whenever men wanted to intimate that persons were disloyal men they would say they were rebel sympathizers.

The Radical party all over the country, indeed, both North and South, have been in the habit of saying the same thing in regard to the Democratic party, including in their denunciations men who have shed their blood and periled their lives in the service of their country in that very war. And yet upon that kind of vague charges, based upon common hearsay, without a single particle of proof to sustain them, it is attempted to reject the vote of an entire precinct and to deprive Judge Young of the 132 legal majority given him by the legal voters of that precinct.

I could refer to other towns and precincts and show the same state of facts, based upon evidence as worthless, as flimsy, as unsatisfactory, as the testimony in reference to this precinct. In other words, taking the committee's own figures and examining the evidence in the record that tends to sustain them, or to which the committee appeal to sustain them, and it appears to me most surprising that any member of the committee should be willing to claim that they establish a shadow of right in Mr. McKee to the seat. It is impossible upon any view of the evidence in the record that shall approximate judicial fairness to exclude the precincts referred to. I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that to the great wrong of refusing this seat to Judge Young there will not be added the disgrace of giving it to the contestant. It is not the duty of Congress to elect members to this House.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question right here?

Mr. KERR. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. Did the committee inquire in the precincts where McKee got a majority whether any of the officers of elections were disqualified, as they contend they were disqualified where Judge Young received a majority of the votes?

Mr. KERR. I cannot say whether any such inquiry was made by any member of the committee. I am very sure of one thing, that no such inquiry is indicated by any of these reports, and that is the only basis upon which the honorable gentleman may reach a conclusion. If any such facts were inquired into they are carefully kept out of this report; they are kept from this House.

But upon the facts presented here, only in an ex parte way, in a partisan way, this House is now asked to reverse the first decision of this committee, to reverse its own ruling heretofore in similar cases, and to now establish a new rule to control this case, without any just, fair, and impartial presentation of the facts of the case by the majority of the committee. How can any intelligent gentleman of this House take up that report and answer to his own judgment and conscience why he should change the opinion first reported by the committee in this case; why he should now turn round and surrender his own judgment and act on that of another without evidence, without examination, without the facts, without the testimony, without anything that can justify a gentleman in coming to such a conclusion on a question like this in which, by his high position and solemn obligations, he is required to act and decide impartially and judicially? I trust that such an act of stultification will not be approved by this House, and that we will have an end of the vicious precedents lately established here.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 665) granting a pension to Susan V. Berg;

An act (H. R. No. 667) granting a pension to Mary Graham;

An act (H. R. No. 668) granting a pension to Elizabeth Butler, widow of Cyrus Butler;

An act (H. R. No. 769) granting a pension to David Howe;

An act (H. R. No. 772) granting a pension to Robert McCrory;

An act (H. R. No. 774) granting a pension to Amos Withaw;

An act (H. R. No. 776) granting a pension to Zephaniah Knapp, of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania;

An act (H. R. No. 823) granting a pension to George W. Lochor;

An act (H. R. No. 824) granting a pension to Annie Vaughn;

An act (H. R. No. 826) granting a pension to Michael Mellon;

An act (H. R. No. 827) granting a pension to Ann Wilson;

An act (H. R. No. 828) for the relief of Captain William McKean; and

An act (H. R. No. 829) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Ten Eyck Williamson.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 663) granting a pension to Cyrus K. Wood, the legal representative of Cyrus D. Wood;

An act (H. R. No. 664) granting a pension to the minor children of Charles Gouler;

An act (H. R. No. 666) granting a pension to Henry H. Hunter;

An act (H. R. No. 669) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Myron Wilklow;

An act (H. R. No. 670) granting a pension to the widow and children of Andrew Holman;

An act (H. R. No. 671) granting a pension to the widow of Henry Keneday;

An act (H. R. No. 672) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Charles W. Wilcox;

An act (H. R. No. 673) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of John S. Phelps;

An act (H. R. No. 675) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Cornelius L. Rice;

An act (H. R. No. 676) granting a pension to Thomas Connolly;

An act (H. R. No. 677) granting a pension to the minor children of James Heatherly;

An act (H. R. No. 770) granting a pension to John H. Finlay;

An act (H. R. No. 771) granting a pension to John D. Lay;

An act (H. R. No. 773) granting a pension to William H. McDonald;

An act (H. R. No. 775) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Erastus Kinsel;

An act (H. R. No. 822) granting a pension to Hampton Thompson; and

An act (H. R. No. 825) granting a pension to John W. Hughes.

M'KEE VS. YOUNG—AGAIN.

Mr. GOLLADAY. Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of the question before this House as a young member of Congress I ask the indulgence and attention of members to the views I shall submit to their judgment. And if, in the excitement of the moment or in the heat of debate, I shall utter one word that savors of personal unkindness or reflects upon any member upon this floor, let me say in advance that it is as foreign from my nature as it certainly is from my intention to say aught that shall wound the feelings of any member on this floor.

The case before the House is an anomalous one. There are circumstances connected with it which makes it of extreme interest to every member of this House and to the country; and in the beginning it becomes me to notice the various reports which have emanated in this one case from the Committee of Elections. There is, indeed, such a variety of reports that we are left in doubt as to what really is the report of the committee, or rather of the majority of the Committee of Elections; and when the committee so disagrees with itself I contend that it fails to command that consideration and authority to which it might otherwise be entitled.

I maintain, sir, as a leading proposition, that in these various reports on this case the Committee of Elections have not the right to claim they have given this case a fair and impartial examination, because they are so utterly inconsistent with the reports heretofore made in the preceding election cases; they are wholly inconsistent with the reports in the Kentucky cases already decided. First, let me refer to the report of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cook] in the cases of Beck, Grover, and Jones, made in December, 1867. It is there held as follows:

"But while the committee entertained no doubt that it is the right and duty of this House to turn back from its very threshold every one seeking to enter who has been engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, or has given aid and comfort to its enemies during the late rebellion; yet we believe that in our Government the right of representation is so sacred that no man who has been duly elected by the legal voters of his district should be refused his seat upon the ground of his personal disloyalty, unless it is proved that he has been guilty of such open acts of disloyalty that he cannot honestly and truly take the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862; and further, that the commission of such acts of disloyalty to the Government should not be suspected merely, but should be proved by clear and satisfactory testimony, and that while mere want of active support of the Government or a passive sympathy with the rebellion are not sufficient to exclude a person regularly elected from taking his seat in the House, yet whenever it is shown by proof that the claimant has by act or speech given aid or countenance to the rebellion, he should not be permitted to take the oath, and such acts or speech need not be such as to constitute treason technically, but must have been so overt and public, and must have been done or said under such circumstances as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion.

Now, sir, I maintain there is not in this whole volume of testimony one single, solitary act or speech, interpreted by the surrounding circumstances in Kentucky, which, in accordance with the doctrine of the Committee of Elections, as laid down in the report which I have read, would disqualify Judge Young from taking his seat upon this floor, to which he was elected by a large majority of the popular vote of his district. This is rather a bold declaration, but I believe it is susceptible of proof. All that they attempt, in two or three isolated cases, is to make it appear that there was a suspicion of the loyalty of Judge Young during the rebellion. In all this volume of testimony they have failed to prove one single act of disloyalty against Judge Young. Yet, while with the two or three witnesses they have produced to cast a suspicion upon him, there are dozens who say, although the country has been thoroughly traversed and ransacked to find something against him, that he was a law-abiding man, and never, within their knowledge, gave any aid or encouragement to the rebellion, and most of them, too, the witnesses of contestant McKee, who were introduced to prove this particular fact, as the balance of their testimony most clearly shows.

Let me call attention to the testimony of some of these witnesses.

T. B. Oldham, page 56, swore as follows:

"Question. Did Mr. Young confess in that speech that he had been guilty of any act of hostility against the Government of the United States?"

"Answer. No, sir. He denied that in most unequivocal terms. I never heard him admit that he had given aid and comfort to the rebellion."

"Answer. I have been a special friend of Mr. McKee; that is true. I have been a warm friend of his since he was twenty years old. I have taken but little pains to get witnesses. I think I only tried to find one."

JOHN MILLER sworn and examined.

"By Mr. McKee:

"Question. What was Mr. Young's course?"

"Answer. All took him to be a rebel. He was not a Union man."

"By Mr. SCOFIELD:

"Question. Do you know of any acts of his in opposition to the laws of the United States?"

"Answer. I do not. He was a rebel. That is all I know about it."

"By Mr. McKee:

"Question. Did you ever hear Mr. Young talk in reference to the rebellion?"

"Answer. Yes. I heard him say something one day about Dutch Yankees and sour kraut."

"By Mr. SCOFIELD:

"Question. Did you hear him say anything indicating his position?"

"Answer. I heard him say one day that there was no Constitution; that the Constitution was broken.

That is the only thing I recollect. I heard Josh Ewing talking to him one day, and saying that he could take his (Ewing's) sons into the rebel army, but could not go himself. That was on the street in Owingsville.

"By Mr. McKee:

"Question. There is something in your affidavit about Mr. Young and two others leaving Owingsville one night carrying bundles.

"Answer. Some men went out with bundles. I cannot say Young was with them."

"By Mr. KINKEAD:

"Question. Did you ever know Mr. Young to do anything against the laws of the land?"

"Answer. I did not."

"Question. Did you ever hear him advise anybody to break the law?"

"Answer. I never did."

"Question. Did you ever hear him express any opinion adverse to the Government?"

"Answer. Only that the Constitution was broken."

Now I come to Spotswood Deadman, a colored man, spoken of on the other side—let us see what he says on the subject, (page 58:)

"By Mr. KINKEAD:

"Question. What do you know about Mr. Young feeding rebels?"

"Answer. I saw provisions going from his house, and saw him taking rebels to the house."

"Question. Did not Union men give the rebels something to eat?"

"Answer. Of course they did. They were forced to do so."

"Question. Is that the only aid you know of Mr. Young giving to the rebellion?"

"Answer. I believe it is."

I submit that my friend on the other side, who referred to this part of the testimony, neglected to read that particular part by oversight or otherwise.

Then here is the further proof that is brought against him to show that he gave provisions to the rebels.

"Answer. In 1861, at the commencement of the war, I saw Mr. Young's boy, Louis, carrying provisions to the camp, which was about two miles out."

"By Mr. McKee:

"Question. After the war got in full progress, whenever rebel troops came into the town of Owingsville what did the Union men do generally?"

"Answer. They had to go away."

Then further down is this evidence:

"By Mr. KERR:

"Question. You were a Union man always?"

"Answer. Yes."

"Question. What did you do when the rebel soldiers came to town?"

"Answer. I would sometimes stand and look on. Generally speaking, I was working at my trade of saddlery for the rebels, and I was never interrupted. I was working for an employer."

"Question. Do you mean to say that Mr. Young would go out to the country to welcome the rebels coming into town?"

"Answer. No; he would come out from his house and meet them on the street."

That is the kind of evidence. The rebels all left and he was a good Union man, and when they came he quietly stands and looks on, to use his own language.

Michael Carpenter (page 61) gives this testimony:

"I never knew Mr. Young to do anything in aid of the rebellion except as I have told you. I do not think I ever heard him encourage a young man to go into the confederate army."

George M. Ewing (page 61) testifies thus:

"I live in Owingsville, Kentucky. I always looked upon Mr. Young as a southern sympathizer. I know nothing of his acts. He never took any part, that I know of, in raising troops for the South. I never heard him encourage any man to go into the southern army. I heard him declare himself a State-rights man, but never that he was in favor of the confederacy."

Then I come to the testimony of several other witnesses called by Mr. McKee, who say they knew of no single act of Judge Young which compromises him in any way as acting with the rebels, nor of expressions which fairly show "that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion," to use the language of the Committee on Elections heretofore quoted from.

Then we hear the testimony of Bierbower himself, who, it will be recollected, was the right-bower of Colonel McKee in taking depositions. Judge Young met him on the stump and said he defied any man to put his finger on a single act which compromised him or connected him in any way with giving aid and comfort to the rebellion; and he further said if any man should so swear he would prosecute him for perjury. This declaration by Young was made all over the district during the canvass, publicly and privately, within the knowledge of this contestant; and the proof by Mr. Green, a candidate for Congress with Young and McKee, is that McKee failed or refused at any and all times in the presence of Young to make this charge.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the inception of this case, to see how it was gotten up. The decision against Judge Young was not made in any of these reports. Oh, no; that decision was made in this House last July, and any man who will read the record of the debate at that time will see that it was a foregone conclusion at that time. Why? The dominant party, in addition to a not unnatural desire to have a member of Congress from Kentucky who sympathized with their political sentiments, in and out of Congress, especially that branch who lived in Kentucky, most earnestly desired to strike a blow at the public sentiment of the State, and punish "rebel Democracy," as they facetiously call it, by insult and injury, in striking down her Representative. Colonel McKee made ten distinct allegations against Judge Young as reasons why he should not have his seat. And yet not one of those ten allegations has he proved in this testimony.

There is the statement of Willis Hockaday, a negro, who was talked about so much; then, also, one William S. Sharp. Now I propose to talk a little about this Hockaday to show how he stands upon this question. Here is his deposition, published in the Congressional Globe in July last:

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Montgomery:

This day personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the county and State above, Willis Hockaday, who states that in the year 1861 he was at work at Raccoon Furnace, in the county of Greenup, Kentucky; that in the month of September or October, of said year, a band of rebels came to said place from the Upper Sandy country on a raid; that they captured a number of men and carried off a large number of horses and other property. Affiant states that he himself was captured by these rebels and carried off, but after four or five days made his escape. John D. Young, of the county of Bath, and the same man who was on the 4th day of May, 1867, elected to the Fortieth Congress from the ninth Kentucky district, was with said band of rebels, and was in command of the same, representing himself as a colonel, and was by the men under him called by that title. Affiant was captured in the night, taken out of his bed, ordered to get up and go with them, which he did. During the night affiant did not recognize any of the persons, but the next day saw Young among the men, and commanding them. After his escape he made his way toward Camp Dick Robinson, and on his way through Owingsville, Bath county, related the circumstance, and was then told that Young was absent from home and had gone to the rebel camp at Prestonburg. After his capture he was taken through Grayson, Carter county, and up Little Sandy to Dry Fork. At night affiant made his escape; and further saith not.

his WILLIS HOCKADAY,
mark.

Attest: E. A. THOMAS, J. P. NELSON.

Sworn to before me by Willis Hockaday, who states in my presence, and the presence of the witnesses whose names appear above, that he has heard the foregoing affidavit read and has fixed his mark to his name to the same, and that its statements are true. Witness my hand and seal this 15th day of June, 1867.

G. E. MILLER,
Notary Public for Montgomery county, Kentucky.

You who have paid but little attention to this case will be surprised to learn that not a word of this is true. This Mr. Willis Hockaday—a gentleman of color—made a deposition, which is also in the Globe, directly to the contrary in every sentence and every word. And not only so, but he made his appearance before the sub-committee of the Committee of Elections at Lexington, Kentucky, and I will read from his testimony on the subject, and you may judge for yourselves what credit should be attached to the statement and motives of a man who has introduced just such testimony. Here is his testimony:

"I live in Stoner, Clark county, Kentucky. I formerly resided at Mount Sterling. In the fall of 1861 I was in Greenup county, at Raccoon Furnace. A squad of six or eight men came there one night and called me up, and took me off with them. I did not know any of them. We fell in with other squads of men, till they numbered some fifty altogether. Next morning there came riding up two very respectable-looking gentlemen, and I was told that one of them was commander of the company, and that his name was Young. I finally made my escape.

"By Mr. KINKEAD:

"Question. Is this gentleman (Mr. Young) the person who you were told was Mr. Young?
 "Answer. Oh, no; he was a heavier-built, portlier man. I supposed the men who carried me off were rebels."

This man, negro though he was, seemed to know instinctively that Judge Young was not a rebel. He said, "The men who carried me off were rebels." Instinct is sometimes very unerring, even in darkies!

"Question. Who wrote the first affidavit that you made in this matter?"

"Answer. Captain McKee.

"Question. Do you know what was in that affidavit?"

"Answer. I cannot tell now.

"Question. Did you know at the time?"

"Answer. I may have known, but I did not understand."

"Question. You heard the affidavit read at the time you signed it?"

"Answer. I deny hearing it read.

"Question. You afterward made another affidavit?"

"Answer. Yes.

"Question. Was that second affidavit read over to you?"

"Answer. Yes, sir.

"Question. Did you understand it?"

"Answer. I reckon I did. The first affidavit was never read over to me, according to my recollection.

"By Mr. McKEE:

"Question. You gave me your statement, and I wrote it down?"

"Answer. I suppose so. There was no person in the room but yourself. There was a colored man there when I was going in, and I told him I wanted Mr. McKee to write a letter for me. I did not say anything to Mr. McKee about any such letter. I had never been in Mr. McKee's office before. The subject of the election came up. I came back another day, perhaps the second or third evening afterward. Mr. McKee said to me as I was passing: 'Willis, call at my office when you have time.' I said I would do so. On my way back he was still sitting there, and said, 'Willis, have you time to come to my office now?' I said yes; and I went up with him, not knowing what he was up to. I had not got into the secret of the thing; but when he commenced writing and asked me these important questions I surmised what he was after.

"Question. Did I not ask you at the time if you knew John D. Young?"

"Answer. Yes; and I told you I did not.

"Question. Then I said, 'Perhaps it was not he?'

"Answer. I said I was told it was a gentleman named Young.

"Question. And I described the general outlines of Mr. Young, and you said that fitted?"

"Answer. I said that was about his size."

Further on in this examination Captain McKee admits that the affidavit was in his handwriting. Now, I submit whether Captain McKee can be allowed to falsify his own witness. This man, for whom he seems by the proof to have made a deposition for the unholy purpose of keeping Judge Young from his seat on this floor, and thus fraudulently usurp his place, proves, to his surprise and mortification, to be made of "sterner stuff," and even in his ignorance confounds the intelligence of the contestant, and leaves him upon the record a picture of humiliation, and, I might add, infamy, if allowable, for the "slow-moving finger of scorn to point at."

I come now to Mr. Sharp's testimony, upon which and what purported to be W. Hockaday's and McKee's own statement, Mr. Young was prevented in July last from taking his seat in this body; and his deposition is very important. I shall quote from it to show what kind of man this Mr. Sharp is, upon whose evidence, in fact, Mr. Young is to be kept out of his seat. The substance of his deposition is that he ordered Judge Young to appear at the provost marshal's office at a certain time, that Judge Young did appear, and, as he heard, called twice, but he was not there himself, and then Judge Young was guilty of the disloyalty of leaving the country, and went to that rebel State, Vermont, a thing I am sure for which the contestant never can forgive him. If he had gone to South Carolina it might have been different. But I read from the testimony:

"Question. How long did you act as provost marshal at Sharpburg?"

"Answer. About three months. I used to summon men to take the oath generally on information furnished by their neighbors.

"Question. How many men did you send to Camp Chase?"

"Answer. Three or four, I think. One of them was ordered there by General Boyle, positively.

"Question. What compensation did those men pay you for administering the oath?"

"Answer. They were charged from five to twenty-five dollars; poor men were charged nothing."

Mark that! This generous provost marshal Sharp allowed poor men to swear gratis, but a man who happened to be worth something, like Judge Young, had to pay from five to twenty-five dollars for the poor privilege of taking his oath.

"Question. What amount of money did you collect from that source?"

"Answer. I do not know; I never kept any account.

"Question. Several hundred dollars?"

"Answer. Yes, sir; several hundred dollars.

"Question. Did you account for that money to the Government?"

"Answer. I did not."

What! This loyal provost marshal, upon whose testimony Captain McKee relies, appears in this presence as a thief; a man who received money as provost marshal in behalf of the Government and never accounted for it!

I am not done with this military robber, Mr. Sharp, yet. I will go on with his testimony, for there is a heap of good reading in it. I will show you exactly what sort of testimony has been gotten up to keep Judge Young out of his seat. There is the testimony of Hockaday to begin with. But he was an honest colored gentleman; too honest to be used for this purpose, and some substitute had to be found for him. But, again, to Mr. Sharp. What is his testimony?

"Question. Did General Boyle ever give you authority to make charges of that kind?"

"Answer. Not positively.

"Question. Directly or indirectly?"

"Answer. I took it indirectly.

"Question. By writing?"

"Answer. No, sir.

"Question. What did he ever say to you which authorized you to call men before you and charge them for administering the oath?"

"Answer. He did not say I was to charge them, but he said they would have to foot the bills.

"Question. That is the only authority he gave you?"

"Answer. That was as strong as he said.

"Question. Did many of them object to pay you for administering the oath?"

"Answer. No, sir.

"Question. Do you recollect telling Mr. Young's brother-in-law that you would administer the oath to him for ten dollars?"

"Answer. I do not.

"Question. Had you any fixed tariff of fees?"

"Answer. I had not; I generally charged a man by the trouble he gave and his ability to pay.

"Question. What trouble did you have except issuing the summons and administering the oath?"

"Answer. Nothing else.

"Question. You had the same trouble with all?"

"Answer. Yes.

"Question. Then you exacted according to the wealth or poverty of the party before you?"

"Answer. I suppose that had something to do with it.

"Question. And this money you put in your own pocket?"

"Answer. I do not suppose that any of it ever went to the Government."

Of course not; you never heard of a thief returning to the Government anything that he stole therefrom. This man appropriated to himself what he had exacted from the poor and unfortunate men in his district. Honest, loyal agent! How the Government felt itself lean upon his mighty arm for protection! He then went on:

"A good deal of it went for expenses of men and horses in serving summonses. I recollect paying one individual $100 on the order of Colonel Metcalf."

"Question. Was there not great alarm and terror all through the country at those exactions made on the people?"

"Answer. I think there may have been some little uneasiness about the Camp Chase end of the thing. I do not think anybody was alarmed about anything else.

"Question. Do you state as a fact that you offered to administer the oath to Mr. Young?"

"Answer. Certainly; I offered him the privilege of taking the oath.

"Question. But you did not require it of him?"

"Answer. I did.

"Question. What was Mr. Young's answer?"

"Answer. I do not recollect positively; I suppose he said he had no occasion to take it.

"Question. Did he not say that he was in office, and had already taken the oath?"

"Answer. He probably did; I do not recollect. I had summoned Mr. Young there as I believed he was disloyal, from the cant of the community."

What do you think of such a fellow as this! Really dispensing oaths as a charity to poor men, though an affliction to men of any means, to put money in his own purse, in the name of loyalty, and by the power of the Government literally robbing Kentuckians:

"To Mr. SCOFFIELD:

"I do not recollect that there was any agreement on the part of Mr. Young and myself what was to occur in the event of General Boyle's decision, either way. We parted in a friendly manner, and Mr. Young said he would appear on the day fixed.

"Question. For what was he to appear—to be sent to Camp Chase, or to determine whether he would take the oath?"

"Answer. I do not think that Mr. Young ever came right square down and said that he would under no circumstances take the oath, nor was there any agreement as to what should be done, dependent on General Boyle's decision. I would, however, have sent him to Camp Chase, whether he took the oath or not, as General Boyle directed me to do so.

"Question. Was it generally reported there that Mr. Young used his influence with the confederates for the protection of Union men at various times?"

"Answer. I cannot say that much. A cousin of mine, who went to summon Mr. Young, informed me that Mr. Young advised him to travel back by a different route to avoid falling into the hands of rebels."

I do not blame Judge Young for leaving this wild waste, leaving the place where there were so many soldiers and such provost marshals, and going to some green spot where there was peace and kindness and liberty and justice.

Here is our friend, Colonel McKee, with ten propositions to prevent Judge Young from taking his seat. He introduced this man Sharp. He introduced Hockaday. He thought this colored man could be made to act to suit his purpose; but, rising above the ignorance of his race, in the purity of truth and in nature's sprout nobility, he scorned to tell a lie or allow himself to be made a tool of to suit the partisan and personal malignity which had literally enveloped the contestee in its fiery flames of persecution and defamation.

I will now call attention to the testimony of Mr. Morgan. I will read it to the House, and I ask whether Judge Young did more than any high-minded man would have done under like circumstances? Nay, I ask any true Union man on this floor if he would not commend the nobility of the act? My friend, Colonel McKee, will pardon me for not addressing this interrogatory to him also.

"C. C. MORGAN sworn and examined.

"To Mr. KINKEAD:

"I reside in Lexington, Kentucky; I have known Mr. Young about four years; I saw him in Owingsville in February, 1863; I was in the confederate service; we had been on a raid in Kentucky, and I started with a party of men to Owingsville, and took possession of it; we got there about half past ten o'clock at night; we surrounded Barnes's hotel and took possession of it; shortly afterward Mr. Young came up and interceded for Barnes to prevent damage being done, and to provide somewhat for our wants, giving as a reason that Barnes was a poor man, and asking me to be as light upon him as possible; he invited me to go to his house that night, but I declined, stating that I would stay with the men; one of the men took a horse belonging to some of the Barneses, and Mr. Young came to me to have it released; the man said he was bound to have a horse, and Mr. Young invited him to go to his stable and take any horse he chose in exchange for Barnes's horse; we knew Barnes to be a decided Union man, which was a great reason for our taking the hotel; we generally put up with Union men. We always required the citizens to feed us; of course it was a relief to Barnes to have us supplied from other quarters; provisions were sent in by outsiders. I recollect meeting Mr. Brother, a son-in-law of Mr. Barnes; I passed through Owingsville once or twice after that; once I told Mr. Young that my horse was very tired and wanted rest, and asked him to indicate some very good Union man who had a good horse that I could take in place of mine; he said he would rather I should not do so, but I insisted that I would, and he said, 'If that is the case you may take one of my horses; I brought his horse out; it was a very bad-looking horse, but really a very good one, and I rode his horse off and left mine behind. Mr. Young showed no disposition to oppress or molest Union men; he stood in the attitude of their protector all the time; two men with bad reputations were in the town one evening, armed and bent on mischief, and Mr. Young came to me and begged me to use my authority to prevent trouble, and I managed to send them off; one of them had the reputation of being a quasi guerrilla."

Rather than his poor Union neighbor should lose his horse, which he could ill afford, he gave up his own horse. This shows the pure and high-toned character of Judge Young.

Now let us see what the other witnesses say:

"ANDREW TRUMBO sworn and examined.

"By Mr. KINKEAD:

"Question. Where do you reside?"

"Answer. In Franklin county, about two miles from Frankfort, Kentucky. I resided in Owingsville, Bath county, up to September, 1863. I represented the ninth congressional district of Kentucky in the Twenty-Ninth Congress.

"Question. How long have you known Mr. Young?"

"Answer. Ever since his infancy.

"Question. State what you know about his obedi-once to the laws of Kentucky of the United States, and his conduct as a citizen?

Answer. I cannot speak very much about Mr. Young after the 5th of September, 1862. On that evening, being a Union man, I got notice to quit the country. The advance of Humphrey Marshall's forces came into my town, and the Union people had all left but myself. That evening I left home and lay in the woods forty-one days and nights. I was well acquainted with Mr. Young from his infancy up to that time. He was my neighbor, and he was our county judge. He was an orderly man, a correct man, and a perfect gentleman. I had to leave the country, and I went to Illinois with my stock of mules to feed them during the winter. I went home two or three times during the year 1863, accompanied by soldiers, and saw Mr. Young each time. He met me as he always had done. I was not afraid of Mr. Young, but I was afraid of a good many of his neighbors. It is proper that I should state I always looked upon Mr. Young as a southern sympathizer—what I called a rebel; but as to his acts, I never knew him to do anything that was wrong. He appeared to be a law-abiding man. There was a provost marshal at Sharpsburg who used to send for men suspected of sympathizing with the South, and require them to take the oath—making them pay sums varying from ten to three hundred dollars. I was opposed to that, and spoke against it, so that some of my friends began to doubt my loyalty."

Now I come to Thomas Y. Nesbitt. Let me read his testimony:

"THOMAS Y. NESBITT sworn and examined.

"To Mr. KINKADE:

"I live in Maysville, Kentucky. I lived in Owingsville in 1861. I have known Mr. Young all my life. During the troubles he deported himself as a quiet, orderly citizen. I never knew of his doing anything to aid the rebellion. I know that he kept me out of the rebel army at one time. I had made up my mind to join the rebel army, and talked to my father about it. He tried to persuade me not to go. I went up street to make some arrangements about going. I met Mr. Young on the street and spoke to him about my going, although I do not know why. He told me I ought not to go; that the best thing for me to do was to stay at home. I think if it had not been for what he said to me I should have gone to the rebel army that very night. I heard a man say the other day, at Maysville, that Mr. Young told him if he did go to the rebel army it would be the worst thing he ever did."

Now I come to B. D. Lacy, (page 81:)

"I had frequent interviews with Mr. Young. He demeaned himself as a quiet citizen all through the troubles, giving no aid to the rebellion that I know of. His sympathies were for the South. I recollect his being of service to me on one occasion when I was in danger from some rebel soldiers. I heard of his having frequently interfered in the same way for other citizens."

I come next to Joseph H. Richard, (page 82:)

"I reside in Owingsville, and resided there during the troubles. I have been always a Union man. Mr. Young lived in the village. I knew him very well. His deportment was that of a good, orderly citizen, attending quietly to his duties. I never knew him to do anything toward aiding the rebellion. His sympathies were well known to be with the rebellion. He was a quiet man. I think that if he had done anything contributing materially to the aid of the rebellion it would have been generally known. He constantly interfered for the protection of Union men and of all quiet citizens."

I might read extracts from dozens of witnesses to the same effect.

I now invite your attention to two pictures—the contestee and the contestant. Look upon this and then upon that—"Hyperion to a satyr." One of them is found giving no aid or comfort, but on the other hand discouraging by every possible means known to him others from going into the southern army. Young George M. Ewing says when Judge Young was a candidate he voted against him, not because he went to the rebel camp, and so far gave aid and assistance to the rebellion, but because he caused a regiment to be disbanded, and because he was instrumental in deterring young men from going into the southern army. Therefore he voted against him:

"GEORGE M. EWING sworn and examined.

"To Mr. McKee:

"I live in Owingsville, Kentucky. I always looked upon Mr. Young as a southern sympathizer. I know nothing of his acts. He never took any part that I know of in raising troops for the South. I never heard him encourage any man to go into the southern army. I heard him declare himself a State-rights man, but never that he was in favor of the confederacy. I joined the rebel army in September, 1861. I do not know anything of Mr. Young's being an applicant for a position in the rebel army. I heard it reported that he ran for colonel of my regiment at Prestonburg, but there was no regimental election at all. In the spring of 1866, when he was running again for county judge against Mr. Wylie, I was electioneering against Mr. Young, and I said that Wylie had gone to Prestonburg and stuck to the army for four years, but that Young had gone there and had nearly broken up the regiment by taking men off instead of letting them stick to the army, and that, therefore, I was opposed to him.

"To Mr. KINKADE:

"I am a son of Mr. Joshua Ewing. I am sure there was no election at Prestonburg at which Mr. Young's name was brought out. There was only a temporary election for colonel, when Finklin was chosen; but James S. Williams came soon afterward from Richmond with a commission as colonel. I saw Mr. Young at Prestonburg, and asked him what he was doing there. He said he was not going into the army. He did not say what business he had. It was my impression that he influenced men to leave Prestonburg. I had started off with fifty-one men, and there were twenty-five or thirty more; but after Young left we put our companies together, and there was not a full company."

"By Mr. SCOTFIELD:

"Question. Do you desire the committee to understand that Mr. Young, from motives of affection or relationship, induced some men to go home, or do you mean to say that he persuaded them from you because he was opposed to your cause?"

Answer. I do not know what was the reason. I do not know that he did persuade the men to leave; but I know that Young left, and the men left when he did."

"Question. And in the electioneering campaign you only charged that he had been of no service to the cause, while his competitor had been?"

Answer. Yes, sir.

"Question. While he concurred with you in sentiment, you thought he had never aided by act?"

Answer. That was my impression.

"Question. How long were you in the service?"

Answer. I served twelve months regularly, and was in the army about two years longer—about three years altogether. I was captain part of the time.

"By Mr. McKee:

"Question. Is it not a fact that many of the men left because Young did not get the office?"

Answer. Not that I know of.

"Question. Because they were dissatisfied with the organization of the regiment?"

Answer. There was no talk of an election at all when Young left there. Colonel Williams had come back from Richmond, and it was the understanding that Williams had been ordered to take command of the troops. I looked upon Mr. Young as a southern sympathizer. My father was a Union man all the time, and still sticks to it.

"By Mr. Cook:

"Question. At the time your company was at Prestonburg, did you hear anything said about Young having any office whatever in the regiment, either by company officers or anybody else?"

Answer. No, sir; I never heard his name mentioned as an officer. We got to Prestonburg in September and stayed there as sort of unorganized body till the 18th of November, when we were sworn in. Mr. Young was not there more than three or four days—not over a week any way. I very seldom saw him in camp.

"To Mr. KERR:

"I knew Mr. Young's brother-in-law, Badger. He was not one of the men who went away."

McKee brings up three witnesses such as I have shown before you. Look at Judge Young attending to the wants of his fellow-men, always giving aid and comfort to the Union man; giving food to the hungry, like a humane, kind, Christian gentleman, ever ready to do his duty. He was truly a friend in need. This whole book teems with the depositions of men who swear that he was a benefactor and a protector to them as Union men; and not a solitary act of disloyalty is proven against him in all this record.

You know, Mr. Speaker, and every member on this floor knows, that the whole district had been ransacked, and as with a fine-tooth comb raked and scraped with partisan malignity, with a spirit not of heaven nor even of earth, to find evidence against Judge Young. And yet he stands forth to-day redeemed and disenthralled of all the infamous charges affecting his loyalty. I grieve to see that the Committee of Elections, some of whom I dare call friends, men of such acute legal minds that, uninfluenced by party idiosyncracies, I would hardly dare to question a proposition put forth by them, have reported against him.

But, sir, there is a miasmatic political influence that seems to have permeated this body within the past four months that is perfectly terrific for patriots to look upon. Without intending to do wrong, men whose instincts are kindly seen to have their judgments warped so that they follow their prejudices and partisan feelings rather than the rules of justice and law. They seem to have sought in every conceivable way to bring proof against this man. They have not given him the benefit that the most-ordinary criminal has of being deemed innocent until he is proved guilty. They have gone on the opposite principle, and charged him with guilt and condemned him upon insinuations and innuendoes. Trifles light as air are to them confirmations strong as proofs of holy writ. He is simply a man who professes to be a Democrat of the States-rights school, and one who has never given aid and comfort to the rebellion, as is proved by fifteen or twenty witnesses. He declares he can take the oath, and that he will prosecute for perjury any man who dares to swear that he ever gave aid and comfort to the rebellion. But just because he happened to be in camp and seeing a gun lying there said to young Ewing, "There is a gun, take care of it," he is to be deprived of a seat in this body. No one proves that he brought that gun there, or that he ever owned it. But twelve months afterward, not ten, that young man goes into the rebel army and carries that gun with him. Therefore it is regarded as proof against Judge Young that he is a rebel, or that he encouraged men to enter the rebel army.

What do you think of such proof as that? You would not condemn the meanest chicken-thief in the country on trial before a jury upon evidence so flimsy and unreliable as this. What does it amount to? Mr. Nickell does not prove that he knows John D. Young or ever did know him, only that he saw him once. And this facile witness, this subtle, Indian-rubber gentleman, notice to take whose deposition was given at three distinct times, and was never taken when Mr. Young was present, appears and swears that he heard a man whom he thinks was Young say, "There is a Federal soldier over there; go for him." He saw him for but a moment, and then he left. And four long years afterward this man of convenient memory, this superserviceable and facile witness, swears that the man he saw was called Judge Young, and that he supposes it to be the same man. Upon this testimony, so unreliable and uncertain, you are asked to exclude one of Kentucky's purest men from a seat in this Hall, when there is not a shadow of a shade of proof that he ever was guilty of a single, solitary act of disloyalty to the Government of the United States.

Let it be remembered that this man Nickell is particularly proven by testimony of men referred to in the report of the committee, but rejected by the committee as being unfit to be believed on oath.

Further, that Judge Moore swears that in 1861 he knew two men of the name of Greenup Nickell, one sixty the other about thirty at that time, and that while he was acting as judge in Kentucky said Nickell was arraigned, if I remember, for hog stealing, and that he would not believe him on oath. The committee, in the report of Mr. McCune, as if acting as special counsel for McKee, reject this proof by their manner of reporting it, because Judge Moore was a rebel congressman, and further that he said that the younger Nickell was about thirty years of age, and this man, a noted character, was proved to be forty, thus conveying the idea that either there were three Greenup Nickells, or that Judge Moore's statement was incorrect. If the Greenup Nickell Judge Moore knew in 1861 was thirty, then he would be about thirty-eight now, and no fair man can doubt that Judge Moore was correct and knew and described this identical Nickell.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I am arguing against a foregone conclusion. I know that men, however honestly disposed, living under the miasmatic malarial influences that now surround this Capitol hardly dare to do justice toward a Democrat, I do not care who he is, for fear they should meet the fate of those at the other end of this Capitol who recently, acting under the solemnities of an oath, dared to speak their sentiments as men.

Sir, this district in Kentucky was canvassed most thoroughly, not only by the contestant in this case, but by a distinguished member now on this floor from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD] and a gentleman from Mount Sterling. They attempt to prove that they were not allowed to speak. The evidence here is that they were never interrupted, but were invariably heard with politeness and kindness throughout the length and breadth of the district, and yet it is proposed to reject the choice of that district, partly on the ground of threats by rebels to prevent discussion. Why, sir, it is notorious, among Kentuckians at least, that that district was more strongly Union, more strongly for the Government, and had more fighting men in the Union Army than any other two districts in the State, and had fewer fighting rebels than any other district; and yet this man, who is the choice of that district, is to be denied a seat here! Sir, I am not surprised at it. I am prepared for it. Once before I witnessed a vote here to strike down one of the proudest sons of Kentucky. And to-day you are again going to hold an election for a member of Congress from Kentucky; to-day you are called upon by the report of the committee to unseat the choice of Kentucky, and to give the seat to a man who has not received the votes of the people of Kentucky, in violation of the laws of the United States. And for what? I hope that gentlemen will pardon me for saying simply for partisan purposes, in my judgment.

Now, sir, I come to the law. The committee themselves reported that the contestant was not entitled to the seat. They said they could not see how they could give him the seat; nor could I. But a change has come over the spirit of their dream. It seems, according to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Urson,] that they have got up something in the Morgan and Delano case by which they are going to elect him. There is not a single proposition in the Morgan and Delano case that can by possibility come within a squirrel's jump of any similarity with this case, and yet one of the members of the committee says that thing in his report. Why? Are these men proven to be deserters? In Morgan's case the men were proven to be deserters from the Union Army. They do not accuse these men of being deserters in this case, but they accuse them of being rebels and rebel sympathizers, and therefore they propose to reject their votes.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Urson] elects Mr. McKee by 856 votes in his minority report. Then the committee—I suppose, since he must have joined with the others to make a majority report; I do not believe there ever was a majority of that committee in favor of this proposition; only four of them—they elect him by 46 votes. Now, how are you going to reconcile the committee's count of 46 votes with the count of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Urson] of 856 votes? Or how is the committee going to reconcile that with their other report, that Mr. McKee is not entitled to the seat at all? The report of Mr. Cook in this case recommends "that Samuel McKee was duly elected a member of Congress," notwithstanding Young received nearly 1,500 majority.

This same committee, 2d December, 1867, in the case of Blakey vs. Golladay, where Blakey was contending for his election as against Hise upon the same grounds of McKee, say:

"He then claimed that a comparison of the poll-books of the several precincts showed that at the election, which in the State of Kentucky is visa voce, but 23 of all the officers of election voted for him, while 219 voted for Mr. Hise, and 57 did not vote at all.

"The attention of the committee has not been called to any provision in the statutes of Kentucky prescribing in what manner the several county courts are to define political parties and ascertain the exact political faith of each appointee, so as to enable them to comply with the provisions of these statutes. Obviously they cannot resort to the poll-book of the next election, the tests to which the claimant has appealed to show that the statutes have been disregarded, for they are required to make the appointments long before these poll-books have any existence. No poll-book of an election to be held after the appointment is made can afford evidence to guide in making the appointment. If resort is to be had to the poll-book of the election next preceding the appointment, to determine the political status of the several appointees, then, for aught that appears in this case, those poll-books would show that status to be what the law requires, for no evidence from these poll-books or elsewhere was offered to show how these several officers of election voted at the election next preceding their appointment. If personal knowledge of the political opinions of men on the part of county judges, or general political reputation, are to be the guide in making the appointment of the officers of election, it is difficult to see in what manner this committee could determine that the statute had not been complied with in making the appointment. It is sufficient, however, to say that there was no offer of evidence that any such test was disregarded. But the conclusion to which the committee arrived has rendered unnecessary all speculation as to the true construction or mode of administering the law which it is claimed has been violated.

"If all that the memorialist claims in this respect be admitted, namely, that in eleven out of the twelve counties composing the district this law had not been complied with, and that a non-compliance with it renders null and void the election in those counties, still it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that no such result as is claimed by the memorialist—namely, his own election—would follow."

This same committee on March 23, 1868, made a report in this case, as reported by Mr. McClurg, in which they say:

"After an examination of the testimony the committee are not willing to say that more than 752 rebel soldiers voted for Mr. Young. Of those 86 are hereafter rejected in the entire vote of various precincts for other causes, which would reduce the vote of the rebel soldiers to 666. But the committee, finding that there is no law of Kentucky disfranchising rebel soldiers, have not been able to see how those votes can be rejected.

"The third point in contestant's notice is substantially the same as the second. The fourth is, that in a number of counties and precincts the freedom of the election was violated, and Union men prevented by reason of threats, intimidation, and force, from casting their votes for him, (McKee.)

"The committee fail to find this allegation sustained by the testimony.

"The ninth relates to the freedom of the canvass; and the committee are unable to find testimony to sustain this allegation to such a degree as to justify the rejection of votes.

"The fifth and tenth are very general, and require no comment."

In less than three months afterward this same committee, without even pretending that they have any new facts or law in the premises, now stultify themselves by overriding their deliberately expressed opinion in other cases as well as this. I respectfully ask how they can reconcile this palpable inconsistency, and I bespeak for them at the hands of others that charity which I can scarcely find the facts in the case warrant in myself.

I will tell you my surmise about it. I do not believe any member of the committee ever wrote this last report. If I were a betting man, which I am not, I would bet the whisky, which you all say is a good Democratic drink, that no member of that committee ever wrote that report. Nay, further, if the truth were known, I believe it would turn out that the committee are to-day ashamed of that report. The committee, through the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cook,] say in this report:

"It appears perfectly clear to the committee that persons who had been soldiers in the rebel army had no right to vote or to act as officers of election. They had surrendered to the Government of the United States upon the condition that each company or regimental officer should sign a parole for his men, and each man was allowed to return home, not to be disturbed by United States authority so long as he observed his parole and the laws in force where he resided."

Now, where do they find that? Where is there any proof to that effect? It is a mere assumption, without a particle of proof. They go on and say—

"These men were especially excepted from the amnesty proclaimed by the President May 29, 1865, under the tenth exception, and there appears to have been no other act of amnesty up to the time of this election which could include them; they were paroled prisoners of war."

Mr. Speaker, let us look at that a moment. I believe that point has not been touched. I am very glad they have some respect for the amnesty proclamations of Andrew Johnson, evinced by their quoting from one. I am willing to go to them to show that these men were amnestied generally. I take you upon that proposition and ask you to vote with me upon this question. Now, in the amnesty proclamation referred to, of May 29, 1865, President Johnson says:

"To the end, therefore, that the authority of the Government of the United States may be restored, and that peace, order, and freedom may be established, I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, do proclaim and declare that I hereby grant to all persons who have, directly or indirectly, participated in the existing rebellion, except as hereinafter excepted, amnesty and pardon, with restoration to all rights of property, except as to slaves, and except in cases where legal proceedings, under the laws of the United States providing for the confiscation of property of persons engaged in rebellion, have been instituted."

Remember that the question of suffrage or citizenship is not in that exception at all. It relates to property alone. But I will waive that and pass to another of Mr. Johnson's proclamations. Here is one issued on August 20, 1866. Remember that was previous to the election when Judge Young was elected, which was in May, 1867. I ask your attention to it because I believe it is the crowning point of this argument. I believe it goes directly to the gravamen of this whole issue, and throws it back to the State authority of Kentucky. The President, in this proclamation of August, says:

"And I do further proclaim that the said insurrection is at an end, and that peace, order, tranquillity and civil authority now exist in and throughout the whole of the United States of America."

The question of whether Congress has the power to disfranchise rebels of Kentucky or any other loyal State has been lugged into this debate as a make-weight, to influence the minds of the majority of this House by an appeal to a favorite hobby of the power of Congress. In reply, I say Congress has the power, and I am constrained to say will, to do any wrong almost; and we of the minority, with the Constitution itself, must bleed withal, as long as the statute-books retain un repealed and unchallenged that particular wrong. But this is not the question. Congress so far has not, directly or indirectly, passed any law touching the right of suffrage in loyal States, but still recognizes the right of States to regulate that in their own way. In the absence of any congressional law upon the subject we naturally fall back upon the State law.

Now, in what condition do you find these rebel soldiers after those proclamations? I lay down this proposition to start with: I contend that not a single solitary rebel in Kentucky is this day disfranchised from voting at all by the statute law of that State. I maintain that the veriest rebel in Kentucky, who fought during the whole war or quitted before it was ended, right or wrong by law, has to-day the same right to vote in Kentucky that I have or that Mr. McKee has. Now, the person who wrote this report must have known better; indeed I am warranted in saying that the committee knew better, for I myself, when my own case was pending before that committee, showed them the law of 1865, and read it to them. And yet they come here now and refer to the law of 1862.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COOK obtained the floor.

Mr. GOLLADAY. I ask for ten minutes more.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the gentleman's time be extended for ten minutes. He yielded ten minutes of his time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. KERR] at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cook.]

Mr. COOK. I object; and demand the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. He gave ten minutes of his time to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COOK. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order. The Chair did not deduct the time that the messages from the Senate took up in their reception.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BOWWELL in the chair.) The Chair sustains the point of order, and allows the gentleman from Kentucky five minutes additional.

Mr. GOLLADAY. I thank the Chair and my friend from Wisconsin.

Now, sir, let me read an extract from the very last report in this case, that of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cook.] He says:

"It appears perfectly clear to the committee that persons who had been soldiers in the rebel army had no right to vote or to act as officers of election. They had surrendered to the Government of the United States upon the condition that each company or regimental officer should sign a parole for his men, and each man was allowed to return home, not to be disturbed by the United States authority so long as he observed his parole and the laws in force where he resided. These men were especially excepted from the amnesty proclaimed by the President May 29, 1865, under the tenth exception, and there appears to have been no other act of amnesty up to the time of this election which could include them. They were paroled prisoners of war. No reason occurs to the committee why these men should be allowed to vote which would not apply with equal force to them while actually in the field against the Government. The only difference which appears is, that they had now been captured; their object, aim, and intent, whether in fighting or voting, was manifestly to destroy the Government. It seems absurd to say that it was a patriotic duty to kill them while they were in arms against the Government to prevent the destruction of the Government by them, and at the same time wholly illegal to refuse to allow them to accomplish the same result by their votes. The whole plan of reconstruction by Congress, as also the plan of reconstruction proposed in the proclamations of the President, has proceeded upon the assumption that those who had renounced their allegiance to the Government and fought against it have forfeited their right to vote."

Where is there any law for that? I deny the whole of that statement. There is not a particle of law for it whatever anywhere within my knowledge. That is a misstatement of fact, not intentional, I hope, but nevertheless a misstatement. They refer to what is well known in Kentucky as the disfranchising law. I submit not only that this report is erroneous, but that it is directly at war with the position taken by the committee itself. I put the decision of the committee to-day against the decision of the committee three months ago. Here is the law, the disfranchising act of March 1, 1862:

An act to amend section one, article three, chapter thirty-two, title "Elections," of the Revised Statutes.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That hereafter, so long as there are two distinct political parties in this Commonwealth, the sheriff, judges, and clerk of election, in all cases of election by the people under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and under the constitution and laws of Kentucky, shall be so selected and appointed as that one of the judges at each place of voting shall be of one political party, and the other judge of the other or opposing political party; and that a like difference shall exist at each place of voting between the sheriff and clerk of elections: Provided, That there be a sufficient number of the members of each political party resident in the several precincts as aforesaid to fill said offices. And this requirement shall be observed by all officers of this Commonwealth who have the power to appoint any of the aforesaid officers of election, under the penalty of fine of $100 for each omission, to be recovered by presentment of the grand jury.

MARCH 15, 1862.

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section one, article three, chapter thirty-two, title 'Election,' of the Revised Statutes," approved February 11, 1858.

SECTION 1. That in construing the act approved February 11, 1858, to which this is an amendment, those who have engaged in the rebellion for the overthrow of the Government, or who have in any way aided, counseled, or advised the separation of Kentucky from the Federal Union by force of arms, or adhered to those engaged in the effort to separate her from the Federal Union by force of arms, shall not be deemed one of the political parties in this Commonwealth within the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment.

SEC. 2. This act to take effect from and after its passage.

There the committee stopped. They knew no other law, or for reasons satisfactory to themselves they saw fit to cite no other law. I propose to read another law, passed December 14, 1865, by the Kentucky Legislature:

"That the act entitled 'An act to amend the fifteenth chapter of the Revised Statutes entitled 'citizens, expatriation, and aliens' passed March 11, 1862, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and all persons who may have lost any constitutional, legal, or other right or privilege by the operation of said act shall be, and are hereby, restored to the full and free use and enjoyment of the same, as completely as if said act had never been passed.

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That this act shall be in force from its passage, and may be pleaded in bar of any prosecution or any indictment or other penal proceedings growing out of said act."

Again, I refer to an act passed January 13, 1866, entitled "An act to pardon all persons who have heretofore committed the crime of treason against this Commonwealth:"

"Whereas the power to pardon persons who have committed treason against this Commonwealth is, by the constitution, vested solely in the General Assembly thereof: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That all persons who have at any time heretofore committed the offense or crime of treason against the said Commonwealth be, and they are hereby, pardoned and absolved from all the pains and penalties thereto attached.

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person heretofore indicted for such offense in any of the courts of this State may plead this act in bar of further prosecution of such indictment."

Now, I submit if there be a single, solitary elector in the ninth district of Kentucky who, by the act of the Kentucky Legislature, or by any act of the Federal Government, is not entitled to vote, that Andrew Johnson himself has proclaimed universal amnesty and restoration to all such.

And here I rest the case, in the hope that though you do emasculate the State of Kentucky further by depriving Mr. Young of his seat on this floor, as noble, gallant, and glorious a representative as ever sat in this Hall, you will not insult Kentucky by foisting upon her by your vote a man whom she spurned and repelled at the polls, and against whose representative of her sentiments as one of Kentucky's humblest representatives on this floor, in her name and in the name of liberty and justice, I enter my most solemn protest.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the amendment of the House to Senate bill No. 450, relative to filing reports of railroad companies.

It further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 175) for the relief of Joseph McGhee Cameron and Mary Jane Cameron, minor children of La Fayette Cameron, deceased;

An act (S. No. 232) for the relief of Henrietta Nolles;

An act (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Carrie E. Burdett;

An act (S. No. 484) for the relief of Elizabeth Barker, widow of Alexander Barker, deceased;

An act (S. No. 456) for the relief of Sylvester Nugent;

An act (S. No. 457) granting a pension to Elizabeth J. Miller, widow of General John Miller;

An act (S. No. 494) granting a pension to Elizabeth Steepleton, widow of Harrison W. Steepleton, deceased;

An act (S. No. 495) for the relief of Henry Reens;

An act (S. No. 496) granting a pension to Riley H. Smith;

An act (S. No. 497) for the relief of Catharine Wands;

An act (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Anna M. Howard;

An act (S. No. 499) granting a pension to the widow and child of Martin Whitt, deceased;

An act (S. No. 500) granting a pension to Lucinda R. Johnson;

An act (S. No. 501) granting a pension to Harriet W. Pond;

An act (S. No. 516) granting a pension to Julia Whistler;

An act (S. No. 517) granting a pension to the widow and children of Henry Brown;

An act (S. No. 518) granting a pension to the widow and child of John P. Petty;

An act (S. No. 519) granting a pension to Mrs. Emma M. Moore;

An act (S. No. 520) granting a pension to Martha Stout;

An act (S. No. 521) granting a pension to the children of William M. Wooten, deceased;

An act (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Hannah Cook;

An act (S. No. 546) for the relief of Jane M. Murray;

An act (S. No. 547) granting a pension to John Sheets;

An act (S. No. 548) granting a pension to Amanda Stackhouse and children of Parkes J. Stackhouse, deceased; and

An act (S. No. 549) granting increase of pension to Catharine Eckhardt.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COOK. I demand the previous question.

Mr. MUNGEN. I move that the House adjourn.

The question being put on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 25, noes 69; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. UPSON. Is it necessary to have a quorum?

Mr. MUNGEN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TRIMBLE] wishes to make a speech on this question, which he is now prepared to make. I hope the House will allow him the opportunity.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not press the previous question now, but will let me have thirty minutes on Monday. This is an important question.

Mr. COOK. It is apparent that I cannot press this question on Monday after the tax bill comes up, and I must, therefore, insist on the previous question.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will consent that I shall have an opportunity to express my views on this question. I have not troubled the House often.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman from Kentucky will be satisfied with thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. It is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cook,] as the Chair understands, that the discussion shall continue, but that by unanimous consent the previous question shall be understood to be seconded at the close of this day's session.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will that require the gentleman from Kentucky to make his speech this evening?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Then I object.

Mr. BECK. I desire to know if the House will grant me leave to publish my views on this case?

There was no objection, and the leave was granted.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. After a session of five hours I do not feel like inflicting on the House a speech at this time. I would like to have time on Monday morning.

Mr. COOK. I have promised part of my time to the gentleman's colleague, [Mr. ADAMS.]

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. By general consent there will still be an opportunity to have the vote taken on this question before the tax bill comes up.

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois what pressing necessity there is to demand the previous question this day on this case? It has occupied the committee for four or five months, and now we have had but two hours, discussion upon it. There are other gentlemen here from Kentucky who would like to say a word on this case.

Mr. MULLINS. And Tennessee wants to say something.

Mr. JONES. It is a great question affecting the sovereignty of the States, and I say it is unfair, improper, and unmanly to demand the previous question on it. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. COOK. The tax bill comes up on Monday.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the House adjourn; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. UPSON. I rise to a question of order. Has there been any action in the House since a motion to adjourn was voted down?

The SPEAKER. That motion was withdrawn.

Mr. ROBINSON. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will not the gentleman from Illinois consent that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TRIMBLE] shall speak for thirty minutes on Monday morning? There is no disposition to occupy the time of the House.

Mr. COOK. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TRIMBLE] that I have already promised thirty minutes of my closing hour to his colleague, [Mr. ADAMS;] and thirty minutes ought to be reserved for those who shall defend the other side of the proposition. That seems to me to be right and reasonable.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I understand a proposition to have been made that Judge TRIMBLE may go on to-night for thirty minutes. Now I propose that by unanimous consent he shall be allowed thirty minutes on Monday morning, not to come out of the hour of the gentleman from Illinois; and that then the previous question shall be considered as seconded.

Mr. COOK. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Kentucky shall have any time that the House will allow him, if it is not to come out of my time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will it be understood, then, that at the end of Judge TRIMBLE's thirty minutes the previous question will operate?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. That is understood.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House the condition of business, which, of course, accumulates toward the close of the session. After the morning hour on Monday the first business in order will be the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the report of the committee of conference on the bill removing political disabilities. That, unlike other business, can be taken up and acted on at any time, whatever else may be before the House. It is the only character of business that can be taken up when other business is being transacted, being highly privileged. The motion to reconsider will come up immediately after the morning hour. When that shall have been disposed of, if the previous question should not be operating at the adjournment to-night, this election case will then be resumed; but if the Committee of Ways and Means should demand the floor, they will be entitled to it under the order of the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour of Monday be dispensed with.

Mr. HARDING. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the hour of meeting Monday be eleven o'clock a. m. instead of twelve o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent. Is there any objection?

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and that will be the order.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

Mr. KELSEY. I object.

Several MEMBERS. The objection is too late.

Mr. HARDING. I will withdraw my objection to dispensing with the morning hour of Monday.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I renew the objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the morning hour of Monday will not be dispensed with.

Mr. PRUYN. I ask unanimous consent that the House meet at half past six o'clock Monday morning and adjourn for the day at eleven o'clock.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman can come here as early as he pleases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PRUYN] asks unanimous consent that the House meet at half past six o'clock on Monday morning and adjourn for the day at eleven o'clock. Is there objection?

Objection was made by several members.

The SPEAKER. Then the hour of meeting will be eleven o'clock.

Mr. SPALDING. How can that be?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] asked unanimous consent that the hour of meeting on Monday next be eleven o'clock.

Mr. SPALDING. And I objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked if there was any objection, and hearing none, said that there was no objection.

Mr. SPALDING. I certainly objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard the gentleman make an objection after the announcement.

Mr. SPALDING. I certainly objected before any announcement was made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I was listening for objections and I heard none.

Mr. SPALDING. I say I did object.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman states that he made his objection in time, before the Chair made the announcement, of course the Chair will entertain the objection.

Mr. SPALDING. I certainly did object, both before and after the announcement.

The SPEAKER. Then objection being made, the hour of meeting on Monday will be twelve o'clock m.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it in order to move that the House now take a recess until eleven o'clock Monday morning?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] has moved that the House now adjourn, and the motion to adjourn takes precedence of the motion to take a recess. Should the motion to adjourn be withdrawn or voted down, then a motion for a recess would be in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion to adjourn, so that I may submit a motion for a recess.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the House take a recess until eleven o'clock on Monday morning, with the understanding that after this case has been resumed for a half an hour the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to ask a parliamentary question of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order, but the Chair will answer a parliamentary question.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If the House shall take a recess until eleven o'clock on Monday morning, will any business set down for consideration on Monday come up before twelve o'clock?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Then what will be the advantage of taking a recess until that time?

The SPEAKER. The session of to-day, and the consideration of the business pending at the time the recess is taken will be resumed at eleven o'clock and continued until twelve o'clock, when the session of Monday will begin.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I have no objection to that.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. GARFIELD for a recess until eleven o'clock a. m. on Monday next; and upon a division there were—ayes 84, noes 15.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until eleven o'clock a. m. on Monday next.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The House at eleven o'clock a. m. [Monday, June 22, 1868] resumed its session of Saturday.

DAVID VAN NORDSTRAND.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, took from the Speaker's table the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 455, granting a pension to David Van Nordstrand.

The amendment of the Senate provided that the pension should commence on the "9th of October, 1864," instead of "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BLAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in;

and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN.

Mr. BLAINE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is hereby directed to include in the deficiency bill a provision fixing the salary of the Assistant Librarian in charge of the Hall Library the same as that paid to the file, printing, and enrolling clerks.

Mr. BLAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSION BILLS REFERRED.

The following pension bills from the Senate were, by unanimous consent, taken from the Speaker's table, severally read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

An act (S. No. 175) for the relief of Joseph McGhee Cameron and Mary Jane Cameron, minor children of La Fayette Cameron, deceased;

An act (S. No. 232) for the relief of Henrietta Nolles;

An act (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Carrie E. Burdett;

An act (S. No. 434) for the relief of Elizabeth Barker, widow of Alexander Barker, deceased;

An act (S. No. 456) for the relief of Sylvester Nugent;

An act (S. No. 457) granting a pension to Elizabeth J. Miller, widow of General John Miller;

An act (S. No. 494) granting a pension to Elizabeth Steepleton, widow of Harrison W. Steepleton, deceased;

An act (S. No. 495) for the relief of Henry Reens;

An act (S. No. 496) granting a pension to Riley H. Smith;

An act (S. No. 497) for the relief of Catharine Wands;

An act (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Anna M. Howard;

An act (S. No. 499) granting a pension to the widow and child of Martin Whitt, deceased;

An act (S. No. 500) granting a pension to Lucinda R. Johnson;

An act (S. No. 501) granting a pension to Harriet W. Pond;

An act (S. No. 516) granting a pension to Julia Whistler;

An act (S. No. 517) granting a pension to the widow and children of Henry Brown;

An act (S. No. 518) granting a pension to the widow and child of John P. Petty;

An act (S. No. 519) granting a pension to Mrs. Emma M. Moore;

An act (S. No. 520) granting a pension to Martha Stout;

An act (S. No. 521) granting a pension to the children of William M. Wooten, deceased;

An act (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Hannah Cook;

An act (S. No. 546) for the relief of Jane M. Murray;

An act (S. No. 547) granting a pension to John Sheets;

An act (S. No. 548) granting a pension to Amanda Stackhouse and children of Parkes J. Stackhouse, deceased; and

An act (S. No. 549) granting increase of pension to Catharine Eckhardt.

PRINTING OF INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. CAKE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That one thousand extra copies of the bill revising the internal tax on whisky and tobacco, &c., be printed for the use of the House.

ELECTION CONTEST—M'KEE VS. YOUNG.

The House resumed the consideration of the contested-election case of McKee vs. Young, in the ninth congressional district of Kentucky,

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky, being entitled to the floor.

Mr. COOK. I deem it proper that I should call the attention of the House to a section of an act passed on the 2d day of March, 1867, and to say that the section being incorporated in an act having no relation to the general subject of legislative declarations on the subject of secession and rebellion had escaped my notice, and so far as I know the notice of members of the committee. I deem it but fair and just, therefore, to call the attention of the House to that section. It is as follows:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That section one of the act entitled 'An act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes,' approved June 20, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, continued in full force and effect for three years from and after the close of the rebellion, as announced by the President of the United States by proclamation bearing date the 20th day of August, 1866."

I was not aware that there was any statute which gave any legislative declaration about the close of the rebellion. This section being incorporated in an appropriation bill escaped my notice.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky, addressed the House. [See Appendix.] Before concluding, he said: I believe, Mr. Speaker, I have three minutes of my time remaining, and I will yield them to my colleague, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. BECK. I wish to state two facts, but I do not think I can do it in three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The session of Saturday will expire at twelve o'clock m. and then the business of the morning hour of Monday will begin.

Mr. BECK. I will wait and get ten minutes of the time of my colleague, [Mr. ADAMS.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] have the three minutes given to him by his colleague [Mr. TRIMBLE] when the debate is resumed, and that only seven minutes be deducted from the time of his other colleague, [Mr. ADAMS.]

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. COOK. I now demand the previous question, and will let the subject go over in that way.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at twelve o'clock m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Mrs. Mary Tiffany, of Schenectady, New York, for relief.

Also, the petition of citizens of Fayette, Blanco, and Kerr counties, for a division of said State.

Also, remonstrance of John Beeson, against the payment of any money to speculators in Indian wars.

Also, a remonstrance of Howard Wiswall, of Washington, North Carolina, against being included in the act relieving from disabilities, as he had never been disloyal to the Government of the United States.

By Mr. BANKS: A memorial of the mechanics employed in the navy-yard at Washington, District of Columbia, praying that they may be included in the list of employes of the Government to whom an increase of twenty per cent. on their pay may be given.

Also, a memorial of John Beeson, praying for the abolishment of the Indian Bureau, and the establishment in the place thereof of an Indian department of the Government, for the purpose of better protection of the Indian tribes from unjust treatment, together with a proposed system for the better government of the Indians.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of James Murphy, of Maine, asking compensation for time unjustly detained as a deserter.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 22, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. A. D. GILLETTE, D. D.

On motion of Mr. MORTON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday last was dispensed with.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1035) authorizing the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York to change its location, and the bill (H. R. No. 1282) authorizing certain banks named therein to change their names, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the National Typographical Union, held at Washington, District of Columbia, June 3, 1868, in favor of the passage of a law making eight hours a legal day's work; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the National Typographical Union, held in Washington city, June 4, 1868, against the passage of an international copyright law; which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, asking that the soldiers of the war of 1812 and the widows of deceased soldiers be placed on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLEY presented the petition of James C. White, of Portsmouth, Virginia, praying a removal of the civil disabilities imposed on him by acts of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. YATES presented a memorial of settlers on Cherokee neutral lands, asking that they may purchase their homes at $1 25 per acre, and protesting against the granting of large tracts to railroads; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOWE presented the memorial of G. E. Weiss and L. B. Rice, inspectors of customs of the port of Milwaukee, remonstrating against an American register being granted to the schooner Victoria, a Canadian-built vessel; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER. I present a petition from Rev. Rufus Ellis, of Boston, pastor of the First Church there, and several other persons, leading members of that society, in which they set forth that they have ordered from England painted glass windows to be used in their new church which they are now building, valued at from ten to fifteen thousand dollars, and which are expected to arrive in this country about the 1st of October next. They state that it was found impossible at any expense to procure first-class work of this character in the United States; and believing that the undertaking will tend to raise the standard of taste in matters of art, and will facilitate and improve manufactures of that character in the United States as being the most considerable attempt yet made to supply good models; and also in consideration of the expense of the enterprise, they respectfully ask the remission of the duties on this glass. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I have received, and been asked to present what is entitled "a memorial" from William Cornell Jewett, in which he asks Congress to establish a Government bank, and through that a financial policy, under which, according to the statement of his petition, the national debt will be consolidated, its redemption provided for without any tax upon the people or the future care of Congress, and the national honor protected. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the resolution (S. R. No. 151) to drop from the rolls of the Army certain officers absent without authority from their commands, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 149) authorizing the sale of damaged or unserviceable arms, ordnance, and ordnance stores, reported it without amendment.

SITE OF FORT COVINGTON.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 264) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Covington, in the State of Maryland, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. It is a joint resolution containing but one section, and, if there is no objection, I should like to put it on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of War to sell in entirety or by subdivisions, at public auction to the highest bidder, after thirty days' notice in three daily newspapers in the city of Baltimore, one of which newspapers shall be published in the German language, a certain tract of land belonging to the United States, situated within the limits of that city, on the Patapsco river, Maryland, known as the site of Fort Covington, containing about two and three quarters acres, more or less, with all the tenements, rights, and privileges pertaining thereto; and the proceeds of the sale are to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply state that the joint resolution has the approval of the War Department, and is recommended by the Department.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. CONNESS. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 768) concerning the rights of American citizens in foreign States.

Mr. SUMNER. I object to its consideration to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution must lie over under the rules.

Mr. CONNESS. I give notice that to-morrow I will ask the Senate to consider this resolution, and at the same time submit some remarks in connection therewith.

ELIZABETH CARSON.

Mr. WILLEY. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 536.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 536) for the relief of Elizabeth Carson was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its terms the Secretary of the Treasury is to pay to Elizabeth Carson, of Bourbon county, Kentucky, the sum of $2,630 40, in full satisfaction for subsistence, use of jail, fuel, fire, care, and attention furnished by her to conscripts, deserters, and rebel prisoners confined in the jail of Bourbon county, Kentucky, by the military authorities of the United States in the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What committee reported that bill?

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the reading of the report of the Committee on Claims.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, made by Mr. WILLEY on the 12th instant:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Carson, praying compensation for subsistence furnished to prisoners confined in the Bourbon county jail, in Kentucky, by order of the military authorities of the United States, from

August, 1862, to the latter part of 1865, having considered the same, beg leave to report:

That Mrs. Carson is a widow, residing in Bourbon county, in the State of Kentucky, and was from August, 1862, to the latter part of the year 1865, the keeper of the jail in said county; that during that time the military authorities of the United States then stationed in said county took control of said jail as a military prison and compelled her to furnish subsistence for conscripts and for deserters from the United States Army and prisoners taken from the rebel forces; that during said time she furnished subsistence, amounting in all to four thousand three hundred and eighty-four days' subsistence, for prisoners placed in said jail by said military authorities; that said authorities never paid a cent therefor; that said petitioner kept an accurate account of the number of days' subsistence thus furnished, which is filed with her petition, with evidence of the justice and truth thereof; that she also claims compensation for fire furnished in the prison for a portion of said time, and also for fuel furnished to the guards around the jail, and also for rent for said jail; and her charges for subsistence are at the rates of seventy-five cents per day, and for fire thirty-five cents per day, which were the rates allowed by law in that jail for keeping persons confined therein under the civil law. Her total claim thus made out amounts to the sum of $4,618 70.

Upon examination of the facts, and upon consideration of the case, the committee are of opinion to allow her sixty cents for each day's subsistence, making the sum $2,630 40, in full discharge of her account. Accordingly they report the accompanying bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 455) granting a pension to David Van Nordstrand.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 450) relative to filing reports of railroad companies;

A bill (S. No. 426) for the relief of Thomas Crossley;

A bill (S. No. 184) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Corcoran; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 184) authorizing a change of mail service between Fort Abercrombie and Helena.

THANKS TO SECRETARY STANTON.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate to Hon. Edwin M. Stanton the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, signed by the Presiding Officers thereof, presenting to him the thanks of Congress for his eminent public services while Secretary for the Department of War.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO.

Mr. YATES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 11.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Let the title of the bill be read that we may know what it is.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. No. 11) to admit the State of Colorado into the Union."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope that bill will not be taken up in the morning hour.

Mr. YATES. It will take but a few minutes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to say to my friend from Illinois that at one o'clock to-day I shall ask the Senate to indulge me in taking up the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. YATES. This will not interfere with that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 15, noes 3; no quorum voting.

Mr. YATES. I suppose it is necessary to ask for the yeas and nays. I wish to make a statement to the Senate, and then I think the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Chair will put the question again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask that the vote be taken over again.

The question being again put, there were, on a division—ayes 21, noes 8.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 11) to admit the State of Colorado into the Union.

The preamble recites that on the 21st of March, 1864, Congress passed an act to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and offered to admit that State, when so formed, into the Union upon compliance with certain conditions therein specified; that it appears by a message of the President of the United States, dated January —, 1866, that the said people have adopted a constitution which, upon due examination, is found to conform to the provisions and comply with the conditions of that act, and to be republican in its form of government, and that they now ask for admission into the Union. The bill therefore proceeds to enact that the constitution and State government which the people of Colorado have formed for themselves be accepted, ratified, and confirmed; and to declare the State of Colorado to be one of the United States of America, which is admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever.

The second section declares Colorado to be entitled to all the rights, privileges, grants, and immunities, and to be subject to all the conditions and restrictions of an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved March 21, 1864.

The third section provides that the act shall take effect with the fundamental and perpetual condition that within the State of Colorado there shall be no abridgment or denial of the exercise of the elective franchise or of any other right to any person by reason of race or color, (excepting Indians not taxed;) and neither this condition nor the laws of Congress securing such equality of rights now in force in the Territory of Colorado shall be abrogated or set aside, anything in the constitution or laws of that State to the contrary notwithstanding, the right to require and enforce a compliance with and obedience to this condition being reserved to Congress.

The Committee on Territories propose to amend the bill by adding as a new section:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the acting Governor of the Territory of Colorado, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, by proclamation, to call a general election to choose members of the State Legislature and State officers to fill the places of all whose terms of office shall have expired under said constitution. Said election shall be held, and the legal voters registered under the laws now in force in said Territory. The time for holding said election shall be fixed not more than ninety days after the passage of this act, and the time for the meeting of the Legislature at the capital of the Territory and the installation of the State officers shall be fixed, not more than thirty days after said election, by said proclamation. All the officers so elected shall continue in office until the commencement of the next constitutional term of their offices respectively: Provided, That before being admitted to representation in Congress, the Legislature so elected and convened shall ratify the amendment to the Constitution of the United States known as the fourteenth article, and also the fundamental conditions herein imposed. And in case said Legislature shall refuse to ratify said amendment and said conditions this act shall be null and void.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I do not know precisely what amendments the Committee on Territories propose to this bill; but I am very sure they cannot lick it into any shape that will command my vote. I am utterly hostile to making little boys put on men's clothes and men's hats before their time. The idea of erecting a State government in a Territory that cannot possibly have over about thirty thousand inhabitants to me seems preposterous; and it is utterly impossible for the gentlemen who represent the Committee on Territories to show, by any census that has been taken, or by any vote that has been given, or by any production of the country, that Colorado has even that amount of population. Then they come here with a constitution made by a mob, or not made under any authority of law, either of Congress or the Territory, and ask us to adopt it and accept it, and receive men from them as Senators and Representatives.

Mr. President, in relation to these vast Territories in the West, we ought to have some order, some system or rule, by which we shall admit one and all when they have arrived at their proper stature and growth. I am utterly opposed to admitting any State until it has at least a population sufficient for one Representative in the House of Representatives. To admit them before that time is to try a very poor experiment, in my judgment. It imposes a heavy expense upon the people without adequate compensation, and it is unfair to the rest of the Union.

I know it is claimed here that this Territory within the last year or two has increased rapidly in population; but if gentlemen will take out that kind of population that has been drawn there temporarily in consequence of the construction of a railroad across the State they will find that the actual population has possibly been diminished. There is no evidence of an increase. As I understand, it is not much of an agricultural country; its great attraction has been as a gold-mining country, and the yield of gold has been steadily decreasing from year to year. Let me call the attention of the Senate to this great decrease.

Mr. NYE. What document does the Senator propose to read from?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. A document that appears to come from an honest man, who is willing to tell the truth about Colorado, as I wish that others would be, and no doubt they are. But, sir, I will not read from it; I will make a statement without going into details. The fact is, according to the reports on finance, that whereas the Territory as long ago as 1832 and 1863 produced something like two million and a half or more of gold, it has been steadily decreasing; so that in 1866 it produced in value but little over a million, and in 1867 less than a million dollars.

I know that it is claimed that the amount of internal revenue tax has increased, showing that the population must have increased; but I have a statement here from a gentleman of that Territory, by the name of Teller, which shows that the chief amount of increase was derived from the importation of whisky in bond, and that one party alone paid something like thirty thousand dollars of taxes on that, and consequently there was an increase of internal revenue of about three thousand dollars. I think these facts prove only that Colorado is a better place than some others to collect the tax on whisky.

But, Mr. President, as I said in the first place, I am utterly opposed to having any of these Territories admitted until they have the requisite population. If this bill provided that a new census should be taken, and on its being shown that Colorado had a sufficient amount of population to entitle it to a Representative in the other House; that the people should go on and make a constitution by a convention duly authorized by law, and then submit it to the popular vote, I should be willing, should it be accepted by the people, to vote for a bill admitting the State, but not otherwise. I understand that this bill contemplates nothing of that character.

Sir, look at these Territories. Many of them, if they ever become peopled, ought to be divided into several States. Some of them contain territory sufficient for two, three, or four large States; others may not ever become populated so as to require to be cut up. Once admitted as States, however unwieldy in size, they must forever so remain. Let us wait at least until they have developed the country sufficiently to know whether they are to become large and populous or not, and if they are likely to become populous, we ought to move with such rapidity as not to reserve the power in our hands to divide them into States of proper dimensions. It may be that we ought to make out of some of them two, three, or four States. This early, hasty action, pushed on for no other conceivable motive than because a few very excellent gentlemen desire to represent that country in Congress, is, it seems to me, utterly unstatesmanlike. We surely ought not to act upon any such ground or motive. For one I hope that we shall either set aside and postpone the whole matter, or else make out a plan, as was formerly the custom of Congress, to authorize the people of the Territories to meet together and form a constitution in convention, properly called, to have a census taken, and then present the constitution here, and if everything shall be in fit shape and in the order that has been almost the uniform practice of our forefathers, then allow them to come in for admission, and not otherwise.

Mr. CRAGIN. I desire to offer a few remarks in reply to the Senator from Vermont. Being a member of the Committee on Territories, and having examined this question with considerable care, I desire to state briefly the reasons why I am in favor of the passage of this bill.

The Senator says that he is opposed to the clothing of young boys in the garments of men. As a general principle, I should be opposed to that proceeding; but the Senator from Vermont probably will remember that in 1864, when he was a member of the House of Representatives, Congress passed enabling acts authorizing Colorado, Nebraska, and Nevada to form State constitutions preparatory to admission into the Union.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. And the people of Colorado acted under that and rejected it.

Mr. CRAGIN. And, Mr. President, so desirous was Congress at that time for the admission of these Territories that there were not men enough opposed to the proposition in either branch of Congress to call for the yeas and nays. The enabling acts passed without a division in both branches of Congress, and Nebraska and Nevada have been admitted under those acts with as great irregularities in the formation of their constitutions as in the case of Colorado.

Colorado, by the census of 1860, had a population of over thirty-four thousand inhabitants, more than either of the other Territories which have since been admitted into the Union; and to-day I believe as much as believe that I am standing in this Chamber that Colorado has more inhabitants than either Nebraska or Nevada has, certainly more than Nebraska had at the time she was admitted into the Union, and recent votes demonstrate my position. The last vote in Colorado, last fall, was 9,849. The vote in Nebraska just prior to her admission, on the question of the election of a member of Congress, was only 8,041; and the last election in Nevada for member of Congress showed only 9,842 votes, less than the vote in Colorado at last fall's election.

Now, Mr. President, if there was any reason in 1864 why this Territory, in conjunction with Nebraska and Nevada, should be admitted into the Union as a State, that reason exists now, and exists with stronger force, for Colorado since that day has been developed in her resources, her population has increased, and she is better prepared to assume the responsibilities of a State, and more entitled to be admitted here.

The Senator from Vermont says that her constitution was made by a mob. I do not know to what he refers. I know the constitution was formed, submitted to the people, voted upon, and a majority of those voting voted for its adoption. In Nebraska the Legislature formed the constitution and submitted it to the people, and it was ratified, and we accepted it here and admitted the State. In Colorado the constitution was formed by a convention elected by the people, and then their work was submitted to the people, and by them ratified.

Now, briefly, to show the resources of this Territory, and as an evidence of its population, I will refer to one item only, for I do not intend to occupy time in this discussion. The last report of the Postmaster General shows that the receipts of the Department from Colorado increased from $16,781 05 in 1864, at the time the enabling act was passed, to $32,580 24 in 1867. The receipts of the Post Office Department have doubled since the population of Colorado was shown to be over thirty-four thousand. As compared with Nebraska, Oregon, Nevada, Arkansas, and Florida, the receipts from Colorado were considerably larger than the receipts from either of those States. From Nebraska the receipts were $30,770 89; from Oregon, $28,656 23; from Nevada, $22,550 18. The post office receipts were $10,000 less in the State of Nevada than they were in the Territory of Nevada.

Mr. President, the Committee on Territories have examined this question; they have become satisfied that the people of Colorado almost unanimously desire admission; and they have reported this bill with amendments practically resubmitting the question to the people; for if the Legislature which is to be elected under this bill shall refuse to accept the conditions and adopt the constitutional amendment, then this act is to be null and void. The question of admission will enter into the election, which will result from this bill, of members of the Legislature.

I hope, therefore, that this bill will be passed, and that we may admit this Territory. After this is done, I shall be ready to join with the Senator from Vermont, whenever any other Territories come here, and require that they shall have a population equal to the population required for a member of Congress in the old States. But under the circumstances, that enabling act having been passed inviting this Territory with Nevada and Nebraska to come into the Union, and the people having accepted it, I think the plighted faith of this nation is pledged practically to their admission.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRAGIN. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Did not the people of Colorado, when they were called upon to vote under that authorization of Congress, reject the constitution that was framed?

Mr. CRAGIN. At the first trial they did reject it, and then afterward another constitution was formed and submitted to the people, and they adopted it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Was it made by any legal, authorized authority? Was it not made by a convention of the people? In other words, it might as well be called a mob, so far as any legal authority is concerned.

Mr. CRAGIN. It was made by a convention elected by the people.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But not authorized by the territorial Legislature or by Congress.

Mr. CRAGIN. I would suggest to the Senator that the constitution of Nebraska was made by the territorial Legislature and submitted to the people.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am now talking about this one.

Mr. NYE. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Vermont if that makes any difference? Does the Constitution prescribe any manner in which a State shall make its constitution? It ought to be the will of the people; that is all that is required.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to say a word on this subject, because the honorable Senator from Vermont so fiercely attacks the conclusions to which the committee have come, and treats them as of so little consequence to him that he says it is impossible to lick the thing into shape so that he can lick it after us—a delicate expression, and one that conveys undoubtedly the full meaning of hatred to this proposition which the honorable Senator entertains! Sir, I owe no apology to this Senate, and especially to the Senator from Vermont, that I stand here representing in part a new State. I come here as a representative of that State at the request of this Government. When States were falling out of this Union, and it was necessary to put in braces, new States were invited to fill up the vacuum that had so unnaturally occurred. To that invitation Nevada listened in the hour of the Government's necessities, not her's; for it was at a sacrifice to her own personal interests and her own personal expenses that she took upon herself the burden of a State government at the request of the honorable Senator from Vermont, as he says himself. Therefore, I owe no apology for standing here in the sisterhood of States as the representative of a State on an equality with the State of Vermont.

Neither does Colorado deserve to be treated with that utter contempt which the manner and the language the honorable Senator from Vermont has seen fit to use would indicate. She was invited at the same time. The good men of that State rallied to perform what the Government requested. Sir, they were no mob. They were men who shared the honors and the defeats of this war, men who are scar-worn now, and whose fidelity to this Union never failed in the darkest hour of its necessity, men whose character and reputation, both public and private, would not suffer in comparison with those of any Senator on this floor. Therefore, I insist upon it, whatever the honorable Senator's objection may be to the passage of this bill, that he was not at liberty to treat those who shared in this effort with that apparent contempt which his language would indicate.

But, sir, let us go a little further. I know something of the West and of the necessities of the western States and Territories. I assert here that any man who will sit carefully down and read the act organizing one of these Territories will find that it is not broad enough nor deep enough nor wide enough to protect the interests of a mighty growing people like that of Colorado or Nevada, with the new interests which those enactments did not contemplate; and therefore, as a matter of protection, they require a State government. Sir, I have not yet reached that point that I despise the day of small things. The growth of Nevada or the growth of Colorado will not be like the growth of Vermont by any means. Vermont has been growing for a century, and she is not overgrown yet, but these Territories and these States leap at once, by the indisputable power of the rush of emigration, into manhood. The broad fields of the West for pastoral and agricultural purposes invite emigration, and to-day more bushels of grain are grown in Colorado than in Vermont. Vermont is a purchaser of Colorado. In addition to her precious metals Colorado has far more inviting fields, her acres are broader and deeper; and therefore the growth of Vermont furnishes no parallel by which the honorable Senator can judge of these new States. Look at the city of Cheyenne to-day upon the plains in a newly-organized Territory, and it equals any city almost in the State of Vermont. In point of population Cheyenne to-day will equal, and more than equal, Burlington or Bennington, or any of those towns. Vermont's most energetic sons, save the honorable Senator himself, are going there, and they will be Vermonters there.

But, sir, I have heard whispers here of a growing jealousy of the West, and it all comes from one direction. I share in none of these prejudices. I appeal to Senators on this floor; I appeal to the Senators from Massachusetts and the Senators from New York, if my vote has ever been cast up on any such ground of jealousy of the East. No, sir; our growth is the growth of the East. In the State of Nevada will be found Massachusetts' most enterprising sons; and they bring with them their institutions and the love for them that makes it a loyal State. In Colorado will be found the sons of Vermont. They bring with them the habits of industry and economy and frugality which stamp New England's greatness everywhere, and the West glories in it. It is this combined energy, this emigrating power of the older States, that is building up new ones like the gourd in the night, that will reflect back the principles of New England improved by their expansion upon the broad plains of the West. Sir, I hope we shall hear no more of that jealousy. It was a similar cry that once rent this Union in twain—North; South! I appeal to the Senator from Vermont if there has not been a new birth of this nation. We are one and indivisible. I share in the honor and glory of Colorado as much as I do in that of Vermont or Nevada.

I repudiate the idea that the people of Colorado are asking anything that the Government has not invited them to ask. This is the feast to which the Government invited them, and they come as soon as they may. They have come here clad in the garments of loyalty to this Government, and I insist upon it that the honorable Senator from Vermont is not at liberty to treat them with that disrespect which he so earnestly and so short-handedly did this morning.

We had the question up a year or two ago, and the honorable Senator on my left [Mr. SUMNER] took grounds against it, because he wanted a greater number of population. Sir, it does not make so much odds what the number is as what the quality is. That is what makes a State, the energy of the people. What are you going to do with Colorado? You have admitted Nebraska on the one side with a population less than hers, or no more; you have admitted Nevada on the other to the same feast, on the same invitation; and now the honorable Senator from Vermont rises here and says to Colorado, "Notwithstanding you are invited and the feast prepared, yet two meals have been eaten, and you shall not have the other; we are going to keep that in reserve until you grow to be a great people." Look at the reasoning of the honorable Senator. He is going to wait until they grow up sufficiently to make two or three States before he will admit them. What a sensible thing that will be, to keep these Territories until they get population enough to make two or three States, so that they can be divided up! Why did you not think of that when you admitted Arkansas? Why did you not think of that when you admitted Florida? Why did you not think of that in the case of Rhode Island? We poll more votes in my State to-day than they do in the State of Rhode Island; and yet we find no fault about it. To be sure, we are not all huddled in together as they are there; but we are spread out upon wide extended plains, and in the mountain gorges; but what of that? We are one people. We are there beating the mountains fine, in scriptural parlance, and filling up the valleys; and yet to-day, with the marks of our swaddling clothes still upon us, the whistle of the engine and the rattling of the train is heard in that new-born State.

But my honorable friend says he would keep us in a territorial condition until we get large enough to make three or four States, so that Congress could cut it up and equalize it. Why, sir, the claim of the West is that New England has got too small States. She huddles twelve Senators right in a nest there. I share not in that feeling. The complaint of the East is that the States of the West are too large; but that gives the East always the preponderance. Sir, who would strike at Ohio because she is larger than Vermont? Who would strike off Illinois, admitted with a population of forty-five thousand, because she spreads so widely over the prairies, and to-day attracts the eyes of the world for her aggregated wealth? Who would strike Wisconsin, because she is larger than Massachusetts, from the sisterhood of States? Who that has looked at the growth of the great Northwest, magical as it has been, would compel the new communities springing up there to wait until by the plodding necessities of New England, Vermont included, they wended their way in wagons there, until they had population enough to be cut up into two or three States? Sir, I repudiate that idea. I say that the faith of this nation is pledged to admit Colorado. She lies now right at the gateway of this mighty West. The whistle is first heard upon her domain across the Missouri, and its last notes sound as it goes into the gorges of the Rocky mountains. With widespread pastoral fields, with fields now waving with the ripening grain, with mines rich in themselves, with an energetic population—all save one, and that is Teller—she asks to be admitted. She has stood here by her representatives and knocked until their knocks have gone far into the night in response to our own invitation. It is time that we should let this people in, and have none of this little jealousy.

Mr. President, I insist upon it that the Committee on Territories, when they laid this report on the honorable Senator's desk, laid it there with full as much confidence in its correctness as he has in the statements of Mr. Teller. There is the fruit of the examination of the committee; and I can say that this subject has not only been examined now, but it has been under the examination of that committee for more than two years.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to ask my friend from Nevada a question which I think is material to the decision we are about to make. I want to ask him the population of Colorado, and what data and what evidence he has got on that subject?

Mr. NYE. I was coming to that. I read from the report of the committee:

"The Commissioner of the General Land Office"—who is generally suspected to have about as much information as Teller—

"in his last report estimates the present population of Colorado at about one hundred thousand. Others estimate it at from seventy-five to one hundred thousand. While these may be over estimates, the facts above cited show that thirty or forty thousand, as claimed by the opponents of admission, must be too low."

Then it goes on to state the population of other States at the time of their admission:

"Ohio was admitted in 1802. The census of 1800 gave her a population of forty-five thousand and twenty-eight."

Mr. FESSENDEN. What was the ratio of representation then?

Mr. NYE. I do not remember—less than it is now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Was not that population then equal to the ratio?

Mr. SUMNER. That was required under the ordinance that there should be enough for a member.

Mr. NYE. Does the honorable Senator from Massachusetts mean to say that it was very irregular or illegal to admit a State with less population than that?

Mr. SUMNER. I simply mean to say that the rule under the original ordinance for the Northwest Territory required that there should be population enough to choose one Representative in the House of Representatives?

Mr. NYE. I undertake to say that according to that rule Ohio had not enough; and there was no rule then existing that does not exist now for the admission of States. I undertake to say that the rule stands as it has ever stood, precisely; and I assert that at the time Ohio was admitted she had not the requisite number for a Representative in Congress; neither had Illinois. I read from the report of the committee:

"Illinois was admitted in 1818. The census of 1820, two years after, gave her a white population of 53,183. Four years after the admission of Florida, the census of 1850 gave her a white population of 47,203. Two years after the admission of Oregon the census of 1850 gave her a population of 52,337. The census of 1820 gave the white population of Missouri at 55,988. She made application that year, and was finally admitted in 1821. A number of other States were admitted with evidence of no more population than is indicated in Colorado."

Now, Mr. President, I have to say, in conclusion, that the reason that would exist, and did exist, in 1818 and 1820, cannot by any possibility apply now. The olden time has passed away, and all things have become new. States are born with a rapidity that would have astonished the men of that day, and they are peopled with a rapidity which no human head can calculate. Sir, the great national thoroughfare through Colorado will, in two or three years, take by its cheap and rapid communication to that State a population equal to Vermont. The State of Nevada, to which my colleague on the committee alluded, will have a population of one hundred thousand ere autumn comes. I see my honorable friend from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] smiles. I hope he smiles with gladness at the prospect. Now the State of California, just born, sends out more from her borders to-day than any other State in the Union, and her fields are not half touched.

A word more, sir, and I shall have done. The committee, at its last meeting, reported an amendment to this bill which takes away all the objections of the Senator from Vermont. The Senators-elect from Colorado had been here so long waiting for my honorable friend's and other's minds to open to the occasion, that they thought their time was served out, and in order to prevent any feeling upon that score, the committee reported an amendment providing for a new election of a Legislature, with this proviso added to that section:

Provided, That before being admitted to representation in Congress, the Legislature so elected and convened shall ratify the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, known as the fourteenth article, and also the fundamental conditions herein imposed. And in case said Legislature shall refuse to ratify said amendment and said conditions this act shall be null and void.

If the honorable Senator has faith in the representation of Mr. Teller, that the people of Colorado do not want to become a State, let him vote for this bill, and they will have in two months the opportunity to say so by their vote. Before they can come into the Union, a new Legislature must be elected and convened, and that Legislature must ratify the constitutional amendment. Thus the people of Colorado have the full opportunity of deciding upon the question whether they will be admitted or not, and I contend that it is not fair to avoid re-submitting the opportunity this bill presents to Colorado of becoming one of the family of this nation. It is due to their interests, it is due to the interests of this Government, it is due to the growing interests of that people, that they should have the protection which only a State government can give.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I had supposed, from the statement made by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. YATES,] that this bill would excite very little controversy. I understood from his statement made on Friday—

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for a few moments, that I may say a few words to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HENDRICKS. With great pleasure.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, it is, perhaps, unfortunate that I should have permitted myself to say anything on this subject; but if I had not, I should never have given the chance for the exhibition of wit which the Senator from Nevada always has at his disposal; but take away the perversions, take away the misstatements, not intentional, of course, as to what I said, and there will be very little foundation for any of the remarks of the Senator from Nevada. I have said nothing derogatory of Colorado, or of any of her citizens. I merely called attention to the fact, as I believe, that she has an insufficient population to support a State government or to entitle her to representation in Congress. I believe the fact to be so, and notwithstanding the statements here of the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon no substantial basis that I am aware of, that he thinks there is a population of eighty or one hundred thousand inhabitants in that Territory. I believe that no vote they have given, that no census which has been taken, will show that they have at the present time any more than thirty or thirty-five thousand inhabitants.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator when was any such opinion as that expressed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I understood the Senator from Nevada to quote the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, giving an estimate of something like one hundred thousand population; but taking the estimate of the amount of population according to any vote of the Territory, and admitting that they have as large a population in proportion to the vote as Oregon or California, and they cannot have to-day much more than about thirty thousand inhabitants.

Mr. CRAGIN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion on that point?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I only wish to say a word more myself, and then I shall yield the floor entirely. All I desire is that we shall have some rule established by which we are to admit these States, and hold out even-handed justice to them all. I would not allude further to the vote of the State but for the fact that the Senator from Nevada has rather intimated that these votes out there are all right. Now, I have not a particle of doubt that whenever this State is admitted it will be what we sometimes call a copperhead State; and if the vote of the people is fairly taken they will be represented by those who are opposed to the gentlemen who usually sit on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. CRAGIN. The Senator from Vermont says that the vote in Colorado, nine thousand three hundred and forty-nine, would not show a population of more than thirty thousand. I beg to state to the Senator from Vermont that I have made a calculation compared with the vote of the State of Vermont. The population in Vermont is about three hundred and eighteen thousand. Her vote at the last election was forty-two thousand one hundred and twenty-five; about one in seven. The vote of Colorado was nine thousand three hundred and forty-nine. That multiplied by seven gives sixty-five thousand four hundred and forty-three, estimating the population in the same proportion to the vote as is the case in Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Will the Senator take the vote of New Hampshire, and, admitting that we have as many able-bodied men entitled to vote in Vermont as in New Hampshire, see how it is there?

Mr. CRAGIN. I am aware of the difference in the vote of the two States. I contend that a vote in a sparsely-settled Territory, especially a mining country, is no indication whatever of the population. In my State, where every man votes, where the parties are close and nearly every vote is brought out, there is a very large vote, indeed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What per cent. of the population vote in your State?

Mr. CRAGIN. About one in four and a half.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to call his attention to one fact? In estimating the population from the vote in a mineral country, is the Senator not aware that the voting population is very much larger in proportion to the entire population than in an agricultural State? To illustrate, is the Senator not aware of the fact that in 1860 the census of Colorado showed a population of twenty-five thousand?

Mr. CRAGIN. Thirty-four thousand and some odd.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Twenty-five thousand is the last census that was taken in 1860; and of the entire population there were of women and children under twenty-one about six thousand, and the residue, according to the census, was a voting population; so that there were three or four or five of voting population to one non-voting.

Mr. CRAGIN. I am aware of the fact suggested by the Senator from Indiana that in the early settlement of a mining Territory the males largely preponderate; but Colorado has been settled now some eight years. In 1860, I will inform the Senator—he seems not to be aware of it—the census taken by the United States showed over thirty-four thousand inhabitants; but since that time eight years have passed away and Colorado has become settled permanently; men have gone there with their families, and the number of women and children has vastly increased in proportion to what was evidenced by the census of 1860. I have not the slightest doubt, from what appeared before the Committee on Territories, and from information that I gather generally, that the population of Colorado is to-day from sixty-five to eighty thousand inhabitants.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I now ask my friend from Illinois, [Mr. YATES,] who has charge of this bill, to allow House bill No. 605 to come up. I understood him to say he would not antagonize the bill with it.

Mr. YATES. I do not intend to antagonize, but I will say to the Senator that I do not think there will be much more debate on this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot get a vote immediately.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let it go over.

Mr. YATES. It can be passed over informally so as to be first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill can be passed over informally, if there be no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do object, for the reason that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] desires to be heard on this Colorado bill, and he cannot be here this afternoon.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 605, of which I gave notice, and with which my friend from Illinois assured me that he would not antagonize.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I regret to antagonize the bill before the Senate on Friday last with the one which has been mentioned by the honorable Senator from Maine, but I am really very anxious to dispose of the bill relating to the central branch of the Pacific railroad, and I gave notice on Friday that I should at the close of the morning hour to-day call up that bill for the purpose of finishing the discussion and coming to a vote upon it. I hope, therefore, the Senate will see fit to take up that bill again and proceed to dispose of it. If it be the desire of the Senate to do so, I will agree that in case the Senator from Maine wishes to proceed with his appropriation bill after the central branch bill is taken up it shall be laid aside informally in order to accommodate him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will be objected to.

Mr. MORTON. I think this policy of discussing a bill for a time and then laying it aside to take up another bill is one very wasteful and prodigal in its character. It would be better for the Senate now to dispose of the Colorado bill, because if it is put off until to-morrow you will have this discussion all over again and perhaps more of it. Here are two other bills pressing, and if we postpone this now the time which has been spent this morning in the consideration of it will be virtually lost. I have not been here long, but I have seen much time wasted in that way, and I think the policy is a very bad one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before proceeding with the bill under consideration, I ask the Senator from Maine to allow us to dispose of the bill for the recognition of the State government in Arkansas, which was returned by the President with his objections on Saturday. The Senate was not full when the message came in, and I suppose it will probably lead to no discussion, as the matter has already been fully discussed. It is very likely that we can take the vote on that question at once, and it is a matter that we ought to act upon, being in the nature of a privileged matter. If the Senator from Maine will consent to let the appropriation bill be laid aside for a few moments, I think we can get the vote on the Arkansas bill. I suggest, therefore, that the appropriation bill be laid aside temporarily for that purpose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Considering the character of that measure, I will consent to the proposition, with the understanding that if it leads to discussion I shall be at liberty to resume the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir. Let it be laid aside informally in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill before the Senate may be laid aside informally if there be no objection. No objection being made, it will so be laid aside.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask that the Senate now proceed with the consideration of the bill returned by the President, relative to the recognition of the State government of Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that bill will be regarded as before the Senate. The question is on the passage of the bill, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. This question must be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I cannot consent that the vote on this question shall be taken without some debate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As this leads to debate—

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not a long debate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should think it would be pretty long by the books on the desk of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think we had better go on with this bill and finish it. I hope the Senator from Maine will not interpose. We can hear the Senator from Kentucky, and then take the vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But I understood the honorable Senator from Illinois to agree that if this bill led to discussion, I should be at liberty to call up the appropriation bill again.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I did, and if there is to be any protracted discussion on this bill I shall not insist upon it; but I have no idea that there will be.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There was no "protracted" about it, it was "discussion." There is discussion; and now I call for the regular order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator insists upon it, I suppose I must give way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order will be proceeded with. The bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It will be read, and as the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations are reached in their regular order in the reading of the bill they will be acted upon if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill, the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations being acted on in their order as recited in the reading of the bill.

The first amendment was to insert "clerk to Committee on Appropriations, $2,220" in lines forty-four, forty-five, and forty-six, in the clause making appropriations "for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fifty-three, to strike out "$98,704 80," and insert "$100,924 80," as the gross appropriation for officers, &c., receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fifty-six, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so as to reduce the appropriation for stationery for the Senate to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fifty-seven, to strike from the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the Senate the item "for newspapers, $5,000," and in lieu thereof insert:

For newspapers and stationery for seventy-four Senators, to the amount of $125 each, $9,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line sixty-four, to strike out "second" before "session" and insert "third;" so as to make the clause read as follows, among the items of contingent expenses of the Senate:

For reporting and printing the proceedings in the Daily Globe for the third session of the Fortieth Congress, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seventy-two, to strike out "three thousand" and insert "fifteen hundred," and in line seventy-four, to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$10,000;" so as to make the clause read, among the items of contingent expenses of the Senate, as follows:

For paying the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, according to the number of copies taken, one cent for every five pages exceeding fifteen hundred, including the indexes and the laws of the United States, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eighty, to reduce the appropriation "for packing-boxes for Senators" from "$3,500" to "$1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and thirty-six, to strike out "eleven" and insert "six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out line one hundred and thirty-nine in these words "for Capitol police, $64,000," and in lieu thereof to insert:

For one captain, $2,800; two lieutenants, at $1,800 each, $3,600; thirty privates, at $1,584 each, $47,520; twelve watchmen, at $1,000 each, $12,000; one superintendent in the crypt, $1,440; uniforms, $4,600; contingent expenses, $500; making in all $71,748; one half to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate and the other half into the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if this appropriation cannot be very materially reduced. I see here for policeman a higher rate of compensation than is allowed to gentlemen in the Departments doing clerical duty; as for instance, the captain gets more than the chief clerk of a bureau, more than the chief clerk of the General Land Office, for example. That should not be so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me to explain?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This appropriation is in exact conformity with the provisions of the law reorganizing the police, which was reorganized in 1867; and in addition to the compensation, or as part of the compensation, that law provided for uniforming these policemen, and that enters into a part of the expense.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The clothing of these gentlemen is provided for in this same section.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What I mean to say is that the amendment is in conformity to the statute organizing the Capitol police, which was passed last year.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think these sums ought to be reduced. Here I see that the captain gets above two thousand dollars; two lieutenants $1,800, each, which is the compensation of a chief clerk of a bureau, I believe; and then there are thirty privates with a compensation larger than the great body of the clerks in the Departments. First-class clerks get $1,200, but these privates are to have $1,584 each, thirty of them. I understood that the business of retrenchment was to commence somewhere, and I think we may as well commence right here. It is a small matter to notice, perhaps, but I think both the number of policemen employed about this Capitol and the rate of compensation may be very materially decreased, so as to save at least twenty thousand dollars in this item. I propose, now, to strike out "two thousand and eighty-eight dollars" as the salary of the captain, and insert "fifteen hundred dollars;" and if this be agreed to, and a corresponding reduction takes place throughout, I shall propose, at the close of the section, an amendment declaring that these rates shall be the rates of compensation, so as to change the law in that respect.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have the Senate understand precisely what this proposition is. It is a proposition to appropriate a less sum of money than the officer is entitled to by the law of Congress. If my honorable friend were to propose to modify or repeal so much of the law as provides for this compensation, he would be proceeding perhaps regularly, but I can hardly conceive that it would be becoming propriety to propose to appropriate for an officer a less salary than is provided by the law creating the office.

I wish to say a word in reply to the honorable Senator from Indiana on another point. He institutes a comparison between the services of these police officers and those of clerks in the Departments. These officers are on duty twelve hours a day. The Senator need not be told, I suppose, that the clerks to whom he refers serve only six hours, and they receive all the way from fourteen hundred dollars—

Mr. HENDRICKS. Twelve hundred.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. They receive from twelve hundred to two thousand dollars for a service of six hours a day; these men receive from fifteen to eighteen hundred dollars for a service of twelve hours a day; so that my honorable friend will see that upon the score of merit, or upon the score of hours' service actually rendered, the disparity is not near as great as it ought to be. In proportion to service the salary of these men ought to be increased instead of being diminished. I submit to my friend that on examination he will not find the disparity which he supposes to exist.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We never estimate the amount of compensation by the number of hours; it is by the qualifications that are requisite to fill the place. The chief clerk of a Department must have such information, such scholarship, such business training as will enable him to take charge of very large matters. Take the case of the chief clerk of the Third Auditor's office. Millions of dollars pass through that office annually; I believe some years hundreds of millions. A man is paid about eighteen hundred or two thousand dollars a year for taking charge of that sort of business as chief clerk of the bureau. Take the General Land Office, where the operations of the bureau extend over many States and Territories, having large questions to settle, the chief clerk contributing very materially to the settlement of all questions in the office, with a salary of eighteen hundred or two thousand dollars a year. Although he may spend but six or eight hours a day, what is the comparison between him and a man who steps around here to see that there is no disturbance? There is no comparison as to the real labor that is performed. What comparison can there be between a man who sits down at his desk and for six hours closely applies himself to intellectual labor attending to important questions that come before him, and a man that is stepping around here at his leisure holding conversations with agreeable people in the halls of this Capitol? The one is a loafing sort of life; the other is a life of real labor. A man can very well afford to step around here without fatigue for twelve hours, while there is great fatigue in the other case.

I think this appropriation can be very much reduced. My impression is that years ago there used to be four or five policemen around this Capitol. It has grown up to be a decided force. Here is provision for a captain, two lieutenants, thirty privates, and twelve watchmen—forty-five men. Forty-five men to preserve order in this Capitol, where there never has been any disorder that I have heard of, where there is scarcely any policeman necessary! The law ought to be changed. To pay them at these rates is simply remarkable, in my opinion.

In answer to the other suggestion of the Senator, I propose, if the Senate shall be of opinion that this little matter ought to be amended at all, to add at the close of this paragraph a provision that the new rates shall be fixed as the compensation of these men. I propose to put the thirty privates at just the pay that the first-class clerks in the Departments receive, $1,200. It is the pleasure of Congress, I believe, now fixed, that the clerks of the Departments shall not have twenty per cent. additional compensation, so that they do not get the benefit of the usual provision. I think we had better come down to about the same rates in regard to men who do not discharge intellectual labor, but simply watch around this Capitol and do nothing except to step about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HENDRICKS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the law read which fixes the pay of these officers. I think myself the salaries are too high, but I wish to see whether the law fixes them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will modify my amendment so as to say, instead of $1,500, $1,800 for the captain of police, and I propose further to amend the clause by fixing for the two lieutenants $1,600 each instead of $1,800, and for the thirty privates $1,200 each, so as to make them correspond with the grades of clerks in the Departments, and I propose to leave the watchmen at $1,000, as they are.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have the Senate understand exactly what this proposition is. It is a proposition to change the compensation of the Capitol police as established by law last year. The Senator from Indiana thinks the police power of the Capitol larger than it need be. That may be so; but the committee who reported the organization last year did not think so. He says there are forty. This is a large building, and it is to be policed every hour in the year. He says the duties are somewhat unimportant and not clerical. They may not be clerical; but I think a single moment's reflection will satisfy anybody that they are not unimportant. They have the entire charge and responsibility of this building, its safety, its order, and the order of everybody that attends here. The Senator says he has heard of no disorder.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does not the Sergeant-at-Arms have charge of this building?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir. If my friend would reflect a moment he would see that the Sergeant-at-Arms has nothing to do with the charge of this building. The Sergeant-at-Arms is doorkeeper of the Senate. He may have some specific duties here; but he has no oversight whatever over this building. Now, I submit respectfully to the Senate that the Senator has no information which authorized him to ask the judgment of the Senate on this proposition.

If the law ought to be changed, let it be changed on the suggestion of the proper committee. A committee of both branches organized the police department last year, systematized it; and this was the result. Now the honorable Senator proposes to organize anew, as I submit without the necessary information. There was no option on our part but to make the appropriation as it is. If the Senate think that it is safe to follow the lead of the Senator in making this amendment they will so vote.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There were one or two suggestions made by the Senator from Maine that rather surprised me. He says if this is to be done at all it ought to be done by the committee. Then submit to the Senate that we adjourn and let the committee pass this bill. If my voice is not to be heard in regard to the public expenditures, I had better quit—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator quite misunderstood me. I said that this subject of revising the organization of the Capitol police ought not to come from this committee; that the subject having been once determined by a committee, the revision of it ought to come from the appropriate committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then the Senator suggested next to the Senate whether they had better follow my lead. I ask no Senator to follow my lead. The Senator from Maine is a leader; his official position makes him a leader—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I do not allow the Senator to misrepresent me.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is exactly what the Senator said.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I said no such thing, and dreamed of no such thing as admonishing the Senate not to follow the lead of the Senator. What I did suggest, most respectfully as I said, was that the Senator had not the information which justified him in moving the proposition. That is what I said. And, sir, I do not allow the Senator to rise here and put into my mouth a leadership which I neither assume nor ascribe to him.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator did not ascribe any leadership to me—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But he submitted to the Senate whether, in regard to this amendment, it was best to follow my lead.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the word the Senator used, and I know it. I am speaking in the best of humor.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. So am I.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not want anything else about this matter but the best feeling toward the Senator from Maine, for I have great respect for him; but I submit to the Senate that I have all the information on this subject that it is necessary to have to judge of it, and I say that when the laws of the country fix the salary of the chief clerk of an important bureau at $2,000, or at $1,800 a year, it is absurd that a captain of police at the Capitol must have as much. His duties are not as responsible; they are not as arduous; and in no respect ought the compensation be so large.

We can judge of the salary that ought to be given to these persons. The fact that it was fixed by a law passed a year or two ago does not prevent the consideration of the question now. I believe that the proposition I have made gives a liberal compensation to these persons. I am willing that they shall be well paid, but Senators know very well that this same class of men at home cannot make anything like so much money. The salaries that I propose will command the services of faithful and good men. There is no difficulty about that. I do not want to disturb the efficiency of the service by reducing the salaries below what they ought to be; but in these times the salaries ought to be fixed at such rates as will secure good service. I believe the proposition I have made will secure it. Upon that I want the yeas and nays.

Mr. YATES. Mr. President, I think it is well enough for the Senate to understand the proposition upon which it is about to vote. I have listened to the Senator from Indiana with a good deal of interest, and I admire the zeal which he shows for retrenchment and reform. I admire also the particular point at which he begins his policy of retrenchment and reform. I should not be surprised if his speech would figure in the approaching canvass for President. But, sir, I prefer that retrenchment and reform which aim to retrench the Government's expenses in some important particular. I have no great admiration for an attack upon clerks or upon subordinate officers; I do not believe in expending time in the discussion of what the salary of a police officer shall be so that the time costs more than the salary itself would be. I have had no person appointed to one of these offices; I am not acquainted with one of these policemen that I know of; but is it an unreasonable amount to pay the head of the police force around the Capitol the sum of $2,800 a year? I am not so desirous of a reputation for retrenchment and reform as to say that $2,800 is too much for the head of an important department like this.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator is mistaken in the bill he is advocating. He puts the salary at $720 more than the bill provides.

Mr. YATES. Two thousand eight hundred dollars I believe it is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Two thousand and eighty dollars.

Mr. YATES. Then it is less than I would be willing to pay. The Senator says that this Capitol does not require a police force of forty men. I think it would be a degradation to the people of the United States to say that a building like this, so extensive, the Capitol of the United States, could be expected to have a police force of less than forty or forty-five men. I am sure that the Senate has not wisely considered this proposition of retrenchment and reform, and is beginning at the wrong end. I do not think the salary allowed this officer is at all unreasonable, and therefore I shall vote against the Senator's amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Indiana has a reason that I apprehend has not been developed for this raid of his against the Capitol police, and I desire that he shall have the benefit of it. He, perhaps, was too modest to proclaim it here; but the Capitol police, I believe, have really offended him seriously. On an occasion not long since there was a remarkable character of this country who charged himself, either at his instance or at the instance of other patriotic persons in the country, with carrying the American flag from one end of the Union to the other, or rather from the South to the national Capitol, beginning somewhere down South on the Mississippi—I do not remember now where—and he was feasted, I think, all the way through, and the late rebels gave in their adhesion to the flag, and this patriotic hero bore the standard to this Capitol. The last crowning act of his was to have been the raising of the flag from the Dome; and by some misunderstanding or other, as to jurisdiction, I think, the police interfered with his going up to perform that service. But after some consultation, I think the Sergeant-at-Arms, under whose direction to some extent the police are, agreed that the flag should be raised as contemplated; but by that time the patriotic men who formed the escort of this patriot determined that they had been offended in some way or other, and they refused indignantly. I am inclined to think that that has rested in the mind of our friend from Indiana from that time to this, and that the Capitol police are not acceptable to him when they perform their duty in that way.

If the Senator will state to me that that is the cause of their offense against him, and he will indorse the statement that the captain of the police force or any part of it violated what was a courtesy or a rule of right in the premises, I will agree to go with him in obtaining such need of satisfaction as the case demands. I wished to make this statement so that the question shall be put upon its true ground. If the captain of the police force has offended seriously, let us punish him by all means.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, it is always fair to let a Senator stand upon the reasons that he gives for himself. One reason assigned by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. YATES], if it had been original with him, would have entitled him to rank as a genius, perhaps; but inasmuch as the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. NYE], a few days ago, was the author of the suggestion about some future political movements, the Senator from Illinois has not even the virtue of originality in his suggestion. In the proposition that I have made I have not thought of the future. I do not trouble my head with that. I guess the Senator thinks a good deal more about nominations to be made in the future than I do. If he is troubled as little about that as I am his sleep will not be disturbed at nights.

The honorable Senator from California knows that there was a sufficient reason for rebuking the captain of police, and, therefore, he has suggested—I had not thought of that; I am glad the Senator has suggested it; it had not entered into my head—that a policeman here refused to do credit and honor to the flag that was honored everywhere that Sergeant Bates carried through the southern States.

Mr. CONNESS. Ah, that was his name!

Mr. HENDRICKS. That flag had not received an insult anywhere until it came back, in the hands of a gallant soldier, to the Capitol of the United States. Indeed, a captain of police that would do such a thing ought to be rebuked, and I thank the Senator from California for suggesting so strong an argument.

But, sir, my only reason for moving the amendment was that I thought the compensation fixed for these men by existing law was unreasonably high, and that we might save some ten or twenty or thirty thousand dollars; not much, perhaps; it may not be worth saving. The Senator from Illinois, as a test now of the certainty and accuracy of his judgment upon the question, thought the captain of the police was getting $2,800, and he thought that was little enough, and that it ought not to be reduced, when that was more than $700 above what the bill provides. So he is mistaken in all of his estimates on the subject. I think the proposition I have offered to the Senate is enough, and therefore I submit it. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to continue the salaries as they are, be it so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the salaries named by the Senator from Indiana are ample to secure the services of these officers, and ordinarily I should vote with him. My judgment is decidedly in favor of his amendment, but it seems that two years ago Congress passed a provision allowing all the clerks and employes in the Executive Departments twenty per cent. additional compensation, but it was so worded as to confine it to a single year; but when Congress came to legislate for their own clerks and employes they made the language so general as to increase the compensation twenty per cent. permanently, and subsequently the same year they inserted a provision in one of the appropriation bills that increased the pay of the police in the same way:

"The Capitol police and the policemen at the Executive Mansion shall be entitled to the increased compensation allowed by law to the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the employ of the Government."

The House of Representatives have refused to continue the twenty per cent. to the employes of the Executive Departments, but by law the compensation of the employes of both Houses of Congress, the Capitol police, &c., is permanently increased twenty per cent. There is no justice and no reason in such legislation, and no man can defend it. If there is a reason for increasing the compensation of our own officers the same reason should apply to those of the Executive Departments, and with much more force, because they are employed all the year round, while ours, on the average are not employed over five months in the year. Such discriminating legislation in favor of our own employes is, to say the least, not very creditable to Congress.

But as this whole subject is now being considered by a select committee of the two Houses I think it would not be wise to strike down the compensation of the Capitol police until that committee report. I understand the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] is almost prepared to report a bill from that committee. For this reason, though I agree with the Senator from Indiana, that the compensation named by him is enough, I feel inclined to vote against the amendment, in the hope that we may at the same time bring back the standard of pay of all the employes about the Capitol to what it was before the change in the law.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Before the vote is taken, I wish to say that my colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] has been called home by the death of his brother.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Doolittle, Ferry, Harlan, Hendricks, McCreery, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of Tennessee, Saulsbury, Sherman, and Sprague—11.
NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Nye, Ramsey, Sumner, Thayer, Trumbull, Wade, Wiley, and Yates—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Connors, Drake, Edmunds, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Morton, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Ross, Stewart, Tipton, Van Winkle, Vickers, Williams, and Wilson—24.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and sixty-six, to strike out "three thousand" and insert "fifteen hundred;" so as to make the clause read as follows, among the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives:

For paying the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, according to the number of copies taken, one cent for every five pages exceeding fifteen hundred, including the indexes and the laws of the United States, $9,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and seventy-five, to reduce the appropriation "for folding documents, including materials," for the House of Representatives from $50,000 to $42,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and eighty-three, to reduce the appropriation "for laborers" for the House of Representatives from $12,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to reduce the appropriation for "miscellaneous items" for the House contingent fund from $70,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out line one hundred and eighty-five, in the appropriations for the House contingent fund, in these words:

For newspapers, $12,500.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For stationery and newspapers for two hundred and fifty Members and Delegates, to the amount of $125 each, $31,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and ninety-one, to reduce the appropriation "for twenty-five pages and three temporary mail-boys" for the House of Representatives from $16,000 to $6,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and ninety-five, to reduce the appropriation for stationery for the House of Representatives from $30,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Library of Congress, to strike out in line two hundred and thirty-seven the word

"four" and insert "three," and to strike out in line two hundred and thirty-eight "$3,456" and insert "$2,592;" so as to make the clause read:

For three laborers, at $864 each, $2,592.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two hundred and forty, to strike out "two" and insert "three," and in line two hundred and forty-one, to increase the appropriation from $2,880 to $4,320; so as to make the clause read:

For three assistant librarians, at $1,440 each, $4,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line two hundred and eighty, to strike out the following clause:

For compensation to the Private Secretary, assistant secretary, short-hand writer, clerk of pardons, three clerks of fourth class, steward, and messenger of the President of the United States, $18,800.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

For compensation to the Private Secretary, one clerk of class four, steward, and messenger of the President of the United States, $8,200: Provided, That so much of the fourth section of the act of July 23, 1866, making appropriation for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, as authorizes the President of the United States to appoint an assistant secretary, a short-hand writer, a clerk of pardons, and two clerks of the fourth class is hereby repealed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have some reason given for this amendment. It proposes to repeal entirely the law regulating the official family of the President. That law was prepared, I know, with a great deal of care a few years ago. There were only a small number of officers allotted to the President's House and employed by him, and they were constantly employed, and were said to be insufficient. It seems to me we ought not to change this law, especially at the incoming of a new Administration. If there is any good reason for it, I should like to hear it from the Senator having charge of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It did not occur to the committee that they were interfering with the official family or the official relations of the President in any essential way. The amendment leaves the clerical force of the President precisely where it was in 1865. In 1866 the committee supposed there were some reasons for increasing the force of the President, which reasons were of a peculiar character, and which will be sufficiently indicated by reading the increased force which was then put at the disposal of the President. The increase was as follows: he was authorized to appoint an assistant secretary, a short-hand writer, a clerk of pardons, and two clerks of the fourth class. Now, it is known to Congress that about that time, in 1866, the executive department of the Government was thronged with applications for pardons, and it was thought proper to authorize the appointment of a clerk of pardons. The Committee on Appropriations supposed that that time had gone by; that there was no further necessity for a clerk with a special designation—on pardons. I submit to my friend from Ohio whether he believes, under the present circumstances, that that officer is any longer needed?

Then, as to the functions of an assistant secretary, the President already has two secretaries. There are two secretaries provided for in this bill; and nobody, I suppose, knows better than my honorable friend from Ohio that in addition to that, he has his chief Private Secretary, detailed from the Army; so that, as matter of fact, he has three: two provided by law, and one provided by detail; and but for this amendment to the bill he would have four. Now, will my friend say that he believes the official family of the President is being interfered with by this bill, when, as it stands, the President will have three secretaries? As it came from the House he had four. There is no limitation on the force he may have, because the power of detail for secretaries and clerks is unlimited. The committee, therefore, saw no reason, so long as the President has the power to detail whomsoever he pleases from the Army or from any branch of the service to perform just such duties as he chooses, why Congress should be called upon to make these additional appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine by what authority the President has the right to detail an officer of the Army to perform clerical duties? I know it has been done; but I do not know what law would authorize it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My friend knows that such is the fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I know it is done.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Colonel Moore is a paymaster in the Army. He is one of the acting secretaries certainly of the President of the United States, as we have had occasion to know this morning, and as I suppose is well known; and he has been for, perhaps, years. Therefore I submit to my honorable friend from Ohio, that it is not interfering in any sense which would be an embarrassment to the President with his official family. He still has left to him all the force that President Lincoln had during his entire administration; all that was found to be necessary in 1865; and in addition to that he has this detailed assistant secretary. If there is anything to be said in favor of the retention of these officers the committee were not informed of it. If any argument could be made on that point it might be as to one of the two clerks that are struck out; but as to the clerk of pardons and the assistant secretary it is impossible to conceive that the President can require either the pardon clerk or an additional secretary to the two he already has. The committee were not informed that there was any state of things at the executive department that requires any force as to clerks beyond what existed in 1865. If the Senator from Ohio has any information in regard to the clerks that are struck out here he can state it.

Mr. DIXON. The proposition now before the Senate, as I understand it, is to strike out the following appropriation:

For compensation to the Private Secretary, assistant secretary, short-hand writer, clerk of pardons, three clerks of fourth class, steward, and messenger of the President of the United States, $18,800.

And in lieu of those words to insert:

For compensation to the Private Secretary, one clerk of class four, steward, and messenger of the President of the United States, $8,200: Provided, That so much of the fourth section of the act of July 23, 1866, making appropriation for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, as authorizes the President of the United States to appoint an assistant secretary, a short-hand writer, a clerk of pardons, and two clerks of the fourth class, is hereby repealed.

I am not myself entirely informed as to the clerical force employed by the President. I know very well whenever I have happened to be at the Executive Mansion they all seemed to be very busily employed; a great deal of work was to be performed; and I had not supposed that there was any necessity of reducing the force or that it could be done with any propriety. I suppose that when that portion of the act was passed which it is now proposed to repeal it was thought by Congress that the force authorized was actually necessary at the Executive Mansion. I believed it to be so then, and I believe it to be so now. I must confess it strikes me very unfavorably to change to so very great an extent as is proposed the assistants now furnished by the Government to the President for performing his duties. It seems to me that if the honorable Senator who has charge of this bill had wished to enforce economy he might have commenced a little nearer home.

Now, sir, whether the clerical force allowed to the President is proper or not, as I have said, I am not prepared to say; but I wish to call to the attention of the Senate and of the country, when we are making this great reduction in a manner which seems somewhat invidious to the practice of the Senate in regard to clerical employment. We have a certain number of standing committees; I do not know precisely how many. Some of these committees meet and do business and some of them do not. I have the honor of being a member of a committee of the Senate which has not met this session, to my knowledge. I have received no notice of it, if they have met. I speak of the Committee on Manufactures, presided over by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. SPRAGUE.] I have the honor, also, of being a member of another committee which has met, and which has important duties to perform. Each of these committees employs a clerk. There are, I will not undertake to say how many, standing committees in all; but twenty-four, I think, as I judge by a hasty glance; and every one of these standing committees is furnished with a clerk at about eighteen hundred dollars a year, whether they meet or not; and I undertake to say that not half of them meet at all; at any rate if they do, it is not more than twice a year. For what purpose are these clerks furnished to such committees? For the benefit of the chairman to perform his business, to do his work. I will not say that that is improper. I do not say that it is improper. I do not know but that it is proper; but I say if the honorable Senator wishes to reduce the clerical force and save the Government expense it seems to me it would be more proper to begin with the committees here in this body which never meet, and have not even a pretense of any labor to perform, and still are furnished with a clerk, than to go to the Executive Mansion and deprive the President of two or three clerks.

In my judgment the President needs all the aid that he has. I do not believe that when the law of 1866 was passed, he was furnished with any more assistants than he needed. The whole executive business of this country is to be performed by three or four or five clerks. I do not think it is too much. I think he is entitled to all that assistance, and while I have not the slightest doubt that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has acted in good faith, honestly in this matter, as he always does, and believes that here can be a proper saving, I do think he has made a mistake. I think the Senate ought not to adopt this amendment. But if the honorable Senator were to substitute for this amendment a proposition that committees of the Senate which do not meet over twice a year shall be deprived of their clerks, he would save to the Government twice as much money as this does, and it would come with much better grace from the Committee on Appropriations than does this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The question being put there were on a division—yeas 11, noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cole, Conkling, Conness, Edmunds, Ferry, Harlan, Howard, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Hendricks, McCreery, Patterson of Tennessee, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, and Willey—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Chandler, Corbett, Cragin, Drake, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Nye, Ramsey, Van Winkle, Vickers, Williams, and Yates—23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and two, to strike out the words "five hundred and thirty-eight" and to insert "seven hundred and twenty;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation to the laborer in charge of the water-closets in the Capitol, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and nine, to strike out the words "sixteen thousand and eighty" and to insert "nineteen thousand two hundred and ninety-six;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of a foreman and twenty-one laborers employed in the public grounds, $19,296.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and twelve, to strike out the word "nine" and to insert "eight;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of two watchmen at the President's House, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and fourteen, to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and to insert "one thousand;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of the doorkeeper at the President's House, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line three hundred and fourteen, to strike out the following clause:

For compensation of assistant doorkeeper at the President's House, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines three hundred and seventeen, three hundred and eighteen, and three hundred and nineteen, in the following words:

For compensation of one night watchman at the public stables and carpenters' shops south of the Capitol, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and twenty-one, to strike out "thirty-six hundred" and to insert "five thousand;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of five watchmen in reservation No. 2, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and twenty-four, to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of drawkeepers at the Potomac bridge, and for fuel, oil, and lamps, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and thirty-one, to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and to insert "eight hundred and sixty-four;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of furnace keeper under the old Hall of the House of Representatives, $864.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and forty-one, to insert after the word "Congress," the words "and Supreme Court room;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of the person in charge of the heating apparatus of the Library of Congress and Supreme Court room, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and fifty-two, after the appropriation for compensation of the officers of the Department of State, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the act of August 18, 1856, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act requiring foreign regulations of commerce to be laid annually before Congress,' approved August 16, 1842, and for other purposes," and also that the second section of the act of July 25, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to amend the amendment of the committee, by inserting the words "third section of the" in the first line; so as to read:

Provided, That the third section of the act of August 18, 1856, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made, if there is no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The object of the amendment of the committee is to repeal that third section instead of the act itself. That may obviate the objection which the Senator may have to it.

Mr. SUMNER. Not at all; if anything it will make the objection still more important.

I am instructed—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are not yet gone through with.

Mr. SUMNER. The question is on this proposed amendment of the Committee on Appropriations. I was about to say that I was instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to oppose the adoption of this amendment, and to move instead thereof an appropriation for the officers whose offices it is proposed by this amendment to destroy. This amendment is aimed at certain officers in the Department of State; and if you look at it, you will see it is divided into two clauses. The first is as follows:

"That the act of August 18, 1856, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled 'An act requiring foreign regulations of commerce to be laid annually before Congress,' approved August 18, 1842, and for other purposes, shall be repealed'"

This has now been amended on the motion of the Senator from Maine by making the repeal applicable only to the last section of the act of 1856, the effect of which is to destroy the office known as that of superintendent of statistics and one clerk in the office. The section is as follows:

"That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, authorized and required to appoint one clerk, who shall have charge of statistics in said Department, and shall be called 'Superintendent of Statistics,' and shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum, and shall be allowed, as an assistant, one clerk of the third class, which clerk the Secretary of State is hereby authorized and required to appoint."

That section, it will be observed, naturally belongs to the statute where it appears. The object of this statute is to provide that commercial information communicated by consuls shall be reported to Congress, and further, that consuls shall be bound to procure such information. But you will observe that if the statute simply provided for the communication of such information to Congress, and that consuls should communicate that information to the Department of State, it would not go far enough. There must be a provision for the examination and systematizing of that information; and this is found in the third section, which it is now proposed to repeal, under which the Secretary of State is authorized to appoint a clerk, whose duty it shall be to receive, examine, and arrange these statistics. Now, the question that you are to decide is, whether you are to give up that branch of duty in the Department of State. It was assigned to that Department as long ago as 1856, and it has been discharged faithfully, I believe, ever since.

You will remember, sir, that only a year or more ago a superintendent of statistics was appointed in the Treasury Department with a salary of $3,500 a year. It was the opinion of the committee that the service done at the Department of State in examining, arranging, and reporting these consular statistics might properly be assigned to the general Bureau of Statistics at the Department of the Treasury, if it were deemed important to continue that bureau. I have heard some objections to it partly on the ground that the present superintendent was not in all respects what would be desired for the place. On that, however, I do not express any opinion. I think that all the statistics of the Government, what I would call the statistics proper, should pass through one bureau; that it is not expedient to have one general bureau at the Treasury Department and another special bureau at the State Department. At the same time, I must observe that the committee in making their present proposition do not undertake to transfer from the State Department the bureau which was created there in 1856, but they abolish it. They leave all the consular statistics which may be received there, and which now for twelve years have been examined, arranged, and reported by a special clerk in that Department, unprovided for.

It seems to me that it is not expedient to touch this subject until we are prepared to systematize it by bringing all the statistics that are gathered together at one department or another into one bureau. No such thing is proposed by this amendment. Therefore, I have to submit, that, all things considered, it will be expedient, at least for the present, not to adopt the amendment; in short, to leave this little Bureau of Statistics, if it may be so called, or rather this clerkship of statistics at the State Department, to go on for the present as it has for the last twelve years, and meanwhile the committee, perhaps, can take into consideration the expediency of carrying out the suggestion which I have ventured to make, by consolidating all these statistical inquiries under one head.

That is all that I have to say with regard to the first part of this amendment; and this brings me to the second.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator leaves this point, I will inquire who holds the place in this Department now?

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know his name. I do not find the name on the list in the Congressional Directory. I have nothing but that before me.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You will find it in the Blue Book.

Mr. SUMNER. I have not the Blue Book here. If there is one at the Secretary's desk I should like to have it. In the statute he is called a clerk:

"That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, authorized and required to appoint one clerk, who shall have charge of statistics in said Department, and shall be called 'Superintendent of Statistics,' and shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum, and shall be allowed, as an assistant, one clerk of the third class, which clerk the Secretary of State is hereby authorized and required to appoint."

In reply to the Senator from New York, I would say that according to the Blue Book the Superintendent of Statistics is Benjamin F. Hall; under the head of "where born," "New York;" under the head "whence appointed," "New York."

Mr. CONKLING. As I have interrupted the Senator once, I beg to inquire whether Mr. Benjamin F. Hall holds this office now?

Mr. SUMNER. I only know by the Blue Book. This is all I know about it.

Mr. CONKLING. I was about to inquire, then, in what geographical range he exercised his functions, if the Senator knew he held the office?

Mr. SUMNER. I know nothing about it beyond the Blue Book.

Mr. CONKLING. I know a great deal about it beyond the Blue Book, and I thought the Senator might know what was the geographical range of his functions.

Mr. SUMNER. No, I do not. This brings me, then, to the second clause of the amendment, which is as follows: "And also that the second section of the act of July 25, 1866, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes,' shall be repealed. In order to understand this amendment, I will read the section which it is proposed to repeal. It is the second section of the consular and diplomatic bill for 1866, as follows:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Second Assistant Secretary of State in the Department of State, and also an Examiner of Claims for the same Department, whose salary shall be $3,000 per annum; and the salary of the Second Assistant Secretary of State shall be $3,500 per annum; and such sums are hereby appropriated."

It will be remembered by Senators that this section passed after very considerable discussion, in the course of which there were various propositions, differing in character, and the Senate at last harmonized on this in the form which it now has. One of the propositions was that we should create an office to be called a Solicitor of Claims. Objection was made to that title, and also, I think, to the salary proposed; but it was felt that something of the kind was needed there; that there was a vast deal of business under the head of claims, or of subjects kindred to claims, involving legal inquiries which the Secretary himself could not undertake to investigate. It was considered that he needed some additional assistance of that kind; and after a very careful inquiry the Senate, according to my recollection, by a large vote, agreed to create an office to be called an Examiner of Claims, with a salary of $3,000. I may say that since that office was created circumstances from time to time have made me considerably acquainted with the business that has passed through the hands of its incumbent, who is well known, I believe, to the Senator from New York, Mr. E. Peshine Smith, also of New York. I have always found him a faithful, attentive, laborious officer. It seems to me he has a great deal of business assigned to him, and that he performs a very important function in the Department of State. A Senator asks me if he is the gentleman who was once reporter of some of the New York courts. I understand that he is; a lawyer of learning, of judgment, and of industry. I think it would be very hard upon the Department of State to deprive it now of the services of such an officer, one who by experience has become even more useful than he was at the beginning. I think that the public interests would suffer very much if that office were abolished. This is all I have to say upon that at present.

And that brings me to the other proposition to abolish the office of Second Assistant Secretary of State. Again I say I think it will be hard to do that. It would be hard on the gentleman who now holds that office, Mr. Hunter, well known to this Senate, who has been in the Department of State now for more than forty years, who may be called at this moment the living index of the Department. I believe it would be a great loss to that Department and a detriment to the public interests if his office were abolished. Of course with the abolition of his office he is set afloat; he is deprived of his place in that Department where he has labored for forty years; and where he has accumulated an experience which nobody else in the country has. It seems to me that he is needed there.

But the question arises, shall we have a Second Assistant Secretary of State? On that I desire to say a word. Why not? The business of the Department of State is now large and increasing. The foreign relations of our Government are more extensive at this moment than they have ever been before. Our consular posts are everywhere—on every coast, in every sea. Our diplomatic posts are at every considerable capital of the world. Every consul, every minister communicates habitually with the Department of State, and his letters are habitually answered. This cannot be done in a perfunctory way, nor can it be done without a great deal of assistance. There must be many minds and many hands employed in the conduct of all that extensive correspondence, and yet there are in the Department of State comparatively few hands. There are fewer than there are in any other Department of the Government; and thus it is that the Department of State, which in the arrangement of our Cabinet was placed at the head, is actually at the foot in the number of persons that it is able to employ at home within its own walls. It has the smallest body of clerks of any one of the Departments.

Then allow me, sir, to call your attention to another distinction. Unlike other Departments, the Department of State has no heads of bureaus; it has no chiefs of sections. It has its Secretary of State, and now under existing laws it has a First Assistant Secretary, and a Second Assistant Secretary, and an examiner of claims; and that is all. If you look at the other Departments, you will see the difference. Take the Treasury Department. I know well the difference between the business proper that passes through the Treasury Department and the business proper that passes through the Department of State. There is a difference which I do not disguise; but I submit that there is not a difference so great as to justify the enormous disproportion in first-class agents or employés in the Department. Looking at the Treasury Department you will see that there are no less than nineteen different persons who may be called, though they have another name, Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury. There are first the two Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury who go by that name. You have then a Special Commissioner of the Revenue, Mr. Wells. You have then a supervising architect, who may be considered the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in matters of architecture. You have then the director of the Bureau of Statistics, Mr. Delmar. You have then the First Comptroller; then the Second Comptroller; then six Auditors. Then you have the Treasurer of the United States; then the Register of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Commissioner of Customs. Then you have a whole bureau recently created of vast importance, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, with a Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and three deputy commissioners. Then you have in the Treasury a Solicitor of the Treasury, and an Assistant Solicitor of the Treasury. Besides all these, you have the Coast Survey, with its enlightened superintendent, Professor Pierce; making, as I have already said, more than twenty different persons in the Treasury Department alone, all of them with a compensation equal to that of an assistant Secretary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And the light-house establishment.

Mr. SUMNER. There is also the light-house establishment, the Senator from Maine reminds me. I had forgotten that. All of these officers have salaries as large, at least, as an Assistant Secretary of a Department, and some of them larger. For instance, the Treasurer of the United States has a salary of $6,000; the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a salary now of $6,000 also; the Solicitor a salary of $4,000; and the Comptroller of the Currency $5,000. So much for the Treasury Department.

If you look at the War Department you will find that the number of heads of bureaus there is full as large, if not larger, than in the Treasury Department itself. It is true you no longer have an Assistant Secretary of War, but you have an Adjutant General with five different assistant adjutant generals; and be it remembered all of them residing in the city of Washington, with their names in the Washington Directory. You have two inspectors general; you have an acting quartermaster general, an assistant quartermaster general, then a deputy quartermaster general, and still two other quartermaster generals. Then you have a subsistence department, with also a Commissary General, an assistant commissary general, and an assistant to the commissary general. Then you have the medical department, with a Surgeon General, an assistant surgeon general, assistant medical purveyor, compiler of medical records, and five assistant surgeons. You have then the pay department, with a Paymaster General, and three different paymasters under him. You have then the chief of engineers, with a corps of engineers under him. Then you have an ordnance department, with a chief of ordnance, an inspector of armories and arsenals; principal assistant to the chief of ordnance, and also another assistant to the chief of ordnance. Then you have the Bureau of Military Justice, with a Judge Advocate General, and four other judge advocates under him. Then you have a signal department, with a chief signal officer. Then you have the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, with a Commissioner, being the excellent and distinguished Major General Howard, and an assistant commissioner under him, and an acting assistant adjutant general, commissary of subsistence, and a chief medical officer. Besides that you have the military department of Washington, with a commandant and an assistant adjutant general.

I might go through all the Departments of the Government with the same result. I might take up the Navy Department and show the different heads of bureaus there, all of them confirmed by this Senate, and every one in the character of his duties not unlike an Assistant Secretary of the Navy. I might go also to the Post Office Department and show you there three Assistant Postmasters General. But I stop; I will not take your time. I wish to impress upon the Senate, if the Senate will pardon me, the importance of continuing this office in the Department of State. I think you cannot take it away without interfering essentially with the business of that Department, and without doing injustice, which I believe you will not willingly do, to an old and valuable public servant. Because he is called Assistant Secretary of State I hope you will not argue that on that account he should be cut adrift. It may be said that there ought to be only one Assistant Secretary of State; I presume to suggest that as in other Departments there are heads of bureaus and functionaries who in point of fact in the service that they render are, substantially, Assistant Secretaries, so in the Department of State itself there should be more than one person who should render that class of service, call him Assistant Secretary of State, or something else, or whatever you please.

In order to present this question for the votes of the Senate and to present the amendments of the committee which are consolidated in one, separately, I will move to strike out all that part of the amendment of the committee which repeals the second section of the act of July 25, 1866, relating to the examiner of claims and Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest to the Senator that he will reach the same result, perhaps, if he moves to divide the question, so as to take the question first on the first proposition contained in the amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; any way that will be agreeable to the Senator. I merely wish to get at the result.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) Does the Senator from Maine move to divide the amendment of the committee?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest whether it would not be more convenient to the Senator from Massachusetts in that way.

Mr. SUMNER. If I move to strike out the last part I get at the result, and unless the Senator from Maine should prefer to have it presented in some other way, I will move to strike out of the amendment of the committee the words:

And also that the second section of the act of July 25, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, striking out the words indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will say a word or two in explanation of the action of the committee. By the third section of the act of 1866 a Second Assistant Secretary of State and an examiner of claims were provided for in these words:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Second Assistant Secretary for the Department of State; and also an examiner of claims for the same Department, whose salary shall be $3,000; and the salary of the Assistant Secretary of State shall be $3,500 per annum; and such sums are hereby appropriated."

Most of the statutes providing for additional service in the year 1866 were for temporary service, for additional service deemed to be necessary growing out of the particular circumstances in which the Government in several Departments found itself at the close of the war. By an examination of the statutes it will be seen that almost all the Departments were increased during the year 1866, and in most of the laws, I think, for that year this additional force was regarded as temporary. Certainly some of it was, I know, and as a general proposition I think it is true that the additional force was not contemplated as a permanent addition to the service of the several Departments of the Government to which it was added during the years 1865 and 1866. Some of it, I know, was limited to a period of two years.

Now, sir, I do not know, and have no right to know, what influenced the House of Representatives, but I suppose that this consideration had something to do with it. The House of Representatives made no appropriation for these officers, for the Second Assistant Secretary of State and for the examiner of claims, which had been provided for by the act of 1866, as I suppose under the circumstances to which I have referred. Finding the House of Representatives to have acted thus, the question naturally arose in the committee, "What is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the Senate?" Shall we concur in the proposition of the House? Is it fair to presume that they have examined this branch of the service, and understand what its relations are and what its needs are, and if so, what ought the committee to do?" Finding no appropriation for these two officers, and finding the law upon the statute-book creating these two offices, assigning them certain duties, the committee came to the conclusion that perhaps it was its duty to submit to the Senate the proposition of dispensing with these offices altogether; for surely it could hardly be expected that Congress would refuse to make an appropriation for offices provided for by law, and yet leave the statute creating them unrepealed. So the Senate Committee on Appropriations instructed me to report this amendment.

Now, Mr. President, whether this service is absolutely necessary or not I do not know. The Committee on Appropriations, I am free to say, had no especial, and no very general information on that subject. We are obliged to rely upon such presumptions as arise naturally from the history of the Government. Looking at that, we know that this branch of the service got along well enough during the war with one Assistant Secretary of State. We know well enough that the duties of that Department cannot be more onerous now than they were during the war. We certainly know that during the war we were obliged to provide for additional force in many of the Departments. We had, I think, two Assistant Secretaries of War during the period of the rebellion; we have only one now. We had two Assistant Secretaries of the Navy during that period; we have only one now. We had, I think, two Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury; I am sure we have but one in fact, though I think there are two in law, at the present time. But I do not suppose that the Senator from Massachusetts will contend that the business of the Department of State has increased correspondingly with that of some of the other Departments of the Government. While in some of the Departments of the Government it is practicable to go back to the period anterior to the war, what would be called the peace establishment anterior to the war, it must be confessed by those who are at all acquainted with the business of the Government that there are certain departments of the Government where the business has really increased since the conclusion of the war. That is the case in some of the bureaus of the Treasury. The committee, therefore, felt bound to act upon the general information within its knowledge, and the conclusion to which we came was, that these additional officers, like others, were created during the exigencies of the war, and were probably not expected to exist long afterward; and reasoning from this general information, and adopting the action of the House of Representatives, that the House had not chosen to provide for these officers, on the supposition, as we supposed, that they were not necessary, the committee deemed it its duty to present this amendment for the consideration of the Senate. If the Senator from Massachusetts has satisfied the Senate that the exigencies of the war still exist in the State Department, that although during the war it was not necessary and not until 1866 that there should be a Second Assistant Secretary of State, the exigency does exist now which did not exist during the war, then of course the Senate will not concur in the action of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am glad that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations makes no serious, if any, opposition to this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. JOHNSON. I considered it no serious opposition, because he concluded by saying that, if the honorable member from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, supposed that the exigencies of the war in one sense still existed, perhaps the Senate would be for continuing the policy that led to the adoption of the original law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I believe my language was "if the Senator from Massachusetts had satisfied the Senate."

Mr. JOHNSON. I was in hopes that he had satisfied my friend, and I am not entirely sure that he has not done so. That will be tested when the vote is given.

The war, to be sure, is over, Mr. President, and happily over; but the business of the State Department is just as burdensome now as it was during the pendency of the war; and from my knowledge of it, obtained during the past three or four years, I am satisfied that it is very important that there should be an Assistant Secretary of State, even independent of the value of the particular incumbent. But so far as that incumbent is concerned I do not think I exaggerate when I say that his services could not be supplied at this time by any other citizen as well as they are now performed by him. He has been in the Department for a great many years, and during a great many Administrations, and has given entire satisfaction to every one of them; and I am convinced that without his aid, they would have found it much more difficult to conduct the Department as satisfactorily as they have done.

As to the other officer, it is equally important that he should be retained. The claims against the United States that are presented to the State Department are very numerous and very large, and it is very important for the interests of the Government that there should be some officer specially charged with the examination of such claims. That involves, of course, a good deal of labor, and requires that there should be some officer particularly competent in matters of that kind. I concur with the head of the State Department in thinking that it is all important that this particular officer should be retained. He has saved, I believe, thousands upon thousands of dollars to the Treasury, and if he is permitted to remain there the result will be found equally beneficial to the Government.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I do not know that there is any opposition to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts; but I rise simply for the purpose of adding my testimony to the fact that in the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Relations it is necessary to retain both the examiner of claims and the Second Assistant Secretary of State. The office of examiner of claims is a matter that has grown up in consequence of claims filed which arise out of the war, and of course they are more numerous now than they could have been at any time during the war itself. I know that at the time this statute was passed I examined this matter very carefully with regard to the necessity of having such an officer, and I came to the conclusion that it was an assistance the Secretary of State was fairly entitled to. It is perfectly impossible for him to examine himself the claims that are filed in his Department and decide upon them without the aid of a good lawyer, and for the purpose of having them thoroughly examined and presented to him it was absolutely necessary to appoint somebody, and I have heard no objection to the man selected.

With regard to the office of Second Assistant Secretary of State, it was made for a special purpose. Mr. Hunter, who now holds that office, had been chief clerk of the Department on a salary, I believe, of $2,000.

Mr. SUMNER. Less than that the greater part of the time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Or $1,800 for a great number of years, and was a most valuable officer. He had a family; and a man like him, situated as he was, having been there so long, so absolutely essential to the proper conduct of the business of the Department from his experience and intelligence, was fairly entitled to a salary which would give him a decent livelihood in these times; and for the purpose of doing that it was thought advisable and proper to create the new office of Second Assistant Secretary of State for his special benefit; in the first instance for the sake of giving him a salary which was adequate to his services. It was put upon that ground, and it was passed, I think, with very great unanimity. He is a gentleman, I believe, having no politics particularly offensive to nobody, but devoted to the business of his office, and master of the ordinary business of the State Department. Now, in consequence of his old office being filled, the effect of repealing this law, would be to just put Mr. Hunter out of office, at a time of life when he cannot turn to any other business; and it would be very unjust to him to do so.

On reflecting upon the subject I am satisfied that the office ought to be permanent, without referring to the case of Mr. Hunter at all. There should be somebody in an office of that description familiar with the business. I believe such is the idea in England, though the Senator from Massachusetts can say a great deal better how it is there. In that Government, I understand, there are certain officers holding high rank, assistants, who are permanent, and remain as such, men of long experience, whose appointments are not political and who are not changed. When Mr. Hunter shall retire it will be proper, in my judgment, to put somebody in his place who has been in the Department a long time and is competent to discharge those duties, if such a man can be found—the ordinary business of the Department—who knows all about it, where to look for everything, business which he has done as chief clerk, which perhaps a chief clerk might do, to be sure; but which you cannot find every man competent to do, as prices are at present, who would do it for the salary of a chief clerk which Mr. Hunter so long received. The principal Assistant Secretary of State holds an office more of a political character. He oversees the appointments, consular appointments particularly. He aids the Secretary in writing his communications to foreign ministers, &c., and is more intimately connected with the Secretary himself, and with a change of administration is likely to go out of office. That particular place is not in its nature permanent.

So, sir, notwithstanding this office was originally created for the purpose of doing justice to a most valuable public servant, I am satisfied that it should remain; that it should be in its nature permanent; that we shall always need two Assistant Secretaries of State having distinct duties, one of whom is to be considered a man to remain, and without whose aid no new Secretary can get along, and the other of a different and perhaps a political character.

My colleague has adverted to the fact that there were two Assistant Secretaries of the War Department, and also two Assistant Secretaries for the Navy Department, and that one of each has been dispensed with. That is very true; and why? Because there are in those Departments heads of bureaus, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts; the business is divided up into departments, bureaus properly so called, which have at their head generally experienced men understanding the business of the offices, and one Assistant Secretary is enough, undoubtedly, in each of those Departments. As remarked by the Senator from Massachusetts, that division of labor does not take place to that extent in the Department of State; and thus the Assistant Secretaries are all the men there who answer at all to those positions.

Now, sir, with regard to the other point, and that is the statistical matter. My opinion is that there ought to be but one Bureau of Statistics, to which all these things ought to be referred. I am unwilling to dispense with the valuable information that we get by reason of collecting these statistics. As all of us understand, they are the digests of communications made by our consuls abroad with regard to our trade and commerce and other matters of interest. They have been made for the last dozen years, and they are valuable; and if the repealing of that branch of the statutes was to eventuate in dispensing with this collation of this information received from our consuls abroad I should be opposed to it. I think it would have been better for the Committee on Appropriations to have proposed an amendment for the transfer of it to the Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department, and of all the papers relating to it, rather than to have attempted to dispense with it generally. I do not know but that if you repeal the statute it may go there as a matter of course, and the papers be transferred; but all the communications that are made by our consuls of this information, which is of so much value and which ought to be collated, are made to the Department of State, and if it is not to be collated there, all that correspondence with the Department of State must necessarily be transferred to the statistical bureau of the Treasury. You will notice that this information is very frequently mixed up with political matter, or rather with matter or information which is not perhaps proper to be communicated to the public at the time when it is collated.

Therefore it has been managed in the Department of State; so that that which was in its nature confidential and ought to be kept secret should not pass out of the archives of the Department itself, and that which was of general commercial information should be gathered into a volume by itself. I suppose that is the reason. Still an amendment might be made, undoubtedly, by which all that information could be transferred to the statistical bureau which we have now in existence in the Treasury Department. I am not so particular about that, and if the Committee on Appropriations think it necessary to repeal the law on that point I have no particular objection. My friend, the Senator from New York, says he has some information relating to that subject, which I shall be very glad to hear. He will probably enlighten us, as he always does. But, with regard to the other particular matter, which the honorable Senator from Massachusetts has moved to strike out, I think it absolutely necessary that it should be stricken out. These things were provided for two years ago after very considerable examination and careful deliberation, and I have no doubt at all that they ought to remain, for the present at least.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, when the Senate shall have refused to sustain the Committee on Appropriations in recommending reductions so often that reducing expenditures becomes hopeless such recommendations ought to cease. A great soothsayer has said that—

"Things without remedy Should be without regard."

And yet I am inclined to think the committee would indulge itself in recommendations of reductions after the Senate had shown that its face was set like flint against them. There would be a sort of luxury in these recommendations to me if it were only to enjoy the pleasure I had from witnessing these exhibitions of loyalty on the part of distinguished members of this body. Edmund Burke, I think, defined loyalty to be a proud submission to something or other of which at the time he was talking; and there seems to be a sort of common law—if it were on a large scale it would be, perhaps, a comity of nations—which obliges the members of committees of this body to act, if necessary, as efficiently as fiery dragons in defending the Department with which their committee has relations on every side against the incursions and encroachments of the Committee on Appropriations.

This morning we proposed to reduce this "magnificent household" of the President, as I heard it called three or four years ago in the House of Representatives. It shocked my sense then, and it has ever since; but it might with great propriety in definition have been called a royal household for the President—a thing gross and unpardonable, as I believed at the time; but certainly unpardonable now. We proposed to reduce it to the point at which Abraham Lincoln uncomplainingly received it, and with it administered the affairs of the Government; and immediately the sword of my gallant friend from Connecticut [Mr. Dixon] leaped from its scabbard. I waited curiously to know for which committee he spoke, and at length he announced himself, that he appeared as a member of the Committee on Manufactures! He said it had not met; but I inferred that his business had been to manufacture plausible, although with great respect to him, poor excuses for continuing expenditures which cannot be defended. But after a most gallant, dashing, and brilliant foray my friend, the Senator, permitted an incoming Administration, now that the war is over, now that pardons are put out by general law, by proclamations of amnesty, as they are called, in place of being stricken off like hand-bills on a machine, as I saw them some time ago at the White House, we are permitted to dispense with the pardoning clerk and with the other people who go to make up the magnificent appointments of this Executive household.

Then we come to the State Department, and the hunt is headed, of course, by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] who is never found sleeping upon his post when anybody proposes a suggestion looking to curtailment in the Department of State. That is as I supposed it would be. Before the Clerk had finished the reading of this amendment I instinctively turned to the Senator from Massachusetts to see the orb of the State Department rise and shed light upon the impropriety and shortcoming of the Committee on Appropriations. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts was already on his feet before I expected to see him rise. [Laughter.] I retract anything I said in derogation of that statement.

Now, Mr. President, what is all this? The first question in the order in which some Senator treated it is, whether there shall be two Assistant Secretaries of State? Has the jaded ingenuity of the Senator from Massachusetts—I venture to say it is jaded, because it has been exercised so much and so often in favor of these applications—has the ingenuity of the Senator from Massachusetts started any reason why we should have now two Assistant Secretaries of State? I know he said the War Department and the Treasury Department are organized with heads of bureaus. If I were to stop and discuss that I think I could give ample reasons to warrant the saying that it makes nothing in favor of the idea that we are to have in the State Department, and in that Department alone, two Assistant Secretaries. Why is it that the Foreign Office of the Government from the morning of the Government until the war was able successfully to proceed without such a suggestion?

Mr. WILSON. It is since the war that the office of this Assistant Secretary has been created.

Mr. CONKLING. I am aware of it. After the completion of the war this office was created; but that is no matter for any purpose:

I will admit that it was after the war had ostensibly, and to a great extent really no doubt led to an accumulation and a diversity of business in the State Department, which required or was argued to require additional help, that a Second Assistant Secretary was supplied; and now, when looking to the future, that exigency has gone, why is it, I inquire, that we ought to have two Assistant Secretaries of State?

The incumbent is an excellent man, says one Senator, and another agrees with him. I have no doubt of it. If he is so excellent that he ought to be the Assistant Secretary, the under-chief of the Department, that argument might be interesting to the gentleman who now holds that place, for it might make this proposed incumbent formidable as a competitor, should a change be proposed. But is it logical to say that because a particular man who does not occupy an office would make an excellent incumbent for that office, therefore you should create a mate to it, to the end that he may occupy an office the fac simile of the one to which you say he belongs, but which he does not happen to possess? Mr. Hunter is a good man, I have no doubt; I have heard always that he was in his way, and I have no belief to the contrary; but if Mr. Hunter is desirable in the State Department, not as an under-Secretary, but in a place subordinate to that, then, according to practice, the actual experiment and the actual proof of the question, he belongs in the position of chief clerk of the Department, with pay appropriate to that place and appropriate to him.

Is there anything more to be said about it? Not, I submit, unless the argument is sound that whenever you cannot put a man in the place which you think he would adorn you as to create another place as near like that as you can make it in order that you may put him, if not on the same pedestal, on an equal footing.

Two other suggestions are made. One is as to Mr. E. Peshine Smith, who, my friend from Connecticut truly suggested, was once the reporter of our State, a good lawyer, a man of high respectability, and of unusual ability and attainment. Mr. E. Peshine Smith holds the place of examiner of claims in the State Department, and from this circumstance is derived again an argument personal to Mr. Smith, that he ought to be continued. Mr. President, I presume that I am not the only member of this body who knows that Mr. E. Peshine Smith, with or without this appropriation bill, with or without this amendment, does not intend and is not to be induced to hold hereafter this place. I doubt if he holds it now; but I have no information which will enable me to say that technically and formally his connection with it is severed; but it is matter of notoriety that Mr. Smith is to have charge of a daily journal in the State of New York, of which, I think, he has charge now. Therefore we may as well lay out of the case whatever there is personal to Mr. Smith, or whatever cogency there is in the fact that a man so good as Mr. Smith in the past held this place.

If the State Department hereafter requires an officer, in addition to the staff of that Department, to examine accounts or claims, that fact will no doubt appear instantaneously with the exigency, and then we can act upon it; but the theory now is that we are to continue it because Mr. Smith, an excellent man, is there. This is the argument, in effect, made by the Senator from Massachusetts, who introduced prominently the fact that Mr. E. Peshine Smith was there; and then by way of aiding and abetting him, my ingenious friend, [Mr. Dixon,] who is always sagacious and on the alert, interjected as a make-weight that this might be the reporter of the State of New York, with a view to magnify the force of this suggestion; and in that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, gracefully and apparently without any reluctance consented that this was the Mr. Smith.

Mr. DIXON. I think my friend is entirely mistaken. I have heard of Mr. Smith frequently, but never of this identical Mr. Smith. I never said that he was the reporter. Somebody else must have said it.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg pardon of the Senator from Connecticut. I am so accustomed to hearing timely and sagacious suggestions from him that hearing a "still small voice" in this neighborhood on this occasion making that ingenious allusion, I took it for granted that it must proceed from the sagacious leader of the party to which my friend belongs. I have long admired the dexterity with which, "in season and out of season," he put in make-weights like that. I do not know of any gentleman who excels him in that; and when I heard this, it sounded to me so like him that I took it for granted that it came from the political inventor from Connecticut. [Laughter.] However, I acquit the Senator of the authorship of the suggestion; but it came from somebody in his neighborhood; it came from an adjoining town to the Senator, precisely from which one in his neighborhood I do not know.

Now, Mr. President, to drop this matter of the examiner of claims, the information I had as a member of the committee, and that I have gathered from various sources was and is that this officer in the State Department is not a necessity looking to the future, and that the necessity which justified it in the past is diminishing so rapidly that it would be an imprudent thing to appropriate for it in the future.

Now, we come to the remaining one of this trio, the Superintendent of Statistics. I recollect when the Monitor engaged the Merrimac down in Hampton Roads, hearing some naval gentleman discoursing and describing, with great volume and zeal, the action, and talking about iron-clads. He said there never was such an invention; it was the prettiest thing and the handiest thing that ever was; and, said he, every family ought to have one. Now, I do not know but that every family ought to have a bureau of statistics and somebody to superintend it. [Laughter.] The Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] does not think so. He is not accustomed to thinking things which will not stand the test of reason and argument; and when I heard him say—I believe I am right in addressing this to him; I think I can fasten it on him—when I heard him say that the Bureau of Statistics ought to be consolidated, ought to have some local habitation and name somewhere in some one place, I felt very sure that I was right in thinking that, too. I had thought about it several times and had concluded that that would be an excellent suggestion and a practical one. There is such a place in the Treasury Department, and it seems to be one of those instances again in which the office and the incumbency of the office present some sort of repugnance or dissatisfaction. There is in the estimation of some Senators a man in the place who ought not to be there; but who the man is outside that ought to be there, I do not know, and it is not important I should; I shall be permitted to vote for his confirmation, following other Senators, when his name comes here, if he is appointed by the President, as I believe he is to be.

But there in that Department is a Bureau of Statistics, and there it should not be in this bureau, or clerkship, as the Senator from Massachusetts called it, if statistics are to be perpetuated in the State Department. The two things are repugnant; as we say sometimes in court, they cannot both be true, and one or the other ought to be overset. The House of Representatives, in looking at this, very likely found out something about the facts. The facts in general terms are these: The person who holds this office is one with whom I have long had an acquaintance; I knew him more than twenty years ago, and I have seen him from time to time ever since, and certainly I have no wish if the facts would warrant me in doing it, to criticise him in any respect.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1059) to relieve certain citizens of North Carolina of disabilities.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 806) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties on certain articles contributed to the National Association of American Sharpshooters, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) to authorize the enlargement of the Hygeia Hotel, at Fortress Monroe, Virginia;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 262) authorizing certain distilled spirits to the Surgeon General for the use of the Army hospitals;

A bill (H. R. No. 659) granting a pension to Sarah E. Pickell;

A bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of the widow and minor children of Benjamin B. Naylor, late a pilot on the gunboat Patapsco;

A bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to John Kelley;

A bill (H. R. No. 524) granting a pension to Austin M. Partridge;

A bill (H. R. No. 526) increasing the pension of Susan A. Mitchell;

A bill (H. R. No. 520) to place the name of Josephine K. Bugher on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. No. 519) granting a pension to Eliza J. Rennard, widow of William K. Rennard, deceased, late a private in tenth Ohio volunteers of war of 1861;

A bill (H. R. No. 517) granting a pension to Cornelia K. Schmidt, widow of Adam Schmidt, late a private in company A, thirty-seventh Ohio volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 280) granting a pension to Margaret Huston;

A bill (H. R. No. 258) for the relief of Mary B. Craig;

A bill (H. R. No. 257) for the relief of James L. Dickerson;

A bill (H. R. No. 246) granting a pension to Milton Anderson;

A bill (H. R. No. 152) for the relief of the widow and children of Henry E. Morse;

A bill (H. R. No. 665) granting a pension to Susan V. Berg;

A bill (H. R. No. 667) granting a pension to Mary Graham;

A bill (H. R. No. 668) granting a pension to Elizabeth Butler, widow of Cyrus Butler;

A bill (H. R. No. 769) granting a pension to David Howe;

A bill (H. R. No. 772) granting a pension to Robert McCrory;

A bill (H. R. No. 774) granting a pension to Amos Whitam;

A bill (H. R. No. 776) granting a pension to Zephaniah Knapp, of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 823) granting a pension to George W. Lochor;

A bill (H. R. No. 824) granting a pension to Annie Vaughn;

A bill (H. R. No. 826) granting a pension to Michael Mellon;

A bill (H. R. No. 827) granting a pension to Ann Wilson;

A bill (H. R. No. 828) for the relief of Captain William McKean;

A bill (H. R. No. 829) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Ten Eyck Williamson; and

A bill (H. R. No. 455) granting a pension to David Van Nordstrand.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill No. 605 is before the Senate, and the Senator from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, if every Senator has counted those pension bills he will be in a condition, I hope, to receive the remaining suggestion which I was going to make in reference to the superintendent of statistics in the State Department. The Senator from Nevada, [Mr. NYE,] I think, has, as I have, an old-time acquaintance with the incumbent of this place, and I inquired of that Senator a moment since if he knew how long it was since this gentleman had been within the District of Columbia, or in the city of Washington, and he mentioned an occasion two years ago on which he knew of his being here, and mentioned some other information which had been given him in regard to him, as to where he usually was, which, if he deems it worth while, he can state to the Senate. He did not state to me particularly what it was. I was unable to remember any occasion so recent as that when I had known of the presence of the incumbent of this place at the seat of Government. I have known of his being elsewhere. I do not mean "elsewhere" in the sense in which that word has been employed sometimes in Congress. [Laughter.] But I have known of his being at a distance from the capital, and therefore I ventured to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts in what orbit, geographically or astronomically, this official moved when he performed his functions. I think it very clear that he does not discharge the duties of this office in Washington, nor is he, in the language of accredited envoys, "near the Government of Washington" in any sense, diplomatic or otherwise. On the contrary, I think the fact is that he is habitually at least six hundred miles, as the mails and the people usually go, from the place at which this office is attributed to him.

Mr. President, when we consider that we have a Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department, and when we consider the state of this Bureau of Statistics, if bureau it be, when we consider its somewhat peripatetic character, it seems to me very hard to conclude that the Committee on Appropriations was called upon to say that a considerable sum of money, the amount necessary to pay the salaries of the chief officer and of an assistant, one clerk of the third class, should at this time be appropriated from the Treasury.

Now come, Mr. President, to a point at which I am admonished to stop, lest I make some suggestion in respect to economy or retrenchment. I think, if I go further, I may say something which will be on the confines of that question, and that "gives me pause." Without venturing a suggestion of that kind, without intimating that the Treasury is not bubbling over with money, and without doubting that we are bound "diligently to inquire and true presentment make" of every place where we think a little more money might advantageously or comfortably be used, it occurs to me that this particular point is one of the least tenable of all those I have heard recently suggested upon which we could manage to get rid of a small sum. On the contrary, I think, without any time to reflect, I could suggest a great many ways in which this money could be thrown away in a manner more justifiable and more plausible than this.

Upon the whole, then, Mr. President, and having the fear of the Senator from Massachusetts all the time before my eyes, and with the trepidation and self-examination which arises from that fact, I think that, having agreed to this report as a member of the committee, I shall put the best face on it and stand up here boldly and vote (if we are allowed to vote upon these provisions relative to the State Department) that a Secretary of State, an Assistant Secretary of State, and a chief clerk, a proper man suitably paid, are enough to squeeze through and take the chances for the time being of conducting the foreign relations of the Government; and when it shall turn out that it is necessary to have a lawyer in Mr. Smith's place, if they can get a good one, and there is really use for him, I shall then follow the Senator from Massachusetts in voting for the appropriation which may be necessary; and when we are not able to take a sufficient account of stock in the State Department, without having a Bureau of Statistics there, or a Bureau of Statistics floating somewhere else in space on the spinning disc of some planet or other, if it is not there, then I shall follow the Senator from Massachusetts in voting for that, too; but as I stand with the chairman of the committee near me and looking at me occasionally, I hardly see how I can retreat from agreeing to this report; and upon the whole, with all the courage I have, I shall stand up and vote when my name is called to try the experiment once of reducing a little the expenditures of the State Department.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] spoke of the luxury of listening to the debates of this body when led by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] and the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN.] It is always a luxury to me to listen to the Senator from New York; and seldom have I ever enjoyed a greater array of illustration or a more boundless profusion of vocabulary than that Senator has to-day indulged in. He began by telling us what an ancient soothsayer had said, though I do not know who that soothsayer was.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon. The soothsayer to whom I referred was born and died on the 23d of April, and that day was not a very distant day, looking back by centuries. I did not say that he was an ancient soothsayer by any means.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator referred to a soothsayer; and he illustrated his argument, as he nearly always does, with historical illustrations. Then he spoke of what Mr. Burke had said, and gave us his definition of patriotism or loyalty. I supposed he was going to give us Dr. Johnson's definition, too.

Mr. CONKLING. That was "the last refuge of a scoundrel," you know.

Mr. DIXON. I supposed the Senator was going to give us that, too. Then he made other allusions, and finally the Senator charged me with having interfered with this debate, and informed the Senate who Mr. Smith was. When I heard that charge, I supposed of course I must be mistaken, but I had no recollection of it. I have known many gentlemen of that name; but who this particular individual is I cannot say.

But the Senator attacked me with his usual severity—it would have been severe but for his good nature—because I had ventured to intimate to the Senate that I thought there was a better place, a more seemly and more becoming place, for economy, here in this body, than to deprive the President of the United States of two or three clerks. I found in the bill a provision that the President should be stripped of some of his clerical aid, and I ventured to say upon that proposition something which did not seem to commend itself to those advocates of economy of whom my friend from New York is the leader and the chief. I find that they always take some impracticable scheme of economy, and after having advocated it he sits down in utter despair because he is unable to advance his scheme. I thought that if there was a real, sincere desire to economize the expenses of the Government, it would be more fit, more seemly, on the part of the Senate to cut off the clerkships of some of the committees of this body that never meet. I ventured to say so, not thinking that I should be attacked as I have been by my friend from New York, though in a manner which actually makes it almost agreeable to me, so extremely amusing and interesting is that Senator that to be his victim is almost a pleasure. If that Senator really does desire to play the economist, as it is pretty evident to my mind that he does, here is an opportunity for him. He has been here now I think about a year, and I have heard him discuss a great many subjects, but I think economy is his theme. As to the final result of all, he comes down to that; that is the refrain, "economy." If he wishes to economize, let me tell him what he can do. Let him take the hint which I have already given. This very bill provides an appropriation of $33,000 for clerks of committees of this body—private secretaries to Senators. The honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations took great pains to insert in italics an appropriation of $2,200 for a clerk to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not say that it is not necessary.

I know the other House of Congress originates all these appropriation bills, and we have only to receive them as they come from there; but probably a clerk is necessary to that committee at an expense of $2,200. It struck me, however, that when the chairman of that committee was depriving the President of the United States of a secretary he might have been willing to do a little clerical work himself; but still I do not say, nor do I believe, that a secretary or clerk for the Committee on Appropriations is improper. I only allude to it as showing what he deems necessary.

Then there are three other committees that have $2,200 clerks; and then there is a sweeping appropriation of $25,000 for clerks of committees of this body, and pages and carryalls. But let me tell the Senators that those pages and carryalls are paid for out of another appropriation for "miscellaneous items," and the $25,000 will all go for clerks, and that will not be sufficient to pay them, because there are about twenty committee clerks with a salary amounting to $1,800 a year, in addition to the $2,200 clerks.

Mr. WILSON. No, they are paid by the day.

Mr. DIXON. This is really an abuse; and it is not a small matter, though it may be small in amount. Take the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate as an example. When I had the honor of being chairman of the committee I never thought of having a clerk. The Secretary of the Senate is the clerk of that committee; but now you have given it a separate committee clerk. The Secretary of the Senate presents his bills to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and he keeps the records himself. But now you have appointed a clerk to that clerk—a clerk to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate! It is a very useful and convenient thing to my friend from New Hampshire, [Mr. CRAGIN.] He deserves it; I agree he ought to have a private secretary furnished to him; but I do not think he ought to vote against one for Andrew Johnson after having received one for his sole benefit; it is for nobody else's.

Again, take the case of the Committee on Manufactures, of which I am a member. It is highly proper that my friend from Rhode Island, [Mr. SPRAGUE,] the chairman of that committee, should have a clerk for the committee. The labors of that committee are arduous. True, we have thus far deferred them, and we propose to do so until the end of the session. They have been so arduous that we have not been able yet to surmount the infinite Alps that rise before us. We have not commenced or undertaken to do anything, though, of course, we shall undoubtedly do something. Our clerk is there.

I do not know why my friend from New York does not attack this abuse. It is not because he does not know it. Ignorance can never be pleaded by him as an excuse in regard to any abuse under this Government. I have wondered whether it is not possible that he may look forward to the time when, having been in the Senate as long, perhaps, as I have been, he may be a chairman of a committee and have a clerk himself. I cannot say but that that is the reason of his silence on this matter. He may be waiting for the time when he shall be chairman of a committee. I cannot suppose that he has overlooked this matter.

I confess, Mr. President, that I think the attack upon the clerical force at the Executive Mansion is very small business; and I wonder at it in view of the fact that the Senate thinks it proper to give to nearly every Senator who has been here two or three years a private secretary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We give one to the President.

Mr. DIXON. But here are twenty-four private secretaries to do the legislative business of twenty-four Senators; and does the Senator suppose that the whole executive business of this Government is to be performed by the President of the United States with four secretaries? He has no more secretaries than he needs. I care nothing about the question whether he shall be deprived of one or more secretaries. I cannot positively say that he needs all that assistance. If the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will say that there are too many, more than are needed, I shall defer to this opinion; but I ventured to say to him that I thought we might begin nearer home, and I repeat the saying, notwithstanding the speech of my friend from New York.

I think that if my friend from New York is really sincere in his desire to make himself the champion of economy, as it is evident he intends to do, if he wishes to present himself to the country as the man who on all occasions, no matter what they may be, in season or out of season, shall stand up here and oppose every appropriation which shall be extravagant, there is the place for him to begin. In my judgment he will then have the credit of attacking an abuse here in this very body. But no, silent as the grave, that silver tongued eloquence of his is never heard upon anything here. Not a word has he to say as to the question whether private secretaries shall be furnished to Senators; but when Mr. Peshine Smith, a very respectable gentleman I have no doubt, or when some one that nobody ever heard of, is in question, then we hear the voice of my friend from New York.

He ventures to attack me and the party to which I belong, of which he says I am a leader. That party is a unit almost in this body, very small. He can attack me, and he can attack the President, who seems to have very few friends at this time here in this body. Would it not have been better, I ask my friend in good faith, for him to attack a real grievance and then to acquire the credit and honor he desires. Coming from the great State of New York, he might lead in this great foray on the expenses of the Government. Nobody is better qualified. I will not dwell upon his capacity; we have had examples enough to know all about it; but if the Senator would follow my advice on that subject, although of course I cannot be considered capable of advising him, and attack a real abuse, I think he would acquire more credit than he otherwise will do.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, we have just listened to two very interesting speeches, which will undoubtedly lead to many more upon the same subject; and as there is no probability of getting through this bill to-night, and there is an important measure which ought to be acted upon, I hope the Senator from Maine will not object to my moving to postpone the further consideration of this bill until one o'clock to-morrow, with a view to proceeding to the consideration of the veto message. Let us dispose of the Arkansas question.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest that we get a vote on this proposition.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is the very thing you cannot do.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is plain enough that if I yield to all propositions for delay I shall never be able to pass an appropriation bill. At the same time, if it be the pleasure of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill which the Senator from Illinois has in charge, the importance of which I acknowledge, and there is a probability of finishing it to-day, so that I shall not have the interruption to-morrow, I shall not object. Is it the purpose of the Senator to finish that bill to-night?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope we can do so. Several Senators. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNER. I would ask my friend, the Senator from Maine, if we cannot have a vote on this pending proposition?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will allow this bill to go over informally for the purpose of taking up the bill referred to by the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed by informally if there be no objection. No objection being made the bill is passed by.

REPRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS—VETO.

The Senate proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. No. 1039) entitled "An act to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress," with the President's objections thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding, on which the question must be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter into a lengthy discussion of the bill and veto message which are now under consideration. It is a short bill, but I think there was never so much iniquity concentrated in a bill of this extent.

The bill does not purport to be a bill to admit Arkansas as a State into the Union, but it provides that the State of Arkansas shall be entitled and admitted to representation in Congress "as one of the States of the Union upon the following fundamental condition: that the constitution of Arkansas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted." That is the whole of the bill. The proposition is that the State of Arkansas shall by this bill be admitted to representation in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. Where does Congress derive any power to pass such an act? What provision of the Constitution authorizes this legislation? Arkansas is either a State in the Union or she is not a State in the Union, but a Territory. If she be a State in the Union she is entitled to representation in both Houses of Congress by the express provisions of the Constitution, and neither Congress nor any other power has the authority to deprive her of that right. If Arkansas is not a State in the Union I suppose the theory of the gentlemen who deny that proposition must be that she is a Territory of the United States. If she be a Territory, then an enabling act ought to be passed to authorize her people to form a State constitution with a view to her admission into the Union as a State.

Now, sir, if there be any other theory which covers the case of Arkansas, my mind has not yet comprehended it, nor have I heard it suggested by any one. Upon either of these hypotheses, I ask the question, Has Congress any power whatever to legislate upon the subject in the form of this bill? If you resort to constitutional power, there is as much power in Congress to abolish the government of the State of Maine which my honorable friend before me [Mr. MORRILL] represents with so much ability in part in the Senate, and then to pass a law to admit the State of Maine to representation in the two Houses of Congress after having excluded that representation from other States. Is Congress omnipotent? Has Congress powers outside of the Constitution and that are not delegated by the people of the States in that instrument? I suppose not. If that be true, then where is the power of Congress first to abrogate and destroy the State government of Arkansas, and then to pass laws for her reconstruction, prescribing who of her people shall vote and who shall not vote, and who shall be elected to office and who shall not be?

If I understand the facts aright, Arkansas some thirty years ago was admitted as a State into the Union. According to my recollection, she never changed her constitution from the one under which she originally became a State; but of that fact I do not speak with confidence. If she changed it, it was but once, and some years before the rebellion broke out, and she never made any amendment of her constitution when she went into secession or during the war. That State called a convention, and that convention passed an ordinance of secession, and the State became a quasi member of the southern confederacy; and, if I am correctly informed, the constitution identical in all its provisions with that which existed in Arkansas before the rebellion continued to be her constitution throughout the whole of the trouble.

What, then, is the condition of Arkansas. She went into the rebellion with a constitution approved of either tacitly or expressly by Congress, and under which she had continued to be a member of the Union for a great number of years. She made no change in that constitution. In the course of time the rebellion was put down by force of arms, and it found Arkansas in possession of the same constitution under which she had lived as a member of the United States for many years. But by a convention of her people called after the suppression of the rebellion, rescinded her ordinance of secession, passed a resolution in which she renounced the right of secession, and the Legislature ratified the thirteenth amendment of the constitution abolishing slavery throughout the United States. More than this, she repudiated her public debt contracted during the war, and her convention abolished slavery within her borders. She has been by various acts passed by Congress recognized as a State of the Union. The Supreme Court has heard cases coming up from Arkansas, as one of the United States, before and since the rebellion. The President by many acts, in the appointment of marshals, collectors, and other United States officers in Arkansas, has recognized that State as one of the States of the Union.

Here, then, is a State that never changed its constitution and form of government, but did attempt to secede from the Union and to attach itself as a member of the southern confederacy adhering to precisely the same constitution and government which it had previously possessed, and when the rebellion was suppressed rehabilitating itself under the same constitution as a member of the United States and accepting the conditions that were suggested by the executive department of the Government of the United States; and then being recognized by the official acts of Congress, of the Supreme Court, and of the President of the United States as a member of the Union, and electing Senators and Representatives to Congress, and sending them up with their credentials of election, and asking that they be admitted to represent her as one of the United States.

Sir, I have now in my desk the Governor's commission of three Senators in Congress from that State, who were elected by her Legislature after she had thus been recognized by the Government of the United States in all its departments as a member of the Union. Two of these commissions have not yet expired. These men presented themselves at the bar of the Senate some two or three years ago, and exhibited official evidence of their having been chosen as Senators from that State, and demanded, as their right and the right of the State, that they should be admitted to their seats. Now, to my mind the simple act of duty and of the soundest policy was then for the Senate and House of Representatives to have permitted the members of the two bodies who came here from that State to take their seats. All the other States that had been engaged in the rebellion took the same course as Arkansas, sent up their Senators and Representatives, and complied with the same conditions to reestablish proper relations with the Government of the United States. All that was necessary to have now a perfect union of all the States, and their full participation in all their rights under the Government of the United States, was simply for the two Houses to have admitted their Senators and Representatives.

Mr. President, I do not believe that Congress had any legitimate power to take a contrary course. Congress for the last two or three years has been engaged largely in abolishing State governments, in denying to them the admission of their representatives in the two Houses of Congress, in excluding the presidential functions and power from these States, and superseding it by the power of Congress, represented by the General of the armies and his subordinates, and expelling the courts, United States and State, and superseding them by military tribunals.

Mr. President, all the legislation of Congress in relation to the southern States and their reconstruction, as it is termed, has to be the most flagitious usurpation of power. There is not a shadow of authority for it in the Constitution. But, Mr. President, I am not going extensively into this subject. I rejoice to think that the terrible reign and rule of radicalism draws to a close, and the restoration of the Constitution and the Union, of law, order, and liberty, approaches in the distance, and before another year has passed away will have composed the passions engendered and healed the wounds inflicted by the great civil war and made us again one people. Before the formation of the Constitution each State was a distinct and independent political sovereignty and possessed of all the powers of a nation. The people of the several States voluntarily formed the Government of the United States by relinquishing a portion of their sovereignty and powers and organizing them into a common government by a written Constitution. That instrument forms a limited Government, without any original, but wholly of delegated powers; and has, and can have, no powers whatever but those which are vested in it by the express language of the Constitution, or its necessary implication; and all the sovereignty and powers of which the people of the several States did not divest themselves and embody in the common Government by the Constitution, were both by implication and the words of one of its provisions, reserved by the States and people respectively. Among those retained is the sovereign and exclusive power of each State to make and alter at pleasure its own constitution and form of government, and manage its own internal and domestic affairs in any manner that does not conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

The Constitution and Government of the United States may be dissolved and brought to an end by the consent of the people of the several States, or by successful revolution; and it exists in perpetuity until terminated in one of those modes; but the States, with their governments, exist in absolute perpetuity, with the power and right of self-government in their people, under the Constitution of the United States, which they can never alienate or forfeit, and of which they cannot be divested but by conquest or revolution.

The most essential constituent of this sovereign and reserved power of self-government by the States is the right to confer upon or to withhold suffrage and all other political rights and powers from any portion of their people who did not possess them when the constitution was adopted.

Congress has no constitutional or rightful power whatever to invest the negro population of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas with the right of suffrage, or any other political right.

Congress has no constitutional or rightful power whatever to abolish the governments of those States formed by their people who possessed the political power of the several States at the time; or to substitute provisional military governments in their stead; or to authorize a part of the white people and the negroes of those States to form other governments for them; and the governments set up, or about to be set up, by the usurped power of Congress, through the instrumentality of their negro population, and the General and Army of the United States, and by the detraction of the President and the Supreme Court, are utterly null and void.

The free white people of the United States will not allow the ignorant and stolid negroes of those ten States, and the white adventurers who managed them, to appoint a President. The electors chosen under the authority of the spurious and burlesque governments recently set up in those States, backed and supported by whatever power, will not be counted in the next presidential election.

I will present this position in a more striking point of view. There are in all the States three hundred and seven electoral votes. The Radical party and their candidate, General Grant, and the Army, will not suffer the legitimate governments in the ten southern States to choose electors; and those chosen by their negro governments, numbering seventy, being excluded, will leave two hundred and thirty-seven, and one hundred and nineteen will be required to elect a President. The conservative candidate will probably receive the electoral vote of California, Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, and Pennsylvania, making an aggregate of one hundred and thirty-eight.

If the Radical candidate were to receive the vote of all the other States, which is not probable, excluding those chosen by negro governments, he would have ninety-nine electoral votes, or thirty-nine less than the conservative candidate; but add to the vote of General Grant the seventy electors chosen by the negro governments of the southern States, and it would make one hundred and sixty-nine votes, thirty-one more than the conservative candidate. In this way the negroes of the ten southern States would not only defeat the efforts of the white people of the United States to elect their President, but would appoint a President for them in flagitious violation of the Constitution. This grand enterprise of fraud, force, and usurpation cannot succeed. The candidate for the presidency who receives the majority of the electoral votes chosen by the free white men of the United States will be constitutionally and de jure the President, and they will see to it that he shall be de facto.

Ambitious, bad, and reckless men will be met and foiled at the threshold of their further scheme to force negro suffrage on the other States, at a more convenient season, by the agency of a President and members of Congress chosen by negro governments, constructed partly for that purpose.

Those governments are no more obligatory upon the white people whom they oppress, or to be respected by all good and true citizens, than if they had been set up by the Emperor of France or the Queen of Great Britain; the power that foisted them upon an erring, gallant, subjugated, penitent, but proud and protesting people, was no less alien and illegitimate for that purpose. Those governments must be heaved off from their crushed victims, or their enslavement will be the precursor of the fate of all the other white people of the United States. So many of them cannot be enslaved, and the others continue long to be free; but they must be delivered from slavery, and freedom for all be provided with better guaranties.

Prudence and their own safety, as well as justice, magnanimity, and fraternity call upon the yet free and patriotic people of the other States to rescue their race and kindred of the southern States from the degrading and galling chains of political slavery to negroes. The work has begun and is progressing; and when it is completed it will be for their enfranchised brothers in the full restoration and enjoyment of all their constitutional liberties, rights, and powers, to decide for themselves whether or not they will confer on the negro population of their respective States any or what extent of suffrage.

The Caucasian is the highest type of man, and its vast and rapidly increasing numbers in the United States recoil with instinctive disgust and horror from the idea of amalgamation with the negro, the lowest race, and the national weakness and degradation it would produce; the examples of Mexico and the countries of South America powerfully confirm the teachings of their irrepressible instincts.

This white race is also fully impressed with this truth, that if five millions of negroes are allowed to dwell in one third of the States, if there is to be any permanent peace between the races, the negro must occupy that lower and subordinate position in which he was placed by their Creator. Their enfranchisement from personal slavery, and their investment of all civil rights, are not incompatible with the welfare of either race. But wholly incapable of any well ordered self-government as the negro is, in any condition from primitive barbarism to any stage of civilization which he can attain, his association with the white man in the exercise of political power would introduce a great disturbing element, and be productive of various and grave disorder and evil; and with his efforts to obtain social equality would produce conflicts that would result in the destruction of the negro, or his expulsion from the country, or his reduction to a quasi slavery. It would be wisdom for the African race who inhabit our country, to ask the white race to guaranty to them equal civil rights, and to decline, expressly and wholly, political rights and social equality. Upon this platform the negro would generally find in the white man a kind and protecting friend; but on that which he now occupies, and to which he has been beguiled by false friends, he will always be confronted by a superior race and a stern and conquering foe.

But besides sweeping away forever from the people of the southern States the worst governments that now exists in the civilized world, governments which organize both despotism and anarchy, the true, good, and brave men of the United States have other and most important work to perform. They have to restore our mixed system of State and national Governments, as the foremost men of all this earth made it; each State having equal rights with all the others, and the exclusive and recognized sovereign power to make and alter at pleasure its own constitution and form of government, and to manage its own domestic affairs in harmony with the Constitution of the United States; and the Government of the United States to be restricted to the regulation of affairs between the United States and foreign Governments, and among the several States, and to be supreme within the sphere of its constitutional powers.

The liberties of the people are founded upon the States, the exclusive power of their people to make their own governments and laws upon their reserved sovereignty and rights; and the stability, strength, and security of the whole system is imparted by the due execution of the powers with which the people of the several States invested the General Government by the Constitution. In our vast country liberty can be secured only by the States, their governments, and the inviolability of their reserved sovereignty and rights; peace, stability, and strength only by the Government of the United States, administered in conformity and subordination to the Constitution. The adjustment of powers, which the Constitution made between the States and the United States, has been essentially, almost fatally, disorganized by the Radical party. The difficult but imperative duty of every true and enlightened patriot is to combine and struggle together until it is restored.

They have to crush out the fell spirit of radicalism from the whole land. They have to gather up and reconstruct the broken fragments of the Constitution, and restore in harmony, authority, and power our great charter of government and liberty. They have to erect other defenses against the encroaching and usurping tendencies inherent in Congress; and to restore the Presidency and the Supreme Court to the possession and exercise of the important powers and functions which that dominating department has, for the time, wrested from them. They have to take additional guarantees that the Governments of the United States and the States shall move without collision in their respective orbits, as described by the Constitution; and that the Supreme Court shall always promptly execute its great conservative power of deciding questions of conflict of jurisdiction between them. They have to recover those priceless rights and liberties of person, property, self-government, and pursuit of happiness which are the chief ends of our scheme that have been temporarily betrayed and overthrown by the faithless sentinels and guards charged with their watch and defense, and devise more securities for their enjoyment against the assault of internal enemies and the perversion of power by governmental officials.

I have given but a sketch of the great and most interesting work that has to be undertaken by all our countrymen who are worthy of their heritage of liberty and constitutional government. Until it is performed they have no stable government, no liberty, no security of person or property. The accomplishment of this work is their present, continuing, deathless, immortal mission, passing from sire to son. Let every true man give to it, if needful, all the days of his life; and if in that time it is not completed, let him bequeath his part of the progressing work to his children, and to his children's children, as the most sacred and precious of all trusts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to state that the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] and myself have paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. DIXON.] The Senator from Maine was obliged to leave the Senate Chamber on account of ill health. If he were here, he and I would vote in the affirmative, and the Senator from Connecticut in the negative.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—year 30, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Connors, Corbett, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Harlan, Howard, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Patterson, of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Wilson, and Yates—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Davis, Decolittle, Hendricks, McCreery, Patterson of Tennessee, and Saulsbury—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Dixon, Drake, Fowler, Frothingham, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Vickers, and Williams—17.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 30, and the nays 7. So (two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative) the bill is passed, and having been passed by a similar vote in the other House, has become a law, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 306) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties on certain articles contributed to the National Association of American Sharpshooters, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOWARD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 22, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. The reading of the Journal of Saturday's proceedings was, by unanimous consent, dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider, commencing with the State of Maine.

REGISTRY OF VESSELS.

Mr. PIKE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1285) to repeal an act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels, approved December 21, 1792, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DRAWBACK ON SHIP-BUILDING MATERIALS.

Mr. LYNCH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1286) to allow drawback on articles used in the construction of vessels; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. KELSEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1287) to provide for funding the national debt and for taxing the interest-bearing bonds hereafter issued by the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELSEY. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee of Ways and Means will consider and report on this subject without delay.

SAMUEL P. TODD.

Mr. ROBINSON introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 301) relative to the claim of Samuel P. Todd, deceased; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

SCHENECTADY AND ST. LAWRENCE RAILROAD.

Mr. MARVIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1288) to aid in the construction of a railroad for military and postal purposes through the wilderness of northern New York, from Schenectady to the St. Lawrence river; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OPENING OF A NEW INLET.

Mr. HAIGHT submitted a memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, and several thousand citizens of the eastern portion of said State, asking Congress for an appropriation to open an inlet from the head of Barnegat bay to the Atlantic ocean, on the New Jersey coast, for the preservation of life along the coast, to facilitate commerce, and to protect Government property from the encroachments of the sea; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EDMUND W. WANDELL.

Mr. WOODWARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1289) for the relief of Edmund W. Wandell; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

APPRENTICES IN NAVY-YARD SAIL LOFTS.

Mr. O'NEILL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1290) relative to indentured apprentices and apprentices under instructions in the mechanical shops and sail lofts of navy-yards; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MARY HASSETT.

Mr. STOKES introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 302) for the relief of the heirs of Mary Hassett, of the State of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

RELIEF FROM POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. COBURN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1291) to provide for the relief from disabilities of certain persons who have been engaged in rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, and ordered to be printed.

INDEPENDENCE OF CRETE.

Mr. SHANKS introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 303) for the recognition of the independence of Crete; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the Globe, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the civilization of this age calls for the most liberal forms of government among men; that it is the privilege and the duty of this Government to foster in every just and proper way the rise and progress of free institutions wherever the people are competent to maintain the same; that the people of Crete having shown by their long suffering and Christian forbearance, by their fortitude, by their devotion and their heroic defense of their homes, their country, and their religion, that they are competent to maintain a free government, it is the duty of the United States to recognize them as free and independent.

ANDREW J. GRAY.

Mr. HOLMAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1292) to increase the pension of Andrew J. Gray; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

COAL-TAR AND GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. INGERSOLL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1293) to incorporate the Washington and Georgetown Coal-Tar and Gas-Light Company; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

CITIZENS' GAS COMPANY.

Mr. INGERSOLL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1294) to incorporate the Citizens' Gas Company; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

WILLIAM J. COTTY.

Mr. BENJAMIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1295) granting a pension to William J. Cotty, late of the twenty-first Missouri infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

POST ROUTE IN IOWA.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1296) to establish a post route from Buckingham, Iowa, to Laporte City, Iowa; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

OCEAN TELEGRAPH CABLE.

Mr. COBB introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1297) to grant the right to lay and land an ocean telegraph cable; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MENDOCINO RESERVATION.

Mr. HIGBY presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking that the Mendocino reservation be abandoned and the land reopened for preemption; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SURVEY OF LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HIGBY also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking an appropriation by Congress for surveys of public lands in said State; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HARBOR OF SAN DIEGO.

Mr. HIGBY also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking aid from Congress to improve the harbor of San Diego, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NATIVE GRAPE BRANDY.

Mr. HIGBY also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking Congress to remit or reduce the tax on native grape brandy; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

INDIAN DEPREDACTIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HIGBY also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking that steps be taken by the General Government to ascertain the losses suffered by citizens of the State in late Indian depredations and making indemnity for the same; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PROTECTION TO FOREIGN-BORN CITIZENS.

Mr. HIGBY also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking Congress to demand of foreign Governments full and ample protection to our foreign-born citizens while temporarily residing under those Governments; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MAIL ROUTE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HIGBY also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking Congress to demand of foreign Governments full and ample protection to our foreign-born citizens while temporarily residing under those Governments; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HIGBY also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking Congress to grant the same aid in lands and subsidies to the southern Pacific railroad as have been granted to the Union and Central Pacific railroads; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

CALIFORNIA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. HIGBY also presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, asking Congress to allow the State to invest in unencumbered, productive real estate the proceeds of the one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land donated to the State by Congress for the construction of an agricultural and mechanics' arts college; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

NAVIGATION OF THE COLORADO RIVER.

Mr. HIGBY also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking Congress to aid Captain Trueworthy, of San Francisco, to perfect the navigation of the Colorado river, in the Territory of Arizona; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LAND DISTRICTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. JOHNSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1298) to transfer the counties of Sierra and Nevada from the Sacramento land district to the Marysville land district; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SETTLERS UPON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WINDOM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1299) conferring certain rights on settlers on the public lands of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENTRIES UNDER HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. WINDOM also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1300) authorizing repayments in cases of illegal entries under the homestead law; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1301) to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Humboldt to the Colorado river; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TREATIES.

Mr. TAFTE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1302) to regulate treaties with Indian tribes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MAIL ROUTES IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. TAFTE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1303) to establish certain mail routes in the State of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REMISSION OF DUTY.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1304) to remit the duty on a meridian circle imported as a present for the Astronomical Observatory, Cambridge, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ISLANDS IN GREAT MIAMI RIVER.

Mr. MUNGEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1305) to repeal an act relative to islands in the Great Miami river, approved March 2, 1868; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. MUNGEN also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 304) to suspend action by the General Land Office under the provisions of an act relative to islands in the Great Miami river, approved March 2, 1868; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

MONITOR AND MERRIMAC.

Mr. GRISWOLD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1306) allowing prize money to the officers and crew of the Monitor for the fight with the Merrimac in Hampton Roads, March 9, 1862; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

TRANSPORTATION OF UNITED STATES MAILS.

Mr. TWICHELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1307) in relation to the transportation of United States mails by railroad companies; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order, during the remainder of the morning hour, is the call of the States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Indiana, where the call rested at the expiration of the morning hour on Monday last. No resolution was offered from Indiana.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AND OHIO.

Mr. RAUM introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 305) in respect to the construction of bridges over the Ohio and Mississippi rivers; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RAUM. I call the previous question on the joint resolution.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that hereafter all bridges to be constructed, and in process of construction, over the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, and the span of any such bridge covering the main channel of the river shall be five hundred feet in length in the clear.

The question was upon seconding the previous question; and being taken, upon a division, there were—ayes 40, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RAUM, and Mr. TRIMBLE of Kentucky, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 46, noes 62.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky. I desire to discuss this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution, giving rise to debate, goes over under the rule.

Mr. RAUM. I ask that the joint resolution be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. VAN AERNAM.

COMMEMORATION OF UNION DEAD.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the proceedings of the different cities, towns, &c., recently held in commemoration of the gallant heroes who have sacrificed their lives in defense of the Republic, and the record of the ceremonial of the decoration of the honored tombs of the departed, shall be collected and bound, under the direction of such person as the Speaker shall designate, for the use of Congress, and that a sum not exceeding $1,000 be appropriated for this purpose out of the contingent fund of the House.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. NEWCOMB. I submit the following resolution, and upon it call the previous question:

Resolved, That this House will meet at eleven o'clock a. m. during the remainder of this session, and that there shall be two morning hours each day, when it does not conflict with the present orders of the House in relation to the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. The latter part of this resolution in relation to morning hours requires unanimous consent or a suspension of the rules. A majority vote can fix the hour of meeting.

Mr. NEWCOMB. Then I move that the rules be suspended.

The SPEAKER. The rules cannot be suspended during the morning hour.

Mr. NEWCOMB. Then I modify my resolution so that it shall provide only that the hour of daily meeting for the remainder of the session shall be eleven o'clock a. m.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest to the gentleman to modify his resolution so as to provide for evening sessions instead of meeting at eleven o'clock.

Mr. NEWCOMB. We can do both.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am willing to meet at eleven o'clock until the tax bill shall have been disposed of. But after that we will have very little important business to attend to; and if we have too much time we will be left a prey to all sorts of schemes to rob the public Treasury.

Mr. NEWCOMB. There is a great mass of business before the committees in which the public is interested, and which has not yet been reported.

Mr. BENTON. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

OSAGE RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. McCLURG submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be, and hereby are, instructed to inquire into the expediency, utility, and public policy of making a liberal grant of land, including the vacant land along the course of the Osage river in the State of Missouri, for the improvement of said river.

Mr. McCLURG moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I submit the following resolution, and upon it I call the previous question:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House the interests of the country require that the public debt should be reorganized and reduced to a simple and uniform system, more easily understood by the people than it is in its present complicated form, and that the interest on the debt should be reduced, and that for this purpose the Committee of Ways and Means are instructed to prepare and report to the House at as early a day as possible a bill providing for the funding of the public debt and the reduction of the rate of interest thereon in such manner and to such an extent that taxation may be reduced and equalized as far as possible consistently with good faith to national creditors and justice to the people.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will modify that resolution so as to insert the word "reconstructed" in place of the word "reorganized." It will correspond with our habits here.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. PRUYN. I want it referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. It is referred to that committee with instructions.

Mr. SPALDING. I hope the word "requested" will be inserted instead of "instructed."

Mr. WARD. I think the committee ought to be instructed.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I insist on the resolution in its present form.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPALDING. I withdraw the motion to lay upon the table for the present.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 36.

Mr. WARD. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 40.

So the motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred on seconding the previous question, and it was refused.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. This motion to refer to the Committee of Ways and Means defeats the resolution, and I therefore demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—ayes 67, nays 69, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Brooks, Churchill, Coburn, Cornell, Covode, Delano, Driggs, Elliot, Ferriss, Fields, Garfield, Griewood, Hawkins, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hulburd, Jenckes, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, Mercer, Moore, Morrill, Mullins, Mungen, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Twichell, Upson, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—67.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Axtell, Baker, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Boyer, Buckland, Butler, Cary, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferry, Fox, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gravely, Grover, Haight, Harding, Holman, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, Kerr, Knott, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Mallory, McClurg, McCormick, Newcomb, Niblack, Orth, Pike, Polsley, Price, Raum, Scofield, Shanks, Stewart, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Trump, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Woodward—69.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barnes, Barnum, Bromwell, Broomall, Burr, Cake, Daves, Dixon, Dodge, Finney, Halsey, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Jones, Kelley, Ketcham, Kitchen, Ladin, William Lawrence, Lincoln, Marshall, McCullough, Miller, Moorhead, Morrissey, Nicholson, Nunn, Perham, Peters, Phelps, Pile, Randall, Robinson, Ross, Selye, Sitgreaves, Aaron F. Stevens, Stone, Thomas, John Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Wood—53.

So the House refused to refer the resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 450) relative to filing reports of railroad companies;

An act (S. No. 426) for the relief of Thomas Crossley;

An act (S. No. 184) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Corcoran; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 134) authorizing a change of mail service between Fort Abercrombie and Helena.

CURRENCY DEBT.

Mr. PRICE offered the following resolution; and demanded the previous question thereon:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appropriating $50,000,000, to take up the matured and maturing indebtedness of the United States, which is payable in currency, as the same may become due; said amount to be taken from the coin in the Treasury, to be sold for that purpose, as needed, by public proposal, and providing by law that no new indebtedness shall be incurred on the part of the United States, by the sale or issue of its bonds, notes or other securities, until the coin reserve in the Treasury is reduced to $25,000,000; said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask my colleague to modify the resolution so as to instruct the committee. I think it should be so modified.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not think that ought to be done. Does the gentleman wish that the committee should be instructed?

Mr. PRICE. I think it is better as it is.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It instructs the Committee on Appropriations; it should be the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Such resolutions generally go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. PRICE. I prefer it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPALDING. I give notice that if the previous question is voted down I shall move to amend by inserting the Committee of Ways and Means.

On seconding the previous question there were—ayes 40, noes 64.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. SPALDING. I now move to amend by inserting the Committee of Ways and Means; and I renew the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded—ayes seventy-three, noes not counted.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

The main question was then ordered; and the question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SPALDING, it was agreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

WAREHOUSING SYSTEM.

Mr. MORRELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Manufactures, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1308) to modify the warehousing system; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, together with the accompanying report, and recommended to the committee.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

The House resumed the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 1059) to relieve certain citizens of North Carolina of disabilities was rejected, the consideration of the question being postponed till to-day, on which Mr. BROOMALL was entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROOMALL. I do not desire to occupy the time of the House upon this matter after the somewhat lengthy debate on Friday last. I wish first to have a vote taken on the question of reconsideration, which the House may or may not make a test vote.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will a majority vote be sufficient for a reconsideration?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. BROOMALL. It will probably be a test vote; I would like to have it such.

The SPEAKER. A majority can agree to an amendment, and upon any vote up to the very last, except upon the passage of the bill. Any auxiliary motion, therefore, like the motion to reconsider, requires only a majority vote.

Mr. BROOMALL. I will call for a vote on the motion to reconsider, and reserve my right to the floor until the present motion is acted upon. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BROOKS. I understand the gentleman to say he considers the vote on the question of reconsideration a test vote. Am I right?

Mr. BROOMALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROOKS. Well, I shall vote to reconsider, in the hope that Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, and Mr. Houston, of Alabama, will be put in.

Mr. BROOMALL. That far it will not be a test vote.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and the question being taken there were—ayes 90, noes 19.

So the vote by which the report was rejected was reconsidered.

The question again recurred on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BROOMALL. I yield for a few moments to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take up only a very few moments of the time of the House, but inasmuch as I intend to vote for this bill I thought it was due at least that I should have a chance to explain the reasons why I do so. At the time the bill was before the House originally I opposed it, and stated my opposition to one of the names that appear in this bill. Not having changed my views at all in regard to the policy that should be adopted in reference to relieving from disabilities persons who have been engaged in the rebellion, I feel constrained to vote now for this bill, for the reasons which I will state. First, the Chicago convention, when it assembled, admitted as a delegate Governor Brown, of Georgia, and he was recognized in that convention and made a speech to the convention. The same convention passed a resolution which has become a part of the platform of the Republican party, suggesting the relieving of persons from their disabilities who have given evidence to the country that they are willing to adhere to the Government as loyal men. I do not give the language of the resolution, but that is the substance of it. That being the case, I feel it to be my duty, acting with the Republican party, under the circumstances, these names having been examined by the committee and reported on favorable, to vote for the bill. I feel that, as a party man, I am acting under instructions given in our platform by delegates from all parts of this nation, States and Territories, assembled for the purpose of enunciating to the people of this country the principles on which they will stand in the campaign before the country. Believing it to be the true and proper spirit to act on, when my party has decided I am willing to lay aside my prejudices and my own views for the purpose of harmonizing on this question; and I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. Speaker, in the debate the other day it was complained that we were acting without a report of the committee setting out the circumstances of each particular case. It was also complained that we were acting in the dark and without information generally. I myself felt that as to a great many gentlemen upon the floor that must be strictly true. With regard to myself, however, it is otherwise. Having been associated with other gentlemen upon this floor and elsewhere in a voluntary committee formed for the purpose of aiding the business of reconstruction, I was in a position to be acquainted with the circumstances generally of the persons embraced within the bill, and was entirely satisfied not only to vote for it, but to urge my fellow-members to do so. I will now state that so far from this list having been got up at haphazard and without proper examination, it has really gone through so many particular instances of nice scrutiny that it would be very strange, indeed, if there were left in it a single element of error.

In the first place, a long list of names, amounting to some thousands, were recommended by the different constitutional conventions, assembled for the purpose of reconstructing the States of the South, for the removal of disabilities. Those conventions were composed of persons who knew the individuals about whom they certified, who were most interested in the question, and who had most to suffer if a mistake should be made in any case. And it might be considered safe to let the matter rest with them to decide who should and who should not be relieved of disabilities. But this was not done. So earnest were the members of the two Houses of Congress, and other gentlemen who had an interest in the question of reconstruction, to prevent the removal of disabilities in any improper case, that these lists were placed before the voluntary association of which I spoke and of which I am a member, who cut down the lists very materially, striking out the name of every man about whom no definite information could be obtained beyond that furnished by the conventions, and striking off every man with whose name there was connected a single taint of suspicion as to his present loyalty and his good faith in the work of reconstruction.

By this means the list of thousands was reduced down to where it now stands, to between eight and nine hundred. But the scrutiny did not stop there. This list went before the Committee on Reconstruction of the House, and was still further scrutinized, and the circumstances attending each individual case were examined. The list then went before the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, where it underwent a similar scrutiny. And after all that, prominent leading loyal men of the South, men whose loyalty never was questioned, were sent for from the different States to examine the lists again and again for fear a mistake should be made. And the result of all that scrutiny and examination is the bill upon which the committee of conference have reported.

I will repeat, then, that if there should be in the bill any improper name, it would be a very remarkable circumstance.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question right at this point?

Mr. BROOMALL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman has now become the champion of this bill, I would be glad if he would state to the House, and especially for my own satisfaction, whether there is any one case, and if so how many, of application placed upon your files by any of these individuals for the grace of the nation, an application involving the concession of past error and a profession of contrition and a desire to return to their true relations. I am not willing to have the grace of this nation forced upon anybody. I am perfectly ready, upon an exhibition of the sort I have indicated, to vote for the relief of persons from disability in individual cases where persons have placed themselves in the category I have endeavored to indicate. But to go further would be to do away entirely with the constitutional provision, and to make the whole thing a mere farce before the nation and the world.

Mr. BROOMALL. It is well the gentleman has asked me the question. I can only answer him in general terms in the affirmative. There are many, very many. I said that a great deal of this scrutiny was exercised by a voluntary association of individuals, of which I happened to be a member, and made some of it myself.

I will answer the gentleman's question further by saying that these individuals were at one time looked upon as a kind of medium of communication between the loyal men of the South and the loyal Congress. The first applications were made through that association. The members of it refused to consider any of them until they had been scrutinized by the constitutional conventions of the respective States, and to a very large extent the original applications were accordingly made to those conventions. I hope the gentleman is satisfied.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. No, sir; not yet.

Mr. BROOMALL. All these men are asking a favor; the grace of the Government is not forced upon any individual. If my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania,] is at all afraid that we are forcing this grace of the Government upon any of them unwillingly, then I suppose he will agree with me that they can refuse it, and if need be they can keep themselves in the same category they are in now, by committing a little more treason.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. BROOMALL. I think the gentleman need not be afraid; I have rarely heard of an individual refusing a pardon.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. I desire the gentleman to answer specifically the question I put. Is there any application on the part of these individuals, made directly or through the mediation of other persons, for the grace which it is now proposed to bestow upon them?

Mr. BROOMALL. These are applications from the conventions of their States, to which they were directed first to apply personally, being told that that was a prerequisite to having their cases considered here. Now, I do not know that it would make the case any better if we had the original applications to these conventions here upon our files; and I do not think it would make it any worse. There are also many original applications here.

Mr. ARNELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BROOMALL. Yes. Certainly.

Mr. ARNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman if any application has been made by General Longstreet?

Mr. BROOMALL. The case of General Longstreet bothered the parties concerned in reporting it probably more than any other case; and yet, I believe, all who have examined the matter attentively have come to the conclusion that his is a proper case. I can only say that the General of the Army is one of the most earnest vouchers for the loyalty at present and the thorough repentance of General Longstreet; and it is believed by the gentlemen acquainted with the temper of the South, and the business of reconstruction, that to take a strong case like this of Longstreet, where the sin is great and the repentance is known, open, and thorough, such as to bring down upon his head the most violent denunciations of the class of men whom he has deserted, it is such a case, in my judgment, and in the judgment of those who have examined it, which will show the South better than anything else that nothing is asked but thorough loyalty hereafter and thorough repentance of past crimes. No man has been more diligent and earnest in aiding the reconstruction of the South than General Longstreet; and I, for one, have no hesitation in voting to remit his disabilities.

Why, sir, if we condemn him where will he go? His own class would murder him if we now desert him. If we, his new friends, whom he has so much aided, now sneer at him and spurn him, he will have no inducement to do good in the future. If we treat him as such a man ought to be treated, his future course will justify our action.

Mr. LOAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether General Longstreet is more devoted to the Republic at this time than he was to the rebellion two years ago; and whether we have any assurance, if in case of any misfortune to us, he would not abandon us at once?

Mr. BROOMALL. I will answer that by saying I never heard that Paul was any more devoted to the Christian religion after his conversion than he was to the persecution of the Christians before that time.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whether one of the reasons he gave for including in this list the name of General Longstreet was not because he was recommended by the General of the Army?

Mr. BROOMALL. I said "vouched for."

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Now, if that be a good reason, I should like to know why he has not included in this list of names the name of Robert E. Lee, because General Grant swore before the Judiciary Committee that he had recommended to the President a full pardon for General Robert E. Lee.

Mr. BROOMALL. I suppose we might get thirty-five votes on the other side by putting in the name of General Robert E. Lee.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. And also get the General of the Army with you.

Mr. BROOMALL. We do not choose to do it. I suppose we could get the votes of the thirty-five gentlemen on the other side of the House if we were to put into the bill the names of the Democratic members of the Thirty-Seventh and Thirty-Eighth Congresses; but we will not, though by refusing we lose those votes.

Mr. BROOKS. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania aware that a principal, leading, prominent man on the list of twelve hundred on the table is one of those who advised and counseled publicly the assassination of Abraham Lincoln? Is he aware of that fact?

Mr. BROOMALL. What is the name?

Mr. BROOKS. Is he aware of that fact?

Mr. BROOMALL. I certainly am not.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman permit me to read?

Mr. BROOMALL. No.

Mr. BROOKS. Does the gentleman say no?

Mr. BROOMALL. I do; I know that just now, at the final vote, a gentleman whose name is upon the list has been charged with certain matters. I do not know what they are, but as the charges were not made before the proper tribunal at the proper time I will not believe them now. If I were told by one of his enemies that the gentleman from New York had committed a crime last night I would not be bound to believe it.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman answer my question? He has not done so yet. I am going to vote for the pardon of this man who counseled the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in this list with so many others.

Mr. BROOMALL. I am glad to hear the gentleman is going to vote for the bill.

Mr. BROOKS. But I do not think the gentleman is aware of the fact I refer to. Will he permit me to read?

Mr. BROOMALL. I will not allow to go upon the records here with my consent any charge against any gentleman which was not brought before the proper tribunal at the proper time. I am satisfied the charge is not true.

Mr. BROOKS. Not when it is shown he counseled the assassination of Abraham Lincoln!

Mr. WARD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BROOMALL. I do.

Mr. WARD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he knows the fact that one of the parties named in this bill has sent a communication to this House saying that he has not solicited pardon, and has not committed any crime for which he should be pardoned?

Mr. BROOMALL. I am not aware of that fact. If I were to see such a communication I would want the signature sworn to before I would believe it.

Mr. WARD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether he is in favor of general amnesty to all rebels?

Mr. BROOMALL. No, sir.

Mr. WARD. If you are not in favor of general amnesty to all rebels, how can you support a proposition to pardon twelve hundred of these leading rebels without a single allegation on record that they have repented, or that there is any special reason why they should be pardoned? And, further—

Mr. BROOMALL. I yield no further. I am pressed all around.

Mr. WARD. A single other question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will resume his seat. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. BROOMALL. I am sorry I cannot yield to the gentleman from New York any further.

Mr. WARD. I do not design to transgress the rules of the House in any way, though I know I am a little pertinacious. I now ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he did not agree to give me five minutes of his time, and, if that be so, whether I cannot ask him a further question?

Mr. BROOMALL. I will yield to a further question. There was something said about that.

Mr. WARD. I wish to ask the gentleman whether, if this bill is passed, any of these parties who are included in it, if elected, cannot be admitted into Congress, and whether this bill does not cover two gentlemen from the State of North Carolina who were elected to Congress and are waiting to be admitted after this law is passed, having served in the rebel army?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. No.

Mr. BROOMALL. I do not know that fact. It does not alter the case, however.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. There is not a word of truth in the statement of the gentleman from New York. This bill embraces the name of Mr. Boyden, who fed our prisoners during the war, a man who was known by every Union soldier in prison at Salisbury as their friend. He was elected as a conservative; but he received a great many Republican votes.

Mr. WARD. I do not mean him at all.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Well, then, the gentleman did not mean anybody.

Mr. WARD. I mean a lieutenant colonel in the rebel army for a year and a half; and I assert what I know.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Who is that man.

Mr. WARD. I cannot give you the name, but Mr. French, of North Carolina, informed me this morning that such was the fact.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I cannot possibly let the statement of the gentleman from New York go upon the record in the face and eyes of the investigation of this subject by the Reconstruction Committee and of the committee of conference without denying it in toto. There is but one member of Congress elected from North Carolina included in this bill, and that is Mr. Boyden. There is one of the judges also embraced in the bill. But neither of these were in the rebel army. This bill does not embrace any leading rebels. It has been stated over and over again that it embraces a great many men who really have not asked for any pardon, because they have never done anything making it necessary for them to ask it; but they became disabled by reason of holding some petty office during the war, not dreaming at the time that that disabled them from holding office under the Federal Government. They refused to go into the rebel army. Now we find by reason of our legislation that they are disqualified.

Gentlemen ask for petitions. There are thousands of petitions before our committee besides those sent us by the congressional committee, of which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOMALL] is a member. Gentlemen ask that we make a report in the case. Why, sir, to make a report in each case of twelve hundred men would cover reams and reams of paper, and no one would read it. It is not expected that the committee should make a report in each case.

Now, I desire to say one word about General Longstreet, because there are some gentlemen here who do not understand his position. The Reconstruction Committee unanimously once relieved his name, with four or five others, for relief. Upon some little discussion in the House the report was ordered to be recommitted. The committee have not reported his name again, although they are all in favor of it. When we sent the bill to the Senate the Senate committee, upon an investigation, in adding the names of various gentlemen of different States, put in the name of General Longstreet. That is the way his name comes in the bill. We cannot amend by striking it out. We have to pass or reject the bill. General Longstreet wrote a letter more than a year ago, which was published all over the country, in favor of the reconstruction policy of Congress, which brought down upon his head the most terrible and scathing rebukes of all the leading secessionists in his country. So ostracised did he become by his former associates that he was obliged to change his residence and move to another town to engage in business for his support. Now, I ask gentlemen who oppose General Longstreet because he fought us if they have not more respect for a rebel who showed his consistency by going into the army and fighting us honorably than they have for a stay-at-home fellow who shirked out of the army himself but egged him on? I have; and I would rather relieve him than any old politician who sneaked out of danger.

Mr. BROOMALL. I have only to say, in conclusion, that my anxiety to have this measure adopted at this time arises from the fact that the State organizations which are about to go into operation in the States of Georgia, North Carolina, and Alabama cannot go into operation until the disabilities of many of these men are removed.

Mr. PAINE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. BROOMALL. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARD] has asked the question of the gentleman who has charge of this measure whether he does not know that there are one or two applicants for relief under this bill who have been rebel officers or soldiers and who desire, being relieved by Congress, to come here as Representatives from the State of North Carolina. He has asked that question, leaving the House to understand that he knows that to be the fact, and he has stated to the House that he has been informed by another Representative from North Carolina that such is the fact. He has left upon the minds of Representatives the impression that his informant believes that this applicant is not a worthy subject of legislative relief and ought to be excluded from this bill.

Now, sir, it is unfair for a gentleman to allege before this House indirectly in the form of a question what he does not know to be true, what he would not be willing positively to assert. Since he has asked that question and given the House to understand that his informant is opposed to the relief of the particular applicant referred to, I have asked that Representative from North Carolina what the facts in the case are, and he tells me that there is indeed in this bill an applicant for relief from North Carolina who was in the rebel army, but that after having served a short time in it he left that army, threw up his commission, and joined the Union party of North Carolina, and has from that time forth until this day been an efficient and faithful Union man, and he himself believes he ought to be relieved.

Mr. WARD. Now, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me a moment. The gentleman from Wisconsin has in a manner assailed me, and I do not think the gentleman can refuse me a moment to reply. I have not occupied the five minutes which the gentleman agreed to give me.

Mr. BROOMALL. I will yield for the shortest possible time.

Mr. WARD. I had no desire to say anything unfair in this matter or to convey a false impression to this House. I was informed that Mr. Dockery, a member-elect from the State of North Carolina, served a year and a half in the rebel army as lieutenant colonel. I understand that that is the fact. I assert it to be the fact now upon information from a member of Congress-elect from that State of the name of French. I now wish to say further, as a matter of justice, that I understand that this Mr. Dockery, after a year and a half's service in the rebel army, threw up his commission and joined the Union Army, and has been a good Union man since, and has aided in the work of reconstruction. And I desire to say further, that I am opposed to admitting anybody into this Congress, or passing any law which will permit any man to come into this Congress, who has aided in the work of rebellion, and at whose door lay the deaths of half a million of people.

Mr. BROOMALL. I have learned—

Mr. PAINE. Will the gentleman allow me one word more?

Mr. BROOMALL. Not now. I have learned from the best authority that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARD] is mistaken as to the time; it was two months instead of eighteen months. But no matter about that. He has given the strongest reason why the name of the individual referred to should be embraced in this bill as that of a man who, when he found out he was wrong, turned around and not only repented of the wrong he had committed, but fought on our side. He ought to have his disability removed, and I will vote for such cases every day.

I was about saying when I was interrupted that unless these disabilities are removed those States cannot organize until after another election; and we will have half a dozen States in the South under organizations as thoroughly rebel as any organizations that existed during the actual rebellion—I mean the organizations gotten up by President Johnson and Mr. Seward upon mere proclamation and without any authority of law. And these States will be under such organizations for perhaps a year or two. And if any gentleman on this side of the House wants to see the Union men of the South remain under that kind of government any longer than is necessary I must say he has a very strange way of looking at things; and if there is any gentleman here who wants to see the next presidential election come off with the Union men of the South under the control of these rebel organizations, I am inclined to think that that gentleman must be found upon the other side of the House, and a very great way over upon the other side.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I decline to yield further to my colleague, [Mr. BROOMALL], and demand a vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROOMALL. Very well, I have done.

Mr. COVODE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BROOMALL. For a question, yes.

Mr. COVODE. I would inquire of the gentleman whether it is necessary to reconstruction that Longstreet should be relieved from disabilities? Does not the gentleman know that Longstreet shed more loyal blood than any other man commanding the same number of rebel troops?

Mr. BROOMALL. I have already answered that question. I now call the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes seventy-one, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered, which was upon concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. UPSON. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 98, nays 44, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Broomall, Buckland, Butler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Ela, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Griswold, Harding, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jencks, Judd, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, McCarthy, Mercer, Moore, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Peters, Pike, Plants, Poland, Polsley, Pomeroy, Raum, Robertson, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Selye, Shanks, Smith, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taylor, Thomas, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, Woodward, and the Speaker—98.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Brooks, Cary, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Corvode, Eldridge, Fox, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Higby, Holman, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Kerr, Knott, Loan, McCormick, Mungen, Niblack, Orth, Pruyn, Robinson, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Aaron F. Stevens, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, Ward, Thomas Williams, and William Williams—44.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Axtell, Barnum, Brownell, Burr, Cake, Chanler, Cullom, Dawes, Dodge, Finney, Gravely, Halsey, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Kelley, Kitchen, Laffin, William Lawrence, Marshall, Maynard, McClurg, McCumough, Miller, Morrissey, Mullins, Nicholson, Nunn, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Price, Randall, Ross, Starkweather, Stone, Taffie, John Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—48.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the report of the committee of conference was concurred in.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. GETZ said: My colleague, Mr. RANDALL, is paired upon this question with my colleagues, Mr. CAKE and Mr. STEPHEN F. WILSON.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was concurred in; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The vote upon concurring in the report has been once reconsidered; it cannot again be reconsidered.

M'KEE VS. YOUNG—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER stated that the House would now resume the consideration of the Kentucky contested-election case of McKee vs. Young; on which Mr. Cook was entitled to the floor.

Mr. COOK. I demand the previous question on the report of the Committee of Elections.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. COOK. I rise now under the rules to close debate, and of the hour to which I am entitled I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. ADAMS,] and thirty minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. UPSON.]

Mr. ADAMS. I yield ten minutes of my time to my colleague, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, there are two distinct questions presented by the Committee of Elections for the consideration of the House, which are argued separately, both in the majority and minority reports. The first in order is, Who was elected by the people? because if it turns out that Colonel McKee was elected there will be neither necessity nor propriety in this House considering the question as to the capacity of Judge Young to take the oath and hold the position.

It is only after this House has determined that Judge Young has been duly elected by the qualified electors of his district, and would, because of such election, be entitled to his seat, unless he be laboring under some personal disqualification, that it either ought to, or can properly institute an inquiry as to his qualifications, under the power it claims to inquire into the qualifications of its members. It is too late now, after the decisions rendered with almost (if not) perfect unanimity at the present session, to contend that the personal disqualification of Judge Young, if any be found to exist, can in any way inure to the benefit of Colonel McKee. His right is dependent on the vote cast, and that has to be determined before the other question can arise. I shall, therefore, consider that first, and after I show, as I can, conclusively, and I mean what I say, conclusively, that Colonel McKee has no shadow of claim to the seat, I will briefly discuss the right of Judge Young to it, which I hope to establish satisfactorily, even under the ruling of this House, the legality of which I do not propose in this case to discuss or controvert. The whole Committee of Elections, with perhaps one exception, after a full examination of all the facts, agreed to the report which they laid before the House on the 23d of March, 1868, which closed as follows:

Resolved, That Samuel McKee, not having received a majority of the votes cast for Representative in this House from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky, is not entitled to a seat therein as such Representative.

That report was made after the most mature and thorough investigation, which had been prolonged for more than eight months, and after all the questions had been fully discussed before the committee by the parties and their advisers, both orally and by printed briefs. The exact question as to the validity of the votes cast by men who had been in the rebel army, and the right of returned rebels to act as officers of the election, being specially considered, as the printed briefs laid on the tables of members at the time, both of which are now before me, will show, and the committee thus disposes of the question as to the votes cast by the rebel soldiers, and as to the freedom and fairness of the election:

"The second point relied upon by contestant, in his notice is that the vote of rebel soldiers, who were paroled prisoners of war, and who voted for Mr. Young, should be rejected.

"While the testimony may tend to show that even more than two thousand paroled rebel soldiers who, at the date of the election, 4th May, 1867, were without pardon and amnesty, voted for Mr. Young, as the contestant contends, it is admitted by the contestant in his brief that the proof is not complete and satisfactory as to more than seven hundred and sixty-seven.

"After an examination of the testimony the committee are not willing to say that more than seven hundred and fifty-two ex-rebel soldiers voted for Mr. Young. Of those eighty-six are hereafter rejected the entire vote of various precincts for other causes, which would reduce the vote of the rebel soldiers to six hundred and sixty-six. But the committee finding that there is no law of Kentucky disfranchising rebel soldiers, have not been able to see how those votes can be rejected.

"The third point in contestant's notice is substantially the same as the second. The fourth is, that in a number of counties and precincts the freedom of the election was violated, and Union men prevented, by reason of threats, intimidation, and force, from casting their votes for him, (McKee.)

"The committee fail to find this allegation sustained by the testimony."

And on page 10 of this report the committee proceed, in stating McKee's claim, to show that while he claimed that returned rebels could not act as officers of the election, still he admitted what the committee unanimously assume cannot be successfully controverted, that the law of 11th of March, 1862, (known as the expatriation law)—

"Was repealed 19th December, 1865, which restored citizenship to those who had been in armed rebellion, &c., that they were restored to the right to vote, but not to the privilege of being election officers."

These views, thus expressed, would seem to me to be conclusive as to the right of the confederate soldiers to vote, both on the committee and Colonel McKee, and to commit the committee at least to the fact that there was no fraud or unfairness in the conduct of the election. Yet in the face of all this the same committee, with the exception, I believe, of the distinguished gentleman from Vermont,

[Mr. POLAND,] and the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. McCLURG,] without any further proof or argument, reconsidered their former report, and on the 17th of June submitted to the House the report we are now considering, closing it with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That J. D. Young was not legally elected a member of the House of Representatives of the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky.

Resolved, That Samuel McKee was duly elected a member of the House of Representatives in the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of the State of Kentucky.

In this last report the committee say:

"It appears perfectly clear to the committee that persons who had been soldiers in the rebel army had no right to vote or to act as officers of election. They had surrendered to the Government of the United States upon the condition that each company or regimental officer should sign a parole for his men, and each man was allowed to return home not to be disturbed by United States authority so long as he observed his parole and the laws in force where he resided. These men were especially excepted from the amnesty proclaimed by the President May 29, 1865, under the tenth exception, and there appears to have been no other act of amnesty up to the time of this election which could include them; they were paroled prisoners of war."

And they say further:

"The evidence shows conclusively that in many parts of this district at the time of the election legal voters were prevented from voting by threats and intimidation; many witnesses testified that they who abstained from voting lest they should endanger their personal safety, and the proof shows these fears to have been reasonable."

I desire to use the mildest language possible in speaking of this remarkable report. The simple facts are the severest criticism. That a committee of this House should, in an elaborate and carefully considered report, after patient and thorough investigation, and after both sides had been fully heard, determine, in March last, that Colonel McKee was not elected; that the returned rebel soldiers were beyond question legal voters by the laws of Kentucky; that there was no evidence to sustain the allegation that the freedom of the election had been violated or Union men prevented from voting by reason of threats, intimidation, or force, and that the same committee, without an additional fact proved, or argument presented by either party, and without giving any reason to the House for such a change, should now report that Colonel McKee was legally elected; that it is perfectly clear that persons who had been soldiers in the rebel army had no right to vote or to act as officers of election; that the evidence shows conclusively that in many parts of that district at the time of the election legal voters were prevented from voting by threats and intimidation, would appear to me perfectly incomprehensible but for the knowledge I have of the fact that the dominant majority allow no obstacle to stand between them and the accomplishment of their purposes. I have seen a war avowedly prosecuted to perpetuate the Union and the Constitution, as pledged in the Crittenden resolutions, converted, for party purposes, into a war of conquest and subjugation. I have seen the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States adopted by reason of the votes of the Legislatures of States that were afterward declared not to be States by the party taking the benefit of the act. I have seen even the reconstruction acts, the favorite bantlings of the Radical party, trampled under foot in order to put a State government unanimously Radical over the once great State of Alabama. I have seen the grossest frauds and the most flagrant outrages perpetrated and indorsed in order to Africanize and radicalize the other southern States. I have seen the executive and the judiciary almost annihilated because they were obstacles in the onward march of the majority to consolidation and despotic power, and therefore I do not wonder at anything that party necessity may demand. This House may reject Judge Young; may set aside his majority of 1,479 votes; all of them as much entitled to exercise the right of suffrage as any men in America. It may appoint Colonel McKee or any one else to misrepresent his district; all this will only add another count to the indictment on which the Radical party will be arraigned before the court of last resort in November next.

But I must return to the record, and first to the Constitution of the United States, for which the people of this country still have some regard. Section two of article one provides:

"The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislatures."

Will any man on this floor dare to deny that the State of Kentucky has the exclusive right to determine what portion of her people shall have the right to vote for representatives in the most numerous branch of the State Legislature? Will any man venture to assert in the face of laws of Kentucky regulating suffrage in that State, which are published in the report of the committee made to this House in March last, that those returned rebel soldiers had not the right to vote for members of the Legislature of Kentucky. I presume not. Yet if they had, they had the right to vote for a Representative in Congress. One State may allow female suffrage, alien suffrage, or negro suffrage, may remove all restrictions; another may exclude all these, and, as in Rhode Island, impose property qualifications, yet the members sent here cannot be questioned, nor their right to a seat withheld because the majority of the members here disapprove of the action of the State in saying who should and who should not be electors. Let the principle be established, as I suppose it will be by the dominant majority in this case, that Kentucky has not the right to determine who shall be electors there, and that Congress will exclude the votes of all such as the majority here do not think ought to be allowed to cast their votes for members of the State Legislature or of Congress from that State, and what is the result? Why that one House of Congress regulates and determines all questions of the right of suffrage in the States, at least so far as the members of this House are concerned.

Let there be no grumbling when majorities change. Let the rule you propose to adopt be adhered to, and it follows that every Republican member of Congress who is elected by a majority of negro votes in the eleven southern States—for I include Tennessee—may be rejected the moment we elect a majority of Democrats in the other States and their places be given to the Democrats who get the majority of the white votes in these districts. We think Kentucky has as much right to say that her own sons—many of them the most honorable, intelligent, and gifted of her people—shall exercise the right of suffrage, if they did take the part of the South, as that your reconstructed States shall say that the political power there shall be placed in the hands of ignorant and degraded negroes. I do not pretend to predict what the Democratic party will do. I know we think this is and ought to be a white man's Government. But what I do say is that if you establish the principle now asserted in the last report of the majority of the Committee of Elections, in spite of all our protestations and remonstrances, it will not lie in your mouths to find fault with any action the Democrats may hereafter see fit to take in regard to the Representatives sent here by the negro votes of the South, when their seats are contested by men who have received majorities of the white votes in the districts where they reside. Bad precedents cannot always be set aside when the immediate purpose they were intended to serve is accomplished.

It will be remembered that the question of Judge Young's loyalty or disloyalty does not enter into nor constitute an element in determining this question. If the seat is awarded to Colonel McKee because he was duly elected he would have been as much entitled to it if General Grant had opposed him as he is now. It is simply a decision that 625 votes received by legally appointed and competent judges of the election in Kentucky, the legality of which has been certified by the Governor of Kentucky to this House, shall be set aside and disregarded solely because this House claims the right to determine who shall and who shall not have the right to vote in Kentucky, the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding. The party in power will repent this decision in sackcloth and ashes, or I am very much mistaken. The constitution of Kentucky, in force when this election was held, and still in force, prescribes that all white male citizens of the State, twenty-one years of age, who shall have resided in the State two years, or in the county, town, or city in which they offer to vote one year next preceding the election, shall be electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature of that State. (New constitution of Kentucky, art. 2, sec. 8.) It follows, therefore, that no vote cast for either Young or McKee can lawfully be rejected on account of the voter's participation in the rebellion, no matter to what extent that participation may have gone; and there is still less pretext for this claim of contestant, because Congress has never assumed to declare who shall or shall not be voters in Kentucky, even granting that there are those who may be willing to go to the extent of admitting that it has that power. It is true that the Legislature of Kentucky, by an act approved March 11, 1862, sought to deprive all who had participated in the rebellion of the right of suffrage, but this act was repealed by an act approved December 19, 1865, which is as follows:

"SECTION 1. That an act entitled 'An act to amend the fifteenth chapter of the revised statutes, entitled 'Citizens, expatriation, and aliens,' passed March 11, 1862, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and all persons who may have lost any constitutional, legal, or other right or privilege by operation of said act shall be, and are hereby, restored to the full and free use and enjoyment of the same, as completely as if said act had never been passed.

"SEC. 2. This act shall be in force from its passage, and may be pleaded in bar of any prosecution on any indictment or other penal proceedings growing out of said act."—Myer's Supplement, page 687, Appendix.

The act of March 11, 1862, had also been declared unconstitutional and void by the supreme court of Kentucky, and full pardon had been granted to all who took part in the rebellion by the act of January 13, 1866. The President had proclaimed the rebellion as closed on the 28th of August, 1866, and Congress had indorsed and ratified this proclamation by an act passed March 2, 1867. So that long before the 4th of May, 1867, when this election was held, all who had in any way participated in the rebellion were restored to all their political rights and privileges, and had all the qualifications of an elector as fully as if they had never been in the rebellion at all. What difference, then, does it make in this case whether seven hundred or seven thousand of those who voted for Young had been in the rebel army? They were still, under the constitution and laws of Kentucky, qualified electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, and had as much right to vote for a member of Congress under the Constitution of the United States as either of the candidates themselves.

I will notice the other laws of Kentucky touching elections when I come to speak of the precincts rejected in the last report because of the supposed ineligibility of the officers of the election there, or some of them, and will only state here that if I am right, or rather if the committee was right when, in March last, it said in its report:

"The committee, finding that there is no law of Kentucky disfranchising rebel soldiers, have not been able to see how those votes can be rejected."

This branch of the case is closed, because, in order to be able to declare McKee legally elected, the committee not only have to reject by wholesale all the votes cast at all the precincts where either a rebel soldier or sympathizer was an officer, but have to reject the 625 votes of the men who were rumored to have been at some time or other in the rebel army, and after they have done all that they can only foot up a majority of 37 for Colonel McKee.

Of course, if the 625 of whom I have been speaking, none of whom voted at any of the precincts that were excluded, have been wrongfully stricken out, all the other questions might be conceded and Judge Young still be duly elected, as the committee can only claim a majority of 37 for McKee after rejecting all the precincts and all the individuals that any witness either knew or had ever heard of as having been at any time during the war rebels or rebel sympathizers.

But I propose to show, and as I said at first to show conclusively, that all the judges and other officers of the election at the rejected precincts were legally qualified to act as such. All the reports concede that any man in Kentucky who has the right to vote is competent to be an officer of an election. The first report intimated, rather than asserted, that there might be some question as to the legality of this election at a number of precincts, because a majority of the officers conducting the election there voted for Judge Young. The last report seeks to exclude the votes cast at these precincts for the reason that the officers, or some of them, were not qualified voters, because they had been rebels, and therefore could not be officers of the election. I will first cite the laws of Kentucky bearing upon this question, and then notice the objections made in said reports. The laws I refer to are as follows:

"Each county court shall, in the month of June or July in every year, appoint two justices of the peace, if so many there be, or one justice and one other suitable person, as judges, and a clerk of the election for each precinct in the county. It shall also in the month of March or April of every second year appoint two suitable persons as judges, and a clerk of the election for each district for the election of justices of the peace and constables in the county. Such judges and the clerks shall hold their offices till their successors are appointed and qualified."

"Should the court fail to appoint such judges or clerk, or either fail to appear for thirty minutes after the time for commencing the election, or refuse to act, the sheriff or his deputy shall appoint a suitable person or persons to act in his or their stead at that election."—Rev. Stat. of Kentucky, vol. 1, p. 432.

[Myer's Supplement, p. 456.]

"An Act to amend section one, article three, chapter thirty-two, title 'Elections,' of the Revised Statutes.

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That hereafter, so long as there are two distinct political parties in this Commonwealth, the sheriff, judges, and clerk of election, in all cases of election by the people under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and under the constitution and laws of Kentucky, shall be so selected and appointed as that one of the judges at each place of voting shall be of one political party, and the other judge of the other or opposing political party; and that a like difference shall exist at each place of voting between the sheriff and clerk of elections: Provided, That there be a sufficient number of the members of each political party resident in the several precincts as aforesaid to fill said offices. And this requirement shall be observed by all officers of this Commonwealth who have the power to appoint any of the aforesaid officers of election, under the penalty of a fine of $100 for each omission, to be recovered by presentment of the grand jury.

"MARCH 15, 1862.

"An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section one, article three, chapter thirty-two, title 'Elections,' of the Revised Statutes,' approved February 11, 1853."

"SEC. 1. That in construing the act approved February 11, 1853, to which this is an amendment, those who have engaged in the rebellion for the overthrow of the Government, or who have in any way aided, counseled, or advised the separation of Kentucky from the Federal Union by force of arms, or adhered to those engaged in the effort to separate her from the Federal Union by force of arms, shall not be deemed one of the political parties in this Commonwealth within the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment.

"SEC. 2. This act to take effect from and after its passage."

The first act merely points out how officers of elections shall be appointed. The second provides that each political party, so long as there are two, shall be equally represented in the officers so appointed, and inflicts a fine of $100 on the judge or sheriff who violates this provision. The third, which is an amendment to the second, as its title shows, merely provides that no political organization which adheres to those engaged in rebellion, or which gives it aid or comfort, or seeks to separate Kentucky from the Federal Union, shall be recognized as a political party in the State, so as to demand that the officers conducting any election shall be composed in part of the adherents of such organization; and no judge or sheriff shall be liable to be indicted or fined for failure to appoint the members of such political organization to conduct elections.

It disfranchises no one, disqualifies no one; is at most only an instruction to the county judges and sheriffs to ignore all political organizations seeking to separate Kentucky from the Union, and not to recognize the right of any set of men to submit that question, or any question looking to that end, to the people at the polls, yet the Committee of Elections, in their zeal, blindness, or desperation, have seized upon this amendment to the law of 1858, and have attempted to argue that it disqualifies any man from acting as an officer of any election in the State, no matter what the proposition to be voted on may be; no matter what his politics may be when he acts, who has ever been in any way connected with the rebellion. According to the arguments made on the other side, though the election officers be now as radical as any of the committee; though he supports the Radical nominees; though the war has been ended for years, and there is no party in the land looking to secession or rebellion, yet if he at any time took part in the rebellion, or in any way gave it aid or comfort, the whole vote of the precinct at which he was either judge, clerk, or sheriff, must be rejected, and the votes of hundreds, it may be of thousands, of legal voters discarded. Such a construction of that law is sheer folly. A mere citation of the law, in connection with that of which it is amendatory, exhausts the argument. If it is plain that two and two make four, it is equally so that the law referred to neither disfranchises, nor disqualifies, any citizen of Kentucky from being an officer of the election for justices of the peace, constables, and members of Congress, held on the 4th of May, 1867, and all the efforts of gentlemen on the other side to reject 883 votes cast for Young over McKee on that ground, as is done in the last report, only show how little either law or facts are regarded when party ends are to be subserved.

There is, perhaps, a little more plausibility in the suggestion made in the first report of the committee, that the law of 1858, which required an equal division of the officers of the election between the two political parties, had been violated, as the proof shows that at a number of the precincts a majority of the officers voted for Judge Young.

In answer to that, I would say that it makes no sort of difference whether all these precincts are counted or rejected, because even if they are all rejected Judge Young's majority is nearly six hundred, as the report of the committee admit, if the vote of the returned confederate soldiers cast at other precincts are counted, as they must be. I would say further that the law only fines the officers for failing to make the appointments as therein required; it is not contemplated by it anywhere that the legal voters of the precincts shall by any neglect, oversight, or mistake of the county judges or sheriffs be deprived of their right of suffrage; that acts of officers de facto are (especially in the absence of all fraud, and none is pretended to have existed here) valid, and the rights of third persons will be guarded and protected as though the acting officers were appointed according to all the forms of law, is a principle recognized by the courts of every State in the Union.

I suppose it will hardly be contended that an officer of an election had necessarily abandoned his party because he refused to vote for Colonel McKee to represent his district in the Fortieth Congress. That is the only evidence he offers to sustain the charge that the Republican party did not have the proper proportion of election officers at several of the precincts. To assume that is to assume that he is the embodiment of Republican principles, faith, and practice, and that a failure to indorse him personally, morally, and politically, is to destroy the political status of the recusant, and ostracize him as a traitor to his principles—a high and arrogant pretension, surely. I observe by the returns set forth in the brief of Colonel McKee that he received six hundred less votes in 1867 than he did in 1865, and about one thousand less than the Union candidate (as he calls him) received in 1866. Were all these men false to their principles, or did they refuse to vote for Colonel McKee for personal reasons satisfactory to themselves? The presumption, in the absence of proof, is in favor of the latter. Who nominated Colonel McKee as the Republican candidate to represent that district in this Congress? The record fails to show that anybody did. He undertook the race on his own responsibility, calling himself a Radical, and men voted for him or not, just as they pleased. The officers who acted in May, 1867, were doubtless appointed as fair representatives of their respective parties at the time of their appointment, and without any suspicion that a contest would arise in which special personal fealty to Colonel McKee, at a particular time, should be made the test of an officer's political status. Even sound Republicans might well refuse to vote for him or for any individual who sets himself up as the leader of the party; and when he undertakes, as he does, to rely on that failure, he ought to be required, at least, to show that the difference was of a political and not of a personal nature. This he utterly fails to do—fails to show that at least half the officers so appointed had not previously acted with the Republican party. The report of the committee, made by Mr. McClurg, while it seems to admit the correctness of the views I have stated, says, after setting forth the number of precincts at which a majority of the officers of the election voted the same ticket, (I presume for Judge Young,) "a sufficient number of votes are shown by the poll-books to have been given for Mr. McKee to prove that election officers could have been selected from his friends." The committee do not say that these officers were not selected at the time of their appointment from the political party to which Colonel McKee professed to belong, which is all that in any event the law requires, but that they were not selected from among his friends. How, I ask again, could the county judges and sheriffs know who Colonel McKee's friends were. Other State officers were to be elected at the same time who might with equal propriety have claimed that their special friends should be appointed.

Why did he not before the election make known the fact that they were not his friends, so that his friends could have been substituted. He does not pretend that he lost a single vote by the misconduct of any officer. He made no complaint beforehand, though the appointments had been publicly made two months before, and the votes of these men were all on record at the regular stated election in August, 1866, when the Union candidate, according to his own table, received in the district nearly one thousand more votes than he did in May, 1867. It is now too late, even if there is anything in the question, which I deny, for Colonel McKee to seek to avail himself of the technicality. There were three parties in the field in May, 1867: Judge Young representing the Democratic party, Mr. Green the Conservative Union party, and Colonel McKee the Radical party. The officers could not be so appointed as to represent each equally. Some years before there were but two parties, calling themselves Democratic and Union parties. The Radicals advanced, the Conservatives hung back, a split occurred, and a triangular race ensued, the great mass of the Conservatives have united with the Democracy, and the Radicals in Kentucky themselves are still very far from being a unit on the present issues. Colonel McKee had taken occasion while a member of the Thirtieth Congress, especially on the 20th of March, 1866, (see Globe, vol. 57, pages 1526-27,) to vulgarly and traduce his State and her people on this floor in a manner that met with no response from the moderate, well-informed portion of his own party. His justification of the arrest and imprisonment of Colonel Wolford and Colonel Jacob, as gallant officers as any in the Federal service; his wholesale slanders of the circuit judges of his State, all of whom had been elected in 1862 as undoubted Union men, and are so still; his charges that rebels were protected while loyal men were prosecuted by the courts and the people were all known to be such false and unfounded aspersions that many of the best men of his party repudiated him and them. For I am not partisan enough to deny that there are very many members of the Radical party in Kentucky of the highest personal character, who would repel all such calumnies, and who would refuse to indorse by their vote or countenance any member of their party who would utter them. How far these things influenced the officers of the election to vote against Colonel McKee I do not pretend to know; but the presumption is that the county judges did their duty in the appointment of officers until some proof is adduced to the contrary.

The Committee of Elections in the case of Blakey vs. Golladay, from Kentucky, at the present session, lay down the true rule. They say:

"The attention of the committee has not been called to any provision in the statutes of Kentucky prescribing in what manner the several county courts are to define political parties and ascertain the exact political faith of each appointee, so as to enable them to comply with the provisions of these statutes. Obviously they cannot resort to the poll-book of the next election, the tests to which the claimants have appealed to show that the statutes have been disregarded, for they are required to make the appointments long before these poll-books have any existence. No poll-book of an election to be held after the appointment is made can afford evidence to guide in making the appointment. If resort is to be had to the poll-book of the election next preceding the appointment to determine the political status of the several appointees, then, for aught that appears in this case, those poll-books would show that status to be what the law requires, for no evidence from these poll-books or elsewhere was offered to show how these several officers of election voted at the election next preceding their appointment. If personal knowledge of the political opinions of men on the part of the county judges, or general political reputation, are to be the guide in making the appointment of the officers of election, it is difficult to see in what manner this committee could determine that the statute had not been complied with in making the appointment. It is sufficient, however, to say that there was no offer of evidence that any such test was disregarded."

The language of that report applies quite as well to this case as it did to the case of Golladay, and is just what we contend for. The truth is, Mr. Speaker, there never was more than a mere handful of Radicals in Kentucky, according to the now recognized tenets of the party. Colonel McKee had to deny everywhere throughout his district that he was in favor of negro suffrage, and however zealous he may be for it here he could not go back to his district and get the support of a corporal's guard in any county unless he continued to deny it. Our people with signal unanimity believe that the white is superior to the negro race; that this is a white man's Government; that in time of peace the military is and must be subordinate to the civil authority; that the Constitution furnishes a rule for the government alike of rulers and people, North and South, and we intend to show our faith by our works in November next.

It ought not to be matter of amazement to the Radical party that men who voted with them in Kentucky in 1866 voted against them in 1867. You have only to look at the changes that have taken place all over the country. Where are your overwhelming majorities in New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and elsewhere, on the faith of whose support you launched out on the experiment of congressional omnipotence and negro equality? Gone! gone! because of your own illegal and oppressive legislation, and are now incorporated into the ranks of your opponents. Surely it is to be expected that men in Kentucky whose votes in 1866 showed them to be acting with the Republican party, and who might therefore be properly appointed officers of an election to represent that party at the polls, might in May, 1867, after you had passed your reconstruction acts and reported your confiscation bill in March, 1867, have halted, and while supporting the magistrates and constables, perhaps put forward by the Union or Republican party in May, have refused to vote for Colonel McKee, who seems to have exhibited at all times a determination to keep up with his party no matter to what extremes it went.

But I will not argue this question further. There is no decent pretext for the rejection either of the 625 votes reported by the committee as having been cast for Young by men who had been rebels—although I might show that there is no proof except hearsay as to over two hundred and fifty of these men, that they ever took part in the rebellion—nor of the 883 majority at the various precincts set forth in the report at which men acted as judges, clerks, or sheriff, who had taken part in or favored its success. But admitting, for the sake of argument, that all the committee claim is true; that the 625 votes cast by returned rebel soldiers ought to be rejected; that all the majorities for Young at all the precincts where returned rebels acted in any capacity as officers of the election, should be thrown out and Judge Young is still elected, even according to the last report of the committee, though they assert otherwise. They set forth the majorities at the various precincts and make the aggregate 883; add to this 625 and 8 deserters, and the total is 1,516; deduct Young's official majority, 1,479, and they foot up McKee's majority, when correctly subtracted, as 37. In order to get the 883, in giving the precincts they say, as a reason for rejecting 132 majority for Young:

"Centreville precinct, Fleming county, Mason Caywood and William H. Cord, judges of election. Samuel McGuire (p. 96) testifies, 'Mason Caywood and William H. Cord have been publicly known as southern sympathizers, and in favor of the so-called southern confederacy both during and since the war.'"

"Young's majority in this precinct, 132."

It is not pretended by the committee that any of the election officers at this precinct ever had taken part in the rebellion in any form. The only excuse is, that they were southern sympathizers; and when we turn to the proof to sustain even that, we find that the witness, Samuel McGuire—upon whose testimony alone the committee rely to prove that—swears that he did not know either Mason Caywood or William H. Cord, and that statement of the witness is part of the same answer from which they extract their quotation made in the report. I give the question and answer in full as a fair specimen of the way in which the committee, in their last report, have treated this question, and that the country at least may understand by what rules of justice the rights of Democrats in this House are tested:

"Question. Do you, or do you not, know the names of the officers of election in May, 1867, at the Elizaville, Tilton, and Centreville precincts, in Fleming county, and if you know said officers, do you know their political sentiments? Answer fully as to all your knowledge of these points."

"Answer. The names of officers at Centreville precinct are Mason Caywood and William H. Cord, judges; George A. Cord, sheriff, and Samuel T. Blair, clerk; Mason Caywood and William H. Cord are reputed Democrats, and voted for John D. Young for Congress. George A. Cord voted for Samuel McKee, and S. T. Blair for Thomas M. Green. At Elizaville, John N. Proctor and O. H. Dewey were judges, David Adams, sheriff, and Charles Darnall, clerk. John N. Proctor, David Adams, and Charles Darnall voted for John D. Young, and O. H. Dewey for Samuel McKee."

"Question. Do you or do you not know if the men named in your last answer, Mason Caywood, W. H. Cord, John N. Proctor, David Adams, Charles Darnall, and Thomas Butler, are, and were during the late rebellion, 'rebel sympathizers'?"

"Answer. My personal knowledge extends only to John N. Proctor and David Adams. As to them I answer yes. Mason Caywood and William H. Cord have been, and are publicly known as southern sympathizers, and in favor of the so-called southern confederacy, both during and since the war."

It will be observed that the other persons, John N. Proctor and David Adams, were not officers at the Centreville precinct, and as to Mason Caywood and William H. Cord, the witness personally knew nothing. Yet, as I said, on that evidence, and that alone, the committee undertake to reject the Centreville precinct, which gave Young 132 majority. Surely this House will not sanction such an outrage; surely the committee will not risk their reputation as judges and fair men on such a state of fact. If these 132 be restored to Young, and the report be allowed to stand as to all else, Young's majority will be ninety-five, and he must be declared duly elected.

I will not argue at length the question as to Judge Young's eligibility. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. KERR,] one of the committee, and my colleagues [Messrs. GOLLADAY and TRIMBLE] have exhausted that branch of the case.

While I utterly deny that the act of July, 1862, requiring a test-oath, is applicable to members of this House, that it is constitutional if it was intended to be so applied, or that this House can prevent the member-elect from taking it if he is willing to do so, yet I know that Judge Young would rather that his right hand should wither and his tongue cleave to the roof of his mouth than take that oath if he did not know that he could take it honestly, conscientiously, and in good faith; and the fact that he is ready and willing to do so is to me the highest evidence that he can do so properly.

The next highest evidence is, that during the whole canvass, which lasted for months, and was an animated and excited one, while Young was publicly defying any and all men to bring aught against him, or against his right and ability to take that oath; while Mr. Green, one of his opponents, was, as he testified, inquiring of men of all shades of political opinion, everywhere throughout the district, for some fact that he could use against Young on that point, and could hear of nothing; and while McKee, thus urged and challenged, failed to make a single allegation, either at Prestonburg, where they all met, or anywhere else, during the canvass or afterward, till the celebrated Willis Hockaday affidavit was, in July last, paraded before this House; these things, I say, ought to be conclusive that no disability in fact exists on the part of Judge Young.

It is certain that all the men who know Judge Young, regardless of their political opinions or prejudices, testified that while he was at all times opposed to the prosecution of the war, and strongly suspected, if he did not believe, that it was being waged for the purpose of the conquest and subjugation of the South, and, therefore, sympathized with her people, he, as a citizen of Kentucky and a judge of one of her courts, remained faithful and true to his allegiance to his State, and obeyed all laws, State and Federal, whether he liked and approved them or not. Whenever any friend, neighbor, or acquaintance, no matter of what politics, needed his assistance in any way, or at any time, his hand and heart were alike open, and at any personal risk or sacrifice he relieved the distressed and ministered to the wants of the needy. With such a record from political friends and opponents, he can afford to be rejected by this House, and rely on the men of his district to vindicate his reputation from all the assaults of his enemies.

I am glad to be relieved from the discussion of the testimony of such witnesses as Greenup Nickle and a few other infamous characters, who have been snubbed to blacken the fair fame of Judge Young. It has been done already so fully that further exposure would be but repetition. I will, therefore, submit the question so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ADAMS. I now yield my remaining time to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND.]

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Kentucky [Mr. ADAMS] for yielding to me his time in order that I may say a few words relative to the position of the Committee of Elections, or rather my own position in reference to this matter. By the favor of the Speaker I have the honor to be a member of the Committee of Elections. This contest between McKee and Young was heard by the committee early in the winter. The hearing was very protracted. The case was elaborately argued on both sides. The case was further fully considered in the committee; and, as I understood the judgment of the committee, it was unanimous that Mr. McKee was not elected; and a majority of the committee determined that Young had received a majority of the votes but was ineligible on account of having been guilty of some disloyal act. As I understood it at the time, and as I continued to understand it up to the time a minority report was filed by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. URSON,] I understood, and I have taxed my recollection in vain to remember when it was any other way, than that the Committee of Elections were unanimous in determining Mr. McKee was not elected, not having received a majority of the votes. During my absence for ten days previous to last Thursday this case was in some way reconsidered by the committee, and a majority of the committee reversed their former action and determined McKee was elected. I saw by the newspapers while I was absent such was the action of the committee, and I was curious to know upon what ground the judgment of the committee was reversed, but I did not learn it until I saw the report here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have as much confidence in the judgment of committees, and am as willing to base my action and my vote here on the action of any intelligent committee of this House as any member upon this floor, and I should be sorry to believe that the Committee of Elections was not as much entitled to the consideration of this House as any other committee. If, however, the House do not concur with me they can be accommodated in this case, for they have the judgment of the committee both ways. [Laughter.]

After learning that the judgment of the committee had been reversed, and they had reported Mr. McKee was entitled to the seat, I will say in the limited time since my return I have endeavored carefully to review this case and see whether it was not possible the original judgment of the committee was wrong, and I could agree with the last report of the committee; but, sir, I have been unable to come to any such conclusion. The grounds upon which this last report are based are so fallacious that any gentleman who will give it a careful consideration will see that they cannot be sustained and acted upon by the House.

Now, as I understand, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOK,]—who is very candid, and also very careful, in the utterance of his opinions—read to the House the section of the act of March 2, 1867, and declared that it had not come to the notice of the committee until after they had made their report, no other inference could be drawn from what he said than that if they had had knowledge of the existence of that act at the time the report was made this last conclusion of the committee would never have been reached.

Now, sir, I want to say a word in relation to Mr. Young, because I did agree with the majority of the committee in reference to his ineligibility, and I am prepared now to vote that he is not entitled to a seat here. There is certain evidence in the case in reference to disloyal acts by Mr. Young, some portion of which I do not believe to be true. By that I do not mean to say that the witness who testified did not suppose he was testifying to the truth, but I think he was mistaken in reference to Mr. Young being the man who directed the squad of rebel soldiers where to find a Yankee soldier and to arrest him. That portion of the evidence I lay entirely out of the case, because I do not believe it was Mr. Young. It is entirely at war with his whole course as shown by the testimony.

There is another witness, who testifies to something in relation to his giving a gun to a man who was talking about going into the rebel army. But that evidence is very meager. It possibly would bear the construction which the committee have put upon it, that he furnished a gun to a man knowing that he was going into the rebel army. But, sir, while the evidence in relation to disloyal acts of Young is so very meager and unsatisfactory it is clear to my judgment that he was a rebel at heart. I think this was his true position, as shown by the evidence. At the outset of the rebellion, before there was any actual war, his sympathies were with the South. He talked strongly upon that subject, and very likely his leading position in the community might have given him an influence, so that his conversation had such an effect that it may be said that he gave such aid and countenance to the rebellion that he ought not to be allowed to take a seat here, and that he could not properly take the test-oath. But, sir, I am disposed to resolve the doubts in reference to his disloyal conduct, in view of what were his known wishes and expressed feelings. His sympathies were all with the rebels; and although the evidence is so meager in relation to overt acts of disloyalty, I am disposed to vote against him upon this principle: I would as soon associate with a man on this floor who fought for the rebellion as with one who prayed for the rebellion. So much in reference to that.

Now, in reference to the right of Mr. McKee. Mr. Young received 1,400 or 1,500 majority of votes in the district. The committee get rid of 625 of those votes upon the ground that they were given by men who had served in the rebel army at some time during the war, and that they stand in the relation of paroled prisoners of war; that in point of fact there is now really existing in legal contemplation a rebel army, or was at the time of this election, in May, 1867; therefore, these men are to be treated as though they were still in the rebel army or as if they were captured and held as prisoners of war.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, if there never had been a proclamation by the President; if there never had been any action by Congress, still if the war was in fact over as matter of public history, and the power with which we were at war was destroyed, there would be no sense in saying that those men are still to be regarded as a part of the rebel army in the service or as paroled prisoners or actual prisoners of war. But, sir, on the 20th of June, 1866, the President of the United States issued his proclamation declaring that the war was at an end, that peace reigned throughout the entire country; and Congress, by the act of March 2, 1867, expressly recognized the validity of that proclamation. Therefore, what becomes of this theory? I believe it was given up, as I said before, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cook] this morning, so that the entire groundwork or basis upon which those 625 votes are to be set aside is entirely destroyed by that act of 1867. The committee, in my judgment, stand in reference to that precisely as a certain judge I knew who once decided a case on the strength of a statute that turned out to have been repealed some four or five years before. It was generally supposed he cut rather a ridiculous figure.

But, sir, there is another answer to this. There is not a particle of evidence in this case that any of the rebel soldiers who gave these 625 votes were in the war at its close, or but very few of them. I have carefully looked through the evidence on this subject, and there is not evidence to show that more than twenty of them continued in the service of the rebellion until the close of the war. On the other hand, the evidence affirmatively proves that a very large proportion of them were not in the rebel service at the close of the war. I have made some memoranda on that subject from the evidence. M. W. Mitchell testifies to 41 rebel soldiers who voted for Young, and only 18 of them, he says, were in the rebel service at the close of the war. M. Literal testifies to 5, and none of them, he says, were in the service till the close of the war. Henry Whitt testifies to 27 who voted for Young, and only 2 of them, he says, were in the rebel service till the close of the war. Frank Hunter testifies to 82 rebel votes that were given for Young, and only 1 of the men, he says, served till the close of the war. B. J. Bennett testifies to 27 votes, and only 6 of them served till the close of the war. B. Hayden testifies to the number of 80 rebel votes, and he says he does not know that any of them served till the close of the war. J. M. Lewis testifies to 9, and only 2 served till the close of the war.

Now, Mr. Speaker, by throwing out these 625 votes, and by throwing out a little more than 800 votes upon another ground, the Committee report that McKee was elected by 41 majority. The evidence shows affirmatively, however, that more than three times the number of 41 of the 625 men who gave those votes were not in the rebel service at the close of the war. They had left the rebel army before. This number includes men, and very many of them, who, it appears from the evidence, were never in the regular rebel service. Some of them were only engaged in some of the guerrilla fights, and they are all spoken of as having served in the rebel army. So that upon that ground, (if it is not entirely demolished in point of law, as I have endeavored to show,) the evidence shows affirmatively that but a small proportion of the 625 men were in the rebel army at the close of the war. This new light, therefore, which the committee discovered about paroled prisoners of war, I think is entirely demolished, and may be said to be out of sight.

Then comes the question which has been raised whether the fact that a man has been in the rebel service disqualifies him to vote for members of Congress. It is conceded that there is no statute of Kentucky that disqualifies a man from voting on that ground. They did at one time pass such a statute, but the courts decided that it was unconstitutional, and the Legislature repealed it. That is regarded, as it should be regarded, I think, as a declaration or as an enactment by the Legislature that these men were duly and legally entitled to vote in that State. Well, sir, I am one of those who believe, as I understand my party generally to believe, that this matter of suffrage in the States is to be regulated by the States; that it belongs to them; that Congress cannot interfere with it; that it is beyond our power. But I need not debate that question. Whether or not it is in the power of Congress to say that men who have served in the rebel armies shall not be voters in the States, Congress never has said so, never has passed any such law. So that whether such power resides in Congress or not, Congress has never attempted to exercise it.

I have seen it stated in some newspaper that the reason why the Committee of Elections came to this strange conclusion was in consequence of a principle that had been decided by this House in the recent case of Delano vs. Morgan. Well, sir, what was that? The great question in that case was in reference to the votes of two or three hundred deserters.

Congress passed a law, not declaring that deserters should not vote in the States, but declaring that deserters from the armies of the United States should lose their citizenship, that they should forfeit their citizenship of the United States. That is clearly within the power of Congress. Congress has the right to say how citizenship of the United States may be acquired, and Congress has the right to say how citizenship of the United States shall be lost.

Well, sir, in my judgment, and, as I understand it, in the judgment of the committee, that law did not affect the right to vote in Ohio. But the Legislature of Ohio had declared that one of the qualifications for voting in that State was that a man should be a citizen of the United States. Therefore it was by virtue of the law of Ohio, not by virtue of the law of Congress, that a person was disfranchised in Ohio for deserting. Congress could say whether they were citizens of the United States or not, and having declared that deserters were not citizens of the United States, and the law of Ohio having declared that none but citizens of the United States should vote in Ohio, these deserters were deprived of the right of voting in that State by virtue of the law of the State.

It will be seen by this statement how short that principle falls of what is claimed in this case, how entirely different the question is. There was no attempt in that case, by the Committee of Elections or by the House, to say that Congress had the right to regulate the right of suffrage in Ohio. Of course we had the same right in that respect in Ohio that we have in Kentucky.

There was a suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cook,] who made this report, in the opening of his argument in support of his report, that it would be very odd, indeed, if Congress had the right to say that a man who had aided the rebellion should not have a seat upon this floor, and could not also say that such a man should not vote for a member of Congress. There is a sort of plausibility in that suggestion; but, upon examination, every gentleman upon this floor will see the distinction in the power of Congress over the two cases. In reference to the right of a man to hold a seat upon this floor, the Constitution of the United States gives this House the express right and power to determine in reference to the qualifications of its members. Congress, by the passage of the test-oath act, has virtually enacted that men who cannot truly swear to what that oath contains shall not be entitled to seats; while, as to who shall be voters in the States, the Constitution gives Congress no power, and if it did, Congress has never exercised it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TROWBRIDGE.) The time of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] has expired. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPSON] is now entitled to the floor for thirty minutes.

MR. UPSON. The time has so far elapsed that there will not be an opportunity for me to make any extended remarks on this occasion. But there have been some suggestions made by my colleagues on the Committee of Elections, the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND,] and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. KERR,] which make it proper that I should say something in relation to the history of this case, and of my connection with it. There is a misapprehension in reference to this case, so far as regards the action of the Committee of Elections.

I never concurred in the first majority report of the committee. And the only reason why I did not write a minority report at the time the majority report was made was the state of my health. A number of days while the case was being heard before the committee I lay upon the lounge in the committee-room, not being in a condition for active labor. But at the time the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. McCLURG] made that report he knew that I had all along dissented from it, as well when the report was made, as when it was being considered by the committee. And I understood the gentleman from Missouri to state, at the time he made the report, that "the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPSON] did not concur in the report," and I went to his seat and told him that that statement made by him obviated the necessity of my making any statement myself to the House. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri to correct me, if I am mistaken.

MR. McCLURG. The statement of the gentleman is correct.

MR. UPSON. So gentlemen will see that it is not any new light which has arisen that has governed my action in this case. Afterward, when I anticipated that the case was coming up in the House, I asked permission to make a report, and I accordingly did make, on the 2d of June, 1868, the minority report, which has been referred to so often in this discussion.

I wish now to call the attention of the House to that report in order to show my friend, who has just preceded me, [Mr. POLAND,] that I was not reduced to any necessity of counting out rebel votes in order to show that Mr. McKee was elected. But, on the contrary, I claim, and I could show conclusively to the House if I had the time, that it is exactly as I say and as I then stated in said report. If my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. GOLLADAY,] who addressed the House on Saturday, will read the reports, he will discover that the committee in its last report recommend the same thing that was laid down in my report. Therefore I concurred with them to that extent. I did not concur with them in the first instance, but I did concur in the last report, holding Mr. McKee elected. I went further than they did in their last report, but I concurred in the result, and therefore can properly vote for their resolution. The gentleman from Kentucky will find it is of frequent occurrence that members of a committee concur in the action proposed, but who do not altogether agree with the reasoning by which that action is attempted to be sustained and enforced.

But, sir, the report was not unanimous even to the extent claimed. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] was not present when the decision was first made, being absent on account of sickness. And in fact still another member was not present, but being convinced as to what his vote should be, left it with the chairman. On this last report there is an actual majority of the committee in favor of Mr. McKee. I say that in perfect good faith, and I am sure the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. GOLLADAY,] who, on Saturday, seemed to doubt this, will not question the statement of a gentleman who makes a report that it is the report of a majority of the committee. I know it is the report of the majority of the committee.

Now, sir, what was claimed in the first majority report, and what was attempted to be shown in the minority report? In the first instance it was held that the rule heretofore laid down justified them in taking the ground that Mr. Young was disqualified and not entitled to take a seat in this House by reason of disloyalty, in which the minority report also concurred, and so the majority of the committee still hold. In the second place it was held that Mr. McKee had not received a majority of the votes cast at said election, therefore was not elected. The majority of the committee in the first report stated that finding no law of Kentucky disfranchising rebel soldiers they did not reject them in their computation. They held, also, that deserters were not disqualified voters by the laws of Kentucky. They counted 8 votes for Mr. Young, the votes of deserters, which gave him the majority, as stated in said report. Allowing him those 8 votes gave him a majority of 5 votes. I went on in the minority report and showed that the majority had counted 666 rebel votes for Mr. Young. I called attention to that, and also stated, in the very same report, that to make up Young's majority of 5 votes, the votes of 8 deserters from the Federal Army were counted by the majority for Young, which, if rejected, as they ought to have been, would have given McKee a majority of 8 votes. That is on the basis of the first report, and that Mr. McKee was accordingly entitled to the seat.

Mr. ADAMS. Did the first report they made in this case say Young's majority was only 5; or did they say, assuming it to be the fact that the positions taken by McKee were true, then Young's majority would still be 5?

Mr. UPSON. I state the basis laid down in the report, or statement given by the gentleman who drew it; that gentleman ciphered out 5 majority for Young, and therefore, as it did not on that computation elect McKee it was considered unnecessary to pass upon the legal points any further.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish the gentleman to state it.

Mr. UPSON. I have stated it, and I decline to yield further. We have yielded half of the hour to which the committee is entitled to close this debate to the other side, and the discussion, so far, has been mainly upon the other side; and therefore I cannot be expected to yield the brief time allowed me in addition. I have stated the position laid down by the committee; and if I had time I would be glad to yield to the gentleman to ask any question he pleased pertinent to the issue.

The contestant in his notice in the first place charged disloyalty against Mr. Young, and that he was not therefore entitled to a seat upon this floor. This charge was sustained in the report of the committee, and in that I understand the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] still concurs. But this charge it is not necessary to pass upon if Mr. McKee has received a majority of the votes legally cast at this election.

In the second place, it was charged by the contestant in his notice that in almost every precinct rebels voted for Mr. Young; and in the third place it was charged there was fraud, violence, and intimidation of loyal voters by reason of which the loyal voters were prevented from the free expression of their will at the polls; and lastly, that in the appointment of the election officers the laws of the State were openly disregarded and violated, and persons who were disqualified or ineligible by reason of disloyalty or otherwise, assumed to officiate as such officers.

These charges were made specific enough to apply to most of the election precincts in the district, and many counties and precincts were particularly specified. I insisted then in my report that these deserters should be rejected, and that 8 votes of deserters deducted from the entire vote would leave, on their own count, a majority of 8 for Mr. McKee.

But I went still further. The evidence in the case shows—I refer also to the poll-books which are not printed but copies of which were before the committee, it being considered unnecessary to print them—that at Little Sandy precinct, Morgan county, one of the judges had been in the rebel army, and was therefore disqualified to act as such by the laws of Kentucky. But my friend from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] may see that this was not a "new light" to me because it was before the argument was had and before the vote was taken in the House on the case of Delano vs. Morgan, to which he alludes. The majority returned for Young at that precinct was 55, and being clearly illegal, on the basis of the first report as well as the last, it should be deducted from the vote for Mr. Young. That makes McKee's majority 58.

But still further. The vote of Centreville, in Fleming county, was overlooked by the majority of the committee in said first report. The return gave Young a majority of 132. This, also, was deducted in the minority report as illegal, making McKee's majority 190 without rejecting the votes of the rebel soldiers. But in addition to this it further appeared that of the remaining votes counted by the majority for Young in the first report, 666 votes were cast by returned rebel soldiers, and this was specially commented upon in the minority report.

The last majority report made after the case had been recommitted to the committee rejects 625 votes of the rebel soldiers and also the 8 votes of the deserters, together with the returns from certain election precincts where one or more rebels officiated as election officers; but does not reject all the precincts specified in the previous majority and minority reports.

Here I call attention to the fact that in Mason county, out of forty-four election officers, twenty-eight were men who are recognized in the testimony as having been notorious sympathizers with the rebellion during the war, and voted for Mr. Young. Seven of the others voted for Thomas M. Green and five for Mr. McKee, while four did not vote at all. But while the evidence shows that twenty-eight were notorious sympathizers with the rebellion, not one of the returns of the votes cast in the various precincts in that county where these men officiated has been rejected in the last report of the majority. I insist that these men were disqualified by the law of Kentucky from acting as officers of election. There were returned as cast at the various precincts in this county, where these men officiated at the election, the following majorities for Young:

Elizaville.....	80
May's-Lick.....	172
Maysville, No. 1.....	131
Minerve, No. 4.....	65
Maysville, No. 2.....	112
Lewisburg, No. 8.....	148
Washington.....	69
Germantown.....	86

863

which returns I hold to be illegal and should be rejected.

The elections held and returns made by officers illegally appointed or not properly qualified, are illegal, and should be rejected. It is sufficient to refer to the following precedents:

"If the State law requires three magistrates to preside at the election, a return made by three persons, two of whom were not magistrates, was held defective. (Johnson vs. Wayne, Cl. & H., 47.)

"The neglect of the returning officers to be sworn, where the law requires them to act under oath, vitiates all returns made by them. (McFarland vs. Culpepper, Cl. & H., 221.)

"If an election is required by law to be held by three judges, who are to be sworn, and it is held by two not sworn, the votes taken by them are to be rejected. (Easton vs. Scott, Cl. & H., 272.)

"The neglect of election officers to take the oath required by law vitiates the polls for the county or precinct in which such officer acts. (Draper vs. Johnston, Cl. & H., 702; and see also Letcher vs. Moore, Cl. & H., 715.)

"Where the law required the board of election officers to consist of three persons and but two officiated, the vote was rejected. (Howard vs. Cooper, Bartlett's Election Cases, 275.)

"Where the poll-book was not certified to by any of the officers of the election, held that the vote should not be counted. (Chrisman vs. Anderson, Bartlett, 328.) See also a remark of the committee in Harrison vs. Davis, (Bartlett, 343), and especially the report of the committee in the case of Delano vs. Morgan, of the present session."

Now, here are 863 votes returned by these officers who were appointed in open violation of the laws of Kentucky; and to show that I am correct I will simply refer to the law, which, it will be seen, is penal in its character.

The original law, with the amendment, is as follows:

[Myers's Supplement, p. 456.]

"An act to amend section one, article three, chapter thirty-two, title 'Elections,' of the Revised Statutes.

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That hereafter, so long as there are two distinct political parties in this Commonwealth, the sheriff, judges, and clerk of election, in all cases of elections by the people under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and under the constitution and laws of Kentucky, shall be so selected and appointed as that one of the judges at each place of voting shall be of one political party, and the other judge of the other or opposing political party; and that a like difference shall exist at each place of voting between the sheriff and clerk of election: Provided, That there be a sufficient number of the members of each political party resident in the several precincts, as aforesaid, to fill said offices. And this requirement shall be observed by all officers of this Commonwealth who have the power to appoint any of the aforesaid officers of election, under the penalty of a fine of one hundred dollars for each omission, to be recovered by presentment of the grand jury."

MARCH 15, 1862.

"An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section one, article three, chapter thirty-two, title 'Elections,' of the Revised Statutes,' approved February 11, 1858.

"SECTION 1. That in construing the act approved February 11, 1858, to which this is an amendment, those who have engaged in the rebellion for the overthrow of the Government, or who have in any way aided, counseled, or advised the separation of Kentucky from the Federal Union by force of arms, or adhered to those engaged in the effort to separate her from the Federal Union by force of arms, shall not be deemed one of the political parties in this Commonwealth within the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment.

"SEC. 2. This act to take effect from and after its passage."

Thus it will be seen that on the 15th of March, 1862, after the rebellion had commenced, the Legislature of Kentucky passed a law that in construing the act which I have just read—

"Those who have engaged in the rebellion for the overthrow of the Government, or who have in any way aided, counseled, or advised the separation of Kentucky from the Federal Union by force of arms, or who have adhered to those engaged in efforts to separate her from the Union, shall not be deemed one of the political parties of this Commonwealth within the provisions of the act to which this is amendatory."

They go on further than overt acts of treason. They say any person "who in any way aided, counseled, or advised the separation of Kentucky from the Federal Union, or adhered to those who were engaged in efforts to separate her from the Union." Now, then, those men who notoriously sympathized with the rebellion could not have so done without in some way aiding, advising, or counseling it. And it is worthy of remark that, notwithstanding this charge was contained in the notice served on Mr. Young, he did not take any evidence to contradict this evidence brought here on the part of the contestant. And my friend from Kentucky, when he referred to the case of Mr. Coryell, at Orangeburg, in Mason county, forgot to mention that he was also a candidate for justice of the peace, and disqualified to act as an election officer by the law of Kentucky, which requires the coroner to act in such cases; and therefore, independent of the charge of disloyalty, he was disqualified by the reason that he was a candidate for office at that election.

There being 863 of this class of votes thus illegally returned, I find that even allowing all the rebel votes it would leave a majority of 273 for Mr. McKee. But I insist that the law of the case has not been changed at all by the law which was read to-day, and which was referred to by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. Poland.] The mere fact that Congress referred to the date of a certain proclamation as the date from which two years should run for certain military purposes does not affect this question in the least. The simple question is this: when men engage in war against their country, and take up arms against it, do they or do they not forfeit any political rights? Gentlemen will not claim that while waging war against the Government they have a right to elect members of Congress. Then when peace is restored I deny that these men's original political rights spring up immediately into action without any act of the sovereign power of the nation. I am willing to go before the people of the country upon that issue. I say that when a rebel throws down the cartridge-box he cannot take up the ballot-box and immediately assume either to come into this House, or send an agent here to represent him, without the consent of the sovereign power of the nation. The effect would be nothing more nor less than to permit him to reorganize rebellion on the floor of this House under legal forms and proceedings. No republican government can exist on any such basis. Gentlemen say there is no precedent. Well, of course, in the very nature of things, there can be no precedent. There is no precedent for such a rebellion, and I hope to God there will never be another. But in order to prevent it it is necessary for us to distinctly lay down and assert the principle that all political rights do not necessarily revert to all men who engage in rebellion when peace is first restored as they were before the rebellion unless by the permission of the sovereign power of the people.

The gentleman from Indiana says that this is a matter which is wholly controlled by the local authorities of the States. I submit to him that the local authorities of the States have no control over the naturalization laws of the country, and that that is an exclusive power in the General Government. But the position which he lays down, if carried out, abrogates that clause of the Constitution, strikes at the whole power of naturalization, so far as allowing men to vote for Federal officers is concerned, and would make it null and void. I submit to him that no republican government can exist in safety which will permit a man who has been engaged in arms against it the moment the rebellion is overpowered to go to the ballot-box and vote for a Representative in the national Legislature.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the gentleman if the reconstruction acts passed by Congress do not permit such men to vote?

Mr. UPSON. Those men in the South derive their power to vote solely and wholly from the acts of Congress. Can the gentleman show any such law of Congress in relation to rebels in Kentucky?

Mr. JONES. I cannot.

Mr. UPSON. It is by virtue of the reconstruction acts of Congress, not by any inherent right of their own, that they have the right to vote in the southern States, and when I look into the State of Kentucky and find that every man who is black, no matter how intelligent or moral he may be, is disfranchised, I do not think it lies with them to exclaim so loudly about the injustice of excluding rebels from the polls.

Mr. JONES. Is there any difference between persons who went out of the State and fought and those who remained in the State?

Mr. UPSON. One reason why I insist upon a rigid construction of the State law is because of the condition of things in Kentucky, consequent upon the rebellion. There are some things which are matters of history. If the gentleman who quoted the proclamations of the President on Saturday [Mr. GOLLADAY] had examined the same book a little further (McPherson's Manual,) he would have found therein the terms of the surrender of Lee and Johnston, which he so persistently denied.

Now, in relation to the necessity of enforcing these laws of Kentucky in relation to election officers, I call attention to the fact that, as a matter of history, we know and can take notice judicially in this House of the fact that a large portion of the citizens of that State went into the rebellion, and that there has been there a great deal of irregularity, violence, and intimidation of Union men ever since the rebellion was overthrown. I saw but a few days since a notice in the papers that a marshal of the United States had recently been killed in Kentucky because of his Unionism.

And even as late as September 30, 1867, Major General Thomas, in his report from the headquarters of his department, which will be found in the last annual report of the Secretary of War, in writing of the violence and bloodshed in his department, and of the murders and robberies in the country districts in Tennessee and Kentucky, makes use of this language:

"The town of Columbia, in Maury county, Tennessee, may also be mentioned as standing prominently forth for obstacles thrown in the way of obtaining justice through the civil courts by any who were not identified with the confederates. The petty officers of the law, particularly a sheriff, by virtue of that freemasonry existing among rebels and rebel sympathizers in that locality, oftentimes could make life almost unbearable to those who had not remained consistently disloyal to the Government. Nor did Kentucky yield to Tennessee the palm for disorder and violence, particularly in localities not easily accessible to troops. A band of desperadoes, known as 'regulators,' taking the law into their own hands, or rather setting all law at defiance, scourged the country, marking their victims and dealing murders and robberies with a ferocity unparalleled in any civilized community. When called upon by those suffering from these incursions for assistance, I helplessly referred the complaints to the State authorities, who, although perfectly willing to act, and though deploring the condition of the affected localities, could find no remedy through the law, and, they failing, it became necessary for me to so post my troops throughout Kentucky that by their presence they might intimidate, if they could not prevent, the existing lawlessness."

"In Kentucky as well as in Tennessee the administration of justice depends in a great measure upon the personal characters of the judge, sheriff, and jurors, the laws seemingly making but little difference."

This, as I have stated, is from a report from General Thomas, made as late as September 30, 1867, more than four months after this election was held in Kentucky. In this State the voting is viva voce; the name of each voter and the candidate for whom he votes being publicly cried by the sheriff or his deputy, and recorded by the clerk.

From the nature of their powers and duties as well as from the condition of Kentucky consequent upon the rebellion, it will be seen how important it was that these election officers should be impartially selected and appointed as required by law, equally from each of the two political parties, and also that no participant in or adherent of the rebellion should be allowed to be appointed or to act as such election officer; and the law of Kentucky recognizes this importance by imposing a penalty on all officers of that State, having the power to appoint any of such election officers, who fail to observe these requirements.

And I might refer to the evidence to show how intimidation prevailed at this election, and the necessity for having these laws enforced. The county judge of Mason county, who was a paroled prisoner from Camp Jackson, appointed all these officers in that county, and he himself was by law one of the county board of canvassers of the election.

In addition to that, I may call the attention of the House, in the few minutes that remain to me of my time, to some testimony to further show the necessity of a proper enforcement of the State law. On page 39 you will find this:

"Question. Please state if in this county, at the May election, 1867, any violence, force, or threats were used against Union men; and if so, state all you saw or knew."

"Answer. I was at the Mud Lick Springs precinct, and saw force used, or weapons, against Union men. The circumstances were these: one Enoch Pergam shot Thomas Clark, a Union man, for no other reason, as I thought, than that he declared himself in favor of negro suffrage. Pergam said any man who votes for that ought to be shot, and he did shoot him. After Clark was shot he ran off some twenty steps and crossed the fence. I went to him and saw he was fatally shot, and assisted him to the house and waited on him. I saw across the road Mr. Pergam and several men flourishing pistols and making demonstrations, and I went to Robert Wells, the sheriff of the county, and asked him to arrest Pergam, and he said he could not do it then. I offered to assist him. I was then advised by Union men to get away from there, and I did go away."

"Question. Was any arrest made, and did the man Clark die?"

"Answer. There was no arrest made while I stayed, and the man Clark did die. There might have been an arrest after I left. I do not believe that the sheriff or any one else would have been safe to have attempted making an arrest at that time."

Let me now read from pages 47 and 48 of the testimony what Mr. Roberts swears to:

"Answer. I was during the month of April in the following counties: Lewis, Lawrence, Boyd, Floyd, Morgan, Pike, Montgomery, and Bath, and had an excellent opportunity of ascertaining the feelings of the people in those counties, (in Morgan and Floyd particularly,) where the rebel element prevails. Captain McKee was threatened, if the word of some of the most prominent citizens can be relied on. As for myself I would not have undertaken to canvass those counties advocating the principles of Captain McKee without sufficient guard to prevent disturbances; I would consider that I was hazarding my life. In West Liberty, Morgan county, the meeting of which Captain McKee was the speaker was interrupted by a gang of returned rebel soldiers, and several pistols were drawn, and had it not been for Captain McKee's bold effrontery they would, no doubt, have either killed or crippled him. I heard previous to Captain McKee's going there that it would be unsafe for him to attempt to speak there, as there had been threats made against his life. During the disturbance I heard some of the crowd say, 'Kill the d—n nigger,' (referring to McKee.)"

"Question. From what you saw and know of the state of feeling at certain points in this congressional district in May, 1867, do you or do you not believe it would have been dangerous for men to vote for McKee at some of the precincts of the upper counties, and do you or do you not believe that some loyal men were deterred from voting at said May election for Samuel McKee because of a dread of violence then or afterward to themselves?"

"Answer. From what I saw and heard I do firmly believe that there was danger of men voting for McKee being either violated or disturbed either in person or property; at some of the precincts in the district it was not safe for a man to vote his sentiments."

This was in precincts which I insist should be thrown out; and if they are, it elects McKee.

I read from page 66 to show the fear of personal violence under which some of these witnesses testified:

"Question. What is the character of all the men named by you as voting for Young? Are they not peaceable law-abiding citizens?"

"Answer. Many of them are, but some of them are not."

"Question. Please name the man or men of the above number who were not peaceable, law-abiding citizens, on the 4th of May, 1867."

"Answer. I cannot and will not answer this question; I am afraid of personal violence."

I may also add that in numerous instances, as shown by the testimony, the officers before whom the testimony was taken, assuming to themselves the prerogatives of this House, took upon them to decide on the legality and admissibility of testimony; overruled questions that were put by contestant, and did not allow them to be answered, and, as is alleged by contestant, in some instances even refused to write down his question and thus prevented him from showing what questions he asked or what he offered to prove; and the ruling made by the officer in rejecting it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The hour for closing the debate has expired, and the question recurs on the following resolutions reported from the Committee of Elections:

Resolved, That John D. Young, having voluntarily given aid, countenance, counsel, and encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States, is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky, or to hold a seat therein as such Representative.

Resolved, That J. D. Young was not legally elected a member of the House of Representatives of the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky.

Resolved, That Samuel McKee was duly elected a member of the House of Representatives in the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of the State of Kentucky.

Mr. KERR. I gave notice that at the proper time I would move a substitute for the first resolution.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection it will be considered pending.

Mr. KELSEY objected; but subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. KERR's substitute was received, and read as follows:

Resolved, That John D. Young was duly elected a member of this House from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky, and should now be admitted to his seat herein, upon taking the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. KERR. I demand the yeas and nays on that substitute.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 30, nays 90, not voting, 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Axtell, Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Brooks, Cary, Chanler, Eldridge, Fox, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Holman, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Mungen, Niblack, Pruyn, Robinson, Sitgreaves, Taber, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, and Woodward—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Gravelly, Harding, Higby, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburt, Ingersoll, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercur, Myers, Newcomb, Paine, Peters, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Poley, Pomeroy, Price, Raum, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanks, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stokes, Taylor, Thomas, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—90.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barnum, Beaman, Bromwell, Buckland, Burr, Cake, Reader W. Clarke, Dawes, Dodge, Driggs, Ela, Finney, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Hawkins, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Asabel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Jenckes, Kelley, Ketcham, Kitchen, Koontz, Laffin, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Marshall, Marvin, McCormick, McCullough, Miller, Morrissey, Nicholson, Nunn, Perham, Phelps, Randall, Robertson, Ross, Scofield, Selye, Smith, Stewart, Stone, Taft, John Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wood—69.

So the substitute was rejected.

During the roll call,

Mr. TROWBRIDGE said: My colleague, Mr. BEAMAN, is absent on account of indisposition. He came here this morning, against the positive order of his physician, to vote on the disability bill.

Mr. KOONTZ. I am paired with Mr. McCULLOUGH. I would have voted no.

Mr. McCORMICK. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. VAN HORN. He would vote no, and I would vote ay.

Mr. HAIGHT. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HALSEY. If here he would vote no, and I would vote ay.

Mr. GETZ. My colleague, Mr. RANDALL, is paired with Mr. CAKE.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I am paired with Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I am desired by Mr. BURR to state that he is paired with Mr. HOPKINS. He would vote ay if here, and my colleague would vote the other way.

Mr. WARD. My colleague, Mr. VAN HORN, is absent on leave; he would have voted no.

The result having been announced as above recorded,

The question recurred on agreeing to the first resolution reported by the committee as follows:

Resolved, That John D. Young, having voluntarily given aid, countenance, counsel, and encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States, is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky, or to hold a seat therein as such Representative.

The resolution was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the second resolution of the committee as follows:

Resolved, That J. D. Young was not legally elected a member of the House of Representatives of the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of Kentucky.

The resolution was agreed to.

The question recurred on the third resolution of the committee as follows:

Resolved, That Samuel McKee was duly elected a member of the House of Representatives in the Fortieth Congress from the ninth congressional district of the State of Kentucky.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 62, nays 43, not voting 84; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Blaine, Blair, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ferriss, Ferry, Fields, Garfield, Gravelly, Harding, Higby, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburt, Ingersoll, Judd, Julian, Kelsey, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Lynch, Mallory, Maynard, McCarthy, Mercur, Moore, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, Paine, Peters, Pike, Poley, Price, Raum, Sawyer, Shanks, Starkweather, Stokes, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Wyck, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, and John T. Wilson—62.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Barnes, Beck, Bingham, Boyer, Brooks, Cary, Chanler, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Fox, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Grover, Hawkins, Holman, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Knott, Loughridge, Moorhead, Niblack, Orth, Poland, Pruyn, Robinson, Sitgreaves, Spaulding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Taber, Taylor, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, and Woodward—43.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barnum, Beaman, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Butler, Cake, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Cullom, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Ela, Eliot, Finney, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Asabel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Jenckes, Kelley, Ketcham, Kitchen, Koontz, Laffin, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McCormick, McCullough, Miller, Morrissey, Mungen, Nicholson, Nunn, O'Neill, Perham, Phelps, Pile, Plants, Pomeroy, Randall, Robertson, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Selye, Shellabarger, Smith, Aaron F. Stevens, Stone, Taft, John Trimble, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, and Woodbridge—34.

So the resolution was agreed to.

During the roll call,

Mr. McCORMICK said: I am paired with my colleague, Mr. VAN HORN.

Mr. HAIGHT. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HALSEY. He would vote ay and I would vote no.

Mr. GETZ. My colleague, Mr. RANDALL, is paired with Mr. CAKE.

Mr. KOONTZ. I am paired with Mr. McCULLOUGH. My vote would be ay.

Mr. MERCUR. Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, is absent on leave; if here he would vote ay.

The result having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that I demand the yeas and nays. I do not believe Mr. McKee is any more elected to this Congress than the man in the moon.

Mr. UPSON. I withdraw the motion. I rise to a question of privilege. I ask that the oath of office be administered to Mr. McKee.

Mr. BROOKS. From what State?

Mr. McKEE presented himself and took the oath prescribed by law.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 455) granting a pension to David Van Nordstrand;

An act (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of the widow and children of Henry E. Morse;

An act (H. R. No. 246) to grant a pension to Milton Anderson;

An act (H. R. No. 257) for the relief of James L. Dickinson;

An act (H. R. No. 258) for the relief of Mary B. Craig;

An act (H. R. No. 280) to grant a pension to Margaret Huston;

An act (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to John Kelley;

An act (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of the widow and minor children of Benjamin B. Naylor, late a pilot on the gunboat Patapsco;

An act (H. R. No. 517) granting a pension to Cornelia K. Schmidt, widow of Adam Schmidt, deceased, late a private in company A, thirty-seventh Ohio volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 519) granting a pension to Eliza J. Kennard, widow of William K. Kennard, deceased, late a private in tenth Ohio volunteers of war of 1861;

An act (H. R. No. 520) to place the name of Josephine R. Bugher on the pension-roll;

An act (H. R. No. 524) granting a pension to Austin M. Partridge;

An act (H. R. No. 523) increasing the pension of Susan A. Mitchell;

An act (H. R. No. 659) granting a pension to Sarah E. Pickell;

An act (H. R. No. 665) granting a pension to Susan V. Berg;

An act (H. R. No. 667) granting a pension to Mary Graham;

An act (H. R. No. 668) granting a pension to Elizabeth Butler, widow of Cyrus Butler;

An act (H. R. No. 769) granting a pension to David Howe;

An act (H. R. No. 772) granting a pension to Robert McCrory;

An act (H. R. No. 774) granting a pension to Amos Witham;

An act (H. R. No. 776) granting a pension to Zephaniah Knapp, of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania;

An act (H. R. No. 823) granting a pension to George W. Locker;

An act (H. R. No. 824) granting a pension to Annie Vaughn;

An act (H. R. No. 826) granting a pension to Michael Mellon;

An act (H. R. No. 827) granting a pension to Ann Wilson;

An act (H. R. No. 828) for the relief of Captain William McKean;

An act (H. R. No. 829) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Ten Eyck Williamson;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 262) authorizing certain distilled spirits to be turned over to the Surgeon General for the use of the Army hospitals; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) to authorize the enlargement of the Hygeia Hotel, at Fortress Monroe, Virginia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. HULBURD for one week.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. ADAMS to print remarks on the Kentucky contested-election case. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire now to ask the House to proceed to the consideration of the tax bill.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me to ask the House to take up a Senate bill from the Speaker's table and put it upon its passage.

Mr. SCHENCK. If it will not require a division of the House or consume time I will do so.

Mr. HIGBY. If it does I will not press it. If the bill is not passed before the 1st of July it will be of no consequence.

Mr. SCHENCK. What bill is it?

Mr. HIGBY. It is a bill to extend a railroad grant to the State of California.

Mr. SCHENCK. I know that bill will occasion a division.

Mr. HIGBY. I think not. The chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands simply wishes to move an amendment which I am willing to accept.

Mr. SCHENCK. There will be no difficulty in passing it before the 1st of July if the gentleman will aid us in pushing the tax bill through.

Mr. HIGBY. It will be put off from day to day until it is too late.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is a matter about which there will certainly be a division of the House.

Mr. HIGBY. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield now to my colleague on the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. ALLISON,] who desires to correct the Journal.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. ALLISON. On the final vote on Monday last on the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS,] in regard to the tax bill, I voted in the negative. On examining the record I find that my name is not recorded. I ask that the Journal be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected accordingly.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield now for a moment to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.]

ADDITIONAL BOUNTIES.

Mr. PAINE. I wish to have a correction made in a resolution which passed the House on Monday last. Every member of the House has an interest in the correction. I understand that the resolution has been so construed at the pay department as to necessitate a considerable delay in the payment of bounties. I did not intend it to have any construction such as has been put upon it. I do not know now how they have construed it; but I learn from a gentleman who has been up there that they have so construed it as to occasion great delay in the payment of bounties. I therefore ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the resolution adopted on the 15th instant, calling upon the Secretary of War for information respecting the payment of additional bounties, be, and it hereby is, so modified as to require only a statement of the aggregate number paid since January 1, 1868.

There was no objection; and the resolution was considered and agreed to.

SALE OF DAMAGED ORDNANCE.

Mr. SCHENCK resumed the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman give way to me to report a resolution?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes; if it will not consume time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask leave to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs a joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to sell damaged or unserviceable arms, ordnance, and ordnance stores.

Mr. BLAINE. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. The committee unanimously recommend the passage of the resolution; and it is very important; it will put money in the Treasury.

Mr. BLAINE. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BROOKS. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of an objection, and the joint resolution is not before the House.

AMERICAN SHARPSHOOTERS.

Mr. SCHENCK. While gentlemen are asking to make corrections, I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to ask for one. We reported a little bill authorizing the Germans to import a number of medals and other prizes presented to them, to be shot for at the great festival to which your committee is to go in New York. In transcribing the bill the assistant clerk—not the regular clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means, but an assistant who was volunteering for us—made a mistake and put it that they should not exceed in value $1,000, whereas it was distinctly written $10,000. The bill has passed both the House and the Senate, and I am told that the President will sign another bill, which has the correct amount, instead of the first bill, if the House will only pass it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair remembers that it was distinctly stated to the House by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] that the sum was $10,000.

Mr. SCHENCK. All the records will show that. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time, a joint resolution to remit the duties on $10,000 worth of these articles.

No objection was made; and accordingly a joint resolution (H. R. No. 306) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties on certain articles contributed to the National Association of American Sharpshooters, was introduced, and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF DAMAGED ORDNANCE.

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw my objection to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] reporting from the Committee on Military Affairs the joint resolution in relation to the sale of damaged ordnance.

No further objection being made,

Mr. GARFIELD reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a joint resolution (H. R. No. 292) directing the Secretary of War to sell damaged or unserviceable arms, ordnance, and ordnance stores, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution, which was read, directs the Secretary of War to cause to be sold, in such manner and at such times and places, at public or private sale, as he may deem most advantageous to the public interest, the old cannon, arms and other ordnance stores in possession of the War Department, which are damaged or otherwise unsuitable for the United States military service, or for the militia of the United States, and to cause the net proceeds of such sales, after paying the proper expenses of sale and of transportation to the place of sale to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is not that rather an unwise proposition, to allow these stores to be sold at either public or private sale?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have information from the War Department that they have been offered more at private sale for small lots of these articles than they could possibly get offered at public sale, and they specially recommend that the power to dispose of these articles at private sale be given to the Department.

Mr. SCHENCK. I know that to be the case. Mr. VAN WYCK. That will probably be so until the Secretary of War has power to sell at private sale, and then those gentlemen will manipulate to secure the articles for very little. I would much prefer that the Secretary of War be required to expose these articles at public sale.

Mr. SCHENCK. That has already been done.

M. GARFIELD. That has been done again and again. And many of these articles have been withdrawn from public sale because there have been no bidders. The following letter from the chief of ordnance will explain the matter fully:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, April 1, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this bureau for report of the letter of the Hon. R. C. SCHENCK of the 18th ultimo, in relation to the execution of the joint resolution of Congress reducing the expenses of the War Department by concentrating the business of the different bureaus of the Army now scattered in and around New York city, and requesting that the chief of ordnance might be directed to report in regard to the collection of salable cannon, arms, ammunition, and other surplus ordnance stores at a common point for such disposition of them as the Secretary of War may have directed, or may hereafter direct to be made, and what room would be needed for the storage of such articles; and beg leave to submit the following report:

The arms of foreign manufacture and obsolete patterns, with the ammunition for the same, and the cannon of caliber and models which have become obsolete, and are no longer required for arming the forts, or for the field service, and all other surplus ordnance stores which are unsuitable for our military service, should be sold whenever prices can be obtained; and as several attempts to sell arms and other condemned stores by public auction at the arsenals have been unsuccessful, (more than two hundred thousand stands of arms out of an aggregate of three hundred and seventy thousand advertised and offered at auction having been withdrawn either because no bids could be obtained on fair prices offered,) I am decidedly of opinion that the sales of arms and other ordnance stores should not, as a general rule, be by public auction.

The average prices obtained for arms at private sale have been nearly double that obtained by public auction for similar arms.

If the policy of selling the surplus arms and other ordnance stores at private sale, and when fair prices can be obtained, should be adopted, it will, in my opinion, be for the interest of the Government to collect the arms, ammunition, and other surplus ordnance stores, not including cannon, at or in the vicinity of New York city, which is the only great market for these articles, to be there classified, arranged, and held in readiness for sale.

There are a million of arms of foreign manufacture and irregular and obsolete patterns, and sixty million cartridges for the same, besides a large quantity of leather-work—accouterments, horse equipments, artillery harness, &c., which have been in service and should be sold, but which are worth more than the scrap value of the materials—which may be advantageously disposed of in the manner herein recommended.

Should it be decided to collect this property at New York city not less than a million and a half cubic feet will be required for its proper storage.

The views expressed in the accompanying report of Brevet Colonel Crispin, the agent of this department at New York, to whom the letter of Hon. R. C. SCHENCK was referred, are concurred in and adopted by this bureau.

The letter of Hon. R. C. SCHENCK is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. B. DYER,

Brevet Major General, Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the gentleman consent to amend the joint resolution so as to require the Secretary of War to first offer these articles at public sale on thirty days' notice?

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; I will consent to that amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I move to amend as I have indicated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON RAILROAD.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the bill concerning which the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] appears to be so anxious can be disposed of without a division of the House I will consent to its being considered at this time.

Mr. HIGBY. The chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands [Mr. JULIAN] and the chairman of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad [Mr. PRICE] have both examined it, and they do not object to it if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] can be allowed to offer a small amendment, to which I will not object.

No objection being made,

A bill (S. No. 216) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant land to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon," was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill, which was read, provides that section six of the act entitled "An act to grant land to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon," approved July 25, 1866, shall be so amended as to provide that, instead of the time now fixed in said section, the first section of twenty miles of said railroad and telegraph line shall be completed within two years after the passage of this act, and at least twenty miles in each three years thereafter, and the whole on or before the 1st of July, 1880.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to amend the bill by striking out "two years" and inserting "eighteen months;" also by striking out "three years" and inserting "two years."

Mr. HIGBY. I have no objection to that. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HIGBY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REAR ADMIRAL CHARLES WILKES.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1309) for the relief of Charles Wilkes, rear admiral of the Navy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXPENSES OF INDIAN PEACE COMMISSION.

Mr. WARD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to transmit to this House copies of all vouchers on file with the accounting officers for expenditures made by authority of the Peace Commission so called, under the act to make peace with certain hostile Indian tribes, approved July 20, 1867.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONS UNDER MILITARY SENTENCE.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform this House the names of all persons now under sentence by military commissions, courts, or authority at Dry Tortugas, together with the nature of the crimes charged and the term of sentence and the unexpired time now remaining. Also the same information with reference to all persons imprisoned at Atlanta, Georgia, where it is reported some twenty persons are confined in military dungeons.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I object.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass Senate joint resolution No. 137, extending the time for the completion of the Pacific railroad. It is similar to the one called up by the gentleman from California.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I object.

CAPTAIN D. W. M'DOUGAL.

Mr. ARCHER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 307) tendering a vote of thanks to Captain D. W. McDougal; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for ten days.

LAWS OF UTAH.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the acts, resolutions, and memorials of the Legislative Assembly of Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read in the presence of the House the resolution which now operates in regard to the tax bill. It was adopted on the 15th of June:

"Resolved, That after the report of the tax bill by the Committee of Ways and Means in pursuance of the order just passed, no other business shall be in order but the consideration of the bill so reported by said committee, except reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills."

As the House sees, that rescinds the morning hour every day and excludes every other business but reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills. Every morning the demand for the regular order of business will put the House in Committee of the Whole on the tax bill, as was the case during the trial of the President, when the House, under its own order, each day at a certain hour resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole and proceeded to the bar of the Senate.

This resolution only excepts the reports of the Committee on Enrolled Bills. There are two cases beside, arising under the Constitution of the United States, which the House cannot exclude. One is a veto of the President of the United States. The Constitution says that the House shall "enter his objections at large on their Journal and proceed to reconsider it." That is an imperative mandate of the Constitution that the House shall proceed to reconsider the question on the passage of the bill, and although a majority of the House may postpone its consideration, still the question must come up when the Speaker lays a President's veto message before the House.

The other case is where a member claims the right to be sworn in from any State in regard to which there has been recent legislation. The question may be referred to a committee; it may be postponed, but it must come before the House.

The Chair has stated these two exceptions. All other business, save these two and the reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, will be superseded by the tax bill until it is disposed of.

Mr. PRUYN. How about messages from the Senate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair intended to refer to those first. Of course they will always be received.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Suppose a resolution is brought in to impeach the President?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule upon that when it is presented. It is not now pending.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not know, it may not come up from the committee now holding a post mortem examination of the preceding impeachment.

Mr. GARFIELD. Can business be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It can, but a demand for the regular order of business will be an objection.

Mr. SCHENCK. Before going into the Committee of the Whole I move that the first reading of the bill for information, as it is printed, be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to ask the Speaker when it will be in order to move a substitute for the bill covering only the points desired by the House so we may be able to get away from here in reasonable time?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order at any time, but must be reserved until the committee has gone through with the pending bill. As it is a substitute for the bill, under the parliamentary law the original bill must first be perfected before the substitute can be acted upon.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to have the privilege of offering this sometime before the bill is perfected. The House may be three weeks in considering the long bill reported by the committee. It will never pass as reported, I apprehend.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have an opportunity to offer his substitute at the proper time in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask to have it read?

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir; it can be offered in Committee of the Whole at any time. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not yet been referred to the Committee of the Whole. It is yet in the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Why not consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Experience has proved that a bill of this kind can be proceeded with more rapidly in Committee of the Whole than in the House, where the yeas and nays can be called on every proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to recommit the bill. I presume that would take precedence of the motion to refer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] still has the floor.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to state that I withdraw my objection to the introduction of the resolution offered a little while ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COVODE.]

Mr. INGERSOLL and others called for the regular order.

Mr. SCHENCK. As the regular order is insisted upon, of course the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot be considered. I renew the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to recommit it with instructions to report the substitute I have indicated. I believe I made the motion to recommit after the gentleman from Ohio had surrendered the floor.

The SPEAKER. In the first place the gentleman is mistaken in the fact that the gentleman from Ohio had resumed his seat. In the second place the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole has priority over the motion to refer to a standing committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand the previous question on the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will not press my motion further. I wanted to save time.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that when the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the internal tax bill all general debate terminate within say one hour.

Mr. MUNGEN. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The motion of Mr. SCHENCK was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and proceed to the consideration of the internal tax bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I think it probable that all the time I shall claim of the House will be less than that limited by its order. I think I can make all the explanation I desire to submit in less than an hour. The committee of Ways and Means have instructed me to report the bill now before this committee for consideration, which has been framed in direct obedience to the orders of the House. By the resolution of last Monday the committee was instructed to report only that which related to the revision of the tax upon distilled spirits and upon tobacco. Two days afterward there was sent to the committee from the House an order to include in the bill and report such changes as might be deemed necessary in relation to the tax on banks. The title of the bill which is now before members in conformity with those orders explains just what the bill contains. It is "A bill to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks."

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that we have had to report a bill such as this. I am sorry that this House thought it necessary to call on us to present only some partial and piecemeal work in connection with the revision of the internal tax system of the country. It is but adding one more act to the quarter of a hundred which now cumber the statute-book upon this subject. I doubt the policy of these partial attempts at a revision admitted on all hands to be generally needed, and I was never more convinced that we ought not to have undertaken our work after that manner than when I came to consider the effect of the bill which we passed in March, and which on the 31st day of that month in the present year received the approval of the President—a bill to exempt certain manufactures from tax. If that bill had not been passed a general revision of the tax system would undoubtedly have taken place. But I see now in different directions in this House gentlemen who were eager for the passage of that special legislation who fell away from us as soon as they had accomplished what they particularly desired, a relief of local and special interests in which they felt the most immediate concern. And so, I fear, it may be hereafter. I fear that when gentlemen shall have accomplished an amendment of the law in regard to internal taxes, so as to make some reform in the system so far as distilled spirits, tobacco, and banks are concerned, we shall find many of them growing indifferent to any further reform embracing the general needs of the country upon all subjects which present objects of taxation. I am sorry on another account. I do not wish to revive an old controversy, nor to say anything which shall not be in perfect good temper; but the Committee of Ways and Means thought they were not particularly well treated before by this House, and the House, as the committee predicted, has gained nothing by the course which it has pursued.

The first instance upon record, perhaps, is exhibited of a committee of this House, deemed generally to be one of the most important, after they were half way or two thirds of the way through with the consideration of an important bill in Committee of the Whole, stopped by an order of the House, and the committee not even permitted to explain, in a few minutes allowed for that purpose, the condition of the bill, their views in regard to it, and what might or might not be the best policy of the House, until they obtained that privilege by filibustering for it, and then not except upon the condition that they should do it after a vote had been taken and when gentlemen had committed themselves on the question, and not then except upon the further condition that they should be replied to without opportunity of response by those who desired the House to take that course. It was predicted then that nothing would be gained. What has been gained? I think that if we had gone on through all the past week, from Monday until Saturday, with such opportunities as we could have had, we should, by this time certainly, as the committee predicted, have gone through with the whole matter of distilled spirits.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a question of order. This debate is not germane to the bill, and does not explain its provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair cannot prescribe a line of debate to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SCHENCK. I thank the gentleman for his anxious desire to have this matter fully understood. The committee then said it would probably take that week, and we are still of that opinion. And in obedience to the orders of the House, we now report upon these particular subjects. The length of time that will yet be occupied will depend upon the disposition and temper of the House to take up and press forward in good faith, according as we can agree upon the special provisions contained in the bill now under consideration, all that relates to the tax upon these articles.

But there was another reason assigned then, to which I wish now to call the attention of the House, and it is my duty to do so, why we ought not to have given the go-by, ought not to have thrown aside the greater portion of the original bill over which we had gone in order to confine ourselves to distilled spirits and tobacco only. That reason is to be found in this: throwing aside the work of the Committee of Ways and Means, which had been already revised by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, we threw aside provisions made for such an addition to the revenue of the country that we are very much afraid now that the revenue may fall short of the wants of the country.

Mr. BUTLER. How much short?

Mr. SCHENCK. I will tell the gentleman. If there be retained in the present bill the additions made to the tax on banks, an increase of one half of one per cent. per year on deposits, three per cent. upon public moneys deposited with them, and an addition which the committee now propose of one per cent. per annum upon the circulation, the whole together will make an increase of taxes amounting to about three million seven hundred thousand dollars. The average deposits of Government moneys I have ascertained are about twenty-three million dollars, which, at three per cent., will give $690,000. An increase of one half per cent. upon the average deposits of other moneys, of $538,000,000, will give $2,690,000, and there will be an increase of over a million dollars from the additional tax we propose upon the circulation of the banks. If that be retained in the bill, and I am told it is doubtful whether such will be the disposition of the majority of the Committee of the Whole, for it is said the House was surprised into adopting the order giving the Committee of Ways and Means authority to include banks in this new bill—if that be retained there will still be a loss by not adopting the other portions of the old bill of about twelve million five hundred thousand dollars, as we estimate it after the most careful examination.

For instance—and this is the principal item—by the bill which has been thrown aside for the present, we put dealers, wholesale and retail, particularly wholesale dealers, upon the same footing with manufacturers, and required them to pay, not one tenth of one per cent., as under the present law, but one fifth of one per cent. upon their sales above $5,000 per annum. That alone would make a difference of about eight million dollars. Then when you add to that what is lost by not putting an increased tax upon lotteries, brokers, insurance agents, lawyers, jewelry, pianos, fire-arms, public amusements, &c., the whole together, exclusive of the increased tax on banks, amount to about twelve and a half million dollars. We regret, on that account, that we should be confined to this tax upon distilled spirits and upon tobacco, even if we include the tax on banks.

There is another thing which it is proper—and I am instructed by the committee to do so—I should call to the attention of the Committee of the Whole. Under the absolute instructions of the House we have felt constrained to confine ourselves to that which, directly or indirectly, relates exclusively to the tax upon the articles embraced in this bill. In doing this we had necessarily to abandon a large portion of the general bill which we would gladly have held on to as a part of a system, all dove-tailed together, which we had attempted to adopt as a general revision of the present tax laws.

For instance, we had a provision that there should be a division of labor in the office, or the department of internal revenue, whichever it might be. I throw aside the question now whether it should or should not be an independent department; for I confess it seemed to be the opinion of the House that it should not be an independent department. We had provided for a division of labor, which would have resulted in much more efficiency and security in the proper execution of the law.

We had also provided for a strict accountability for money and stamps, running through several sections of the bill, all of which is now lost; and there remains the same old loose system under which I am surprised there has not been more fraud and loss than really there has been.

Then, again, we had provided seizures should be made hereafter with the consent of the collector and assessor, and upon a division of opinion between them, under the umpirage of another and a superior officer, so there should not be oppression of the tax-payer by arbitrary seizures to the extent that now occurs.

We had also a section which did away, to a great extent, with that loose system of compromising which now prevails, and hedged round the power to make these compromises, and limited the exercise of functions in that direction, on the part of the Commissioner, by restraints which would have prevented so much license as now prevails in that direction.

We had a provision against drawbacks; and I will call the attention of the House particularly to the fact we proposed to have a supervision in the different judicial districts of the collection of taxes under the authority of the collectors and assessors, and of their conduct and the conduct of all inferior officers in connection with their duty, and to dispense with the roving officers which infest the country in all directions.

We had proposed to break up the whole system of authorizing the collector or assessor to be sent from his district into another district to make seizures at his will, and usurp the functions of the local officer; and we had also done away with that old system so fruitful in the vicious practice which has heretofore and will still exist if the old system continues of appointing special agents and roving inspectors to traverse the country, seizing right and left, levying black mail, and imposing generally upon the people of the country, while they profit more than occasion, by their services, to be paid into the Treasury.

We did not believe we had the right to insert any of these general provisions; and I make these preliminary remarks for, though the committee felt itself restrained from inserting such things in the bill, if the House gets along smoothly and it is able to agree to that now reported, the committee may feel it to be its duty to move separately some of the features of the old bill along with this, so as to make the collection of the tax, on even these articles, effective.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I hope the gentleman will let me ask him a question. Do I understand the Committee of Ways and Means, who reported this bill, are opposed to it, and believe the machinery provided in this bill and in the general law is insufficient for the purpose of collecting this tax?

Mr. SCHENCK. We are by no means opposed to the bill, and if gentlemen will not think it a vain assumption I think we have reported still a good bill. But I think the bill, being taken out of even a better system and leaving out certain provisions which would have made it still more effective, can hereafter be made more effective if the Committee of the Whole is willing to concur with us in reporting some provisions in regard to the subject. For instance, the matter of which I spoke last. We will propose, outside of this tax to which we were directed to confine our attention, to have ingrafted upon this bill a provision, if the Committee of the Whole think proper, to sweep away some sixteen or seventeen hundred officers on roving commissions and have a more rigid system of supervision.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think, Mr. Chairman, from this statement it is idle for the House or the committee to go on attempting to perfect this bill if after all it is a fragmentary, incomplete system, and I am rather of the opinion it is better. Now if the Committee of Ways and Means do not feel itself justified in reporting this as a perfect system as far as it goes, to recommit the bill now so as to have the Committee of Ways and Means devise a perfect system for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits and tobacco. It seems to me the consideration of the subject requires the consideration of the machinery in connection with the tax, whatever the system may be. I should be sorry to go on with this bill, and before we adjourn be compelled to consider another bill containing a system for the collection of the tax we levy in this. If we are in that condition I think we ought to take some other steps.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is due to the Committee of the Whole that I should go further in my explanation. My friend from Massachusetts was not here, I think, when that order was made. The order, it will be remembered, was imperative. By a majority of ten the House instructed the committee to bring in a bill confining our report to these particular subjects. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I think we have presented a bill which will, to a very great extent, remedy the abuses and provide against the evils of the present system, while regulating at the same time the tax upon those articles which are the special objects treated in the bill. But because we did not feel authorized to introduce one or two other special matters of regulation, because they do not pertain particularly to whisky and tobacco, we have prepared one or two amendments, which at the close of the bill we shall submit to the committee for their adoption or not, which we think will bring some of this machinery to the aid of the bill we have reported. But, with that exception, I think it due to the House to say that while we think we have a bill reasonably perfect, we do not wish to be understood as claiming all the responsibility of this bill. This is not a bill of the Committee of Ways and Means. It is the best bill we could make up under the instructions of the House, and we wish gentlemen to be advised that we expect them to share with us any imperfections there may be in the bill for want of its covering the ground generally. And I suppose by their votes they are willing to do that.

Now, sir, these are no new views. These are just what were in substance the remarks made at the time the committee were instructed; and with all due deference to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and to others who take a different view, we were not directly, as we thought, met upon these grounds. We were more or less jocularly and with more or less propriety, as gentlemen might so regard it, characterized as a "mutual admiration society," and we were upbraided with certain views that some of us had given on other subjects. But so far as the views we submitted to the House were concerned, I beg leave to say there was not much of argument in reply to the argument or statement we made. It is true it was said with some ingenuity that we had taken six or seven months to prepare a bill, and it must be expected that gentlemen in the House would want six or seven months, or, at all events, some considerable time to consider it. I recollect the gentleman from Massachusetts went so far in his arithmetic as to say that the whole of the next short session added to the present one, according to his view, would hardly be sufficient to dispose of the bill.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] thinks I am not representing fairly his objections made at that time. I think I recollect them very well. I think we were treated to a sort of arithmetical problem, that if it took so many months to prepare a bill, it must necessarily take a great deal of time to consider it in the House, a great deal more for the Senate to consider it, and so it would consume more time than the remainder of this session, so that he really thought, admitting his premises, that he had made out a clear case that we should not be able to finish it before the 4th of March next. We were not allowed an opportunity to reply, but I thought at the time that we might have said to the House that it by no means followed because so much time was taken in the preparation of the bill that anything like the same proportionate time must necessarily be occupied in considering the bill in the House. I have always thought that just in proportion to the labor and care and assiduity with which a bill is prepared and sought to be perfected in committee, does it stand a chance of requiring less time in the House. However that may be in other cases we have had an example in this House of the readiness on the part of a great many of us to follow the lead of the committees of managers and other important committees of this House, and, under the previous question, have manifested so great a confidence in their work as to take what they offered us even almost entirely without debate, yielding our judgment to theirs.

Now, we had asked nothing of this kind. We had gone regularly into Committee of the Whole, examining the entire work of the Committee of Ways and Means, section by section, and clause by clause, with the fullest and freest opportunity for amendments. And yet we are thought to have been extravagant in our expectation that that would have been in some degree satisfactory when we have seen that in other important cases, and with other committees, a very different rule has prevailed.

But, sir, I have been by interruptions betrayed into saying a great deal more on this subject than I had intended. My desire was simply to apprise the House that abandoning for the present, at least, the general system dovetailed together, by which we had sought to fuse into one law the twenty-five laws you have now on the statute-book, under the order of the House we have selected the two or three matters segregated from the rest of that long bill to which the House seemed willing by its vote to turn its attention and did the best we could with it. But we desire to explain that before we are through with the bill, we shall probably feel it our duty to advise the House, that if they will accept one or two amendments, which will bring something of the machinery to which I have adverted into this bill to go in connection with it to the country, it will not only be to the benefit of the revenue system at large, but will particularly aid in that portion of it to which we have been required to confine ourselves in the bill reported.

What have we done on those subjects to which we have been directed to confine our attention? I ask the attention of gentlemen now while I explain in a plain conversational manner just what they will find to be the provisions of the bill.

The first subject, distilled spirits, we have treated of by introducing with some revision all or a large number of the minute details to enforce obedience to the law and the collection of the tax which gentlemen will find in the original bill from which we have taken, having recently prepared them, those provisions. Then on the subject of the tax itself we have agreed, after discussion, to settle down upon a recommendation to the House to make the tax a direct tax on distilled spirits of sixty cents a gallon. In connection with this we have provided that the payment of that tax shall be at the distillery warehouse. We have provided, as gentlemen will find as they follow the sections, that there shall be no removal of spirits from the distillery without the payment of this tax, except in four specific cases which are the only exceptions. That is, it may be removed for direct exportation; it may be removed to be redistilled into alcohol, that alcohol being for exportation; it may be removed for manufacture into medical preparations and compositions, as provided under the present law in section one hundred and sixty-eight, and returned under bond to be exported; and it may be taken out of bond to be used in this country by scientific associations and colleges for the preservation of objects of scientific interest and curiosity. This last is a part of the present law. Gentlemen, perhaps, have not known how much alcohol is used in that way, but I believe some forty or fifty thousand gallons at least were used during the last year. They have used more than twenty thousand gallons at Professor Agassiz's museum alone.

These, then, are the only removals that can take place from the distillery without payment of the tax, and with the exception of one of them, the use of alcohol in scientific institutions, every such removal is connected entirely with the transportation of the article abroad. It may be laid down, therefore, as a general proposition that the tax we propose is sixty cents a gallon paid at the distillery, and no removals can take place from the distillery warehouse to the export warehouse for any other purpose than for exportation. There is to be no removal, as we had at first in the original bill thought of proposing to the House, from an export warehouse for any consumption in this country.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before my colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] leaves this point, I wish he would explain fully the particular reason for adopting the rate of sixty cents per gallon rather than fifty cents, or any other sum. I do not know but there may be some principle involved, which leads him to adopt sixty as the specific number, or perhaps it was merely an arbitrary choice.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no objection to answering that question, although it is perhaps infringing a little upon the right of the Committee of Ways and Means not to expose its action. My own particular reason was this: I had satisfied myself that if the tax was put as low as fifteen cents per gallon it would crowd out this illicit distillation of molasses and prevent general illicit distillation in the country by making it unprofitable; and if seventy-five cents per gallon was not low enough for that purpose, I felt satisfied that some ten or fifteen cents lower in the rate of taxation would merely accomplish that result. For one, therefore, I was willing, if I must fall below seventy-five cents, to go at least as low as sixty cents per gallon.

There may be gentlemen here in the House who are of opinion that we ought to have gone down to fifty or twenty-five cents per gallon in order to stop illicit distillation. Without going now into an argument on that point, I will simply say that comparing all the authorities on the subject, the information obtained from distillers, traders, revenue officers, and persons disconnected with either of those, but having some knowledge of the operation of the former law—putting together the information derived from many hundreds of these persons, with all the communications received upon the subject, amounting to cords of manuscript—this was my general conclusion. I do not know that I can make my answer any clearer. It was not arbitrary; it was not a piece of mere guess-work. It was a decision in which the members of the Committee of Ways and Means could concur; dividing between those who would go lower and those who would have the amount higher. This was a decision in which we all could concur, as one which would be likely to accomplish a great reform and break down the whisky frauds about which we were all so anxious.

But we did not suppose that sixty cents direct tax would be a sufficient burden upon this article that ought to contribute so largely to carry on the operations of the Government. If we therefore put it at sixty cents, lessening the temptation to fraud, bringing under the eye of the law more distinctly, so that it might give microscopic observation, beyond what could be done when there was a broad tax of two dollars per gallon, with all the efforts made to accomplish frauds under a tax of that kind, we thought we ought not to confine temptation to only one point, but should scatter it, so that the temptation being made small at one point, and at another, and another, and another, yet by the aggregate taxes at those points we should make it something on the average like what that article ought to pay.

Leaving the direct tax, then, at sixty cents, we come next to the consideration of what special taxes should be imposed upon distillers, to make up the aggregate contribution toward the wants of the Government. We propose that every distiller who distills fifty barrels or less in a year, shall pay $200 as a special tax, and four dollars as a further special tax upon each barrel above the fifty barrels.

Gentlemen will find that provided for in section sixty-five of this bill. It is the same system which we had introduced in the general bill; but we have modified it in this respect; instead of imposing a special tax of $1,000 upon every distiller who makes two hundred barrels or less a year, we have brought it down from two hundred to fifty barrels or less, so as not to crush out altogether the small distilleries in Kentucky, Tennessee, or elsewhere, where they make few barrels in a year and that of a superior quality. The principle is the same, four dollars per barrel, only the starting point is set lower down.

In the same way we propose that every rectifier who rectifies two hundred barrels or less in the course of a year, shall pay a special tax of $200, and fifty cents additional for each barrel above the two hundred.

We have put a tax of twenty-five dollars upon the compounders of liquors. We have divided retail dealers, those who sell any less quantity than a quart of liquor to be used at the place where sold, and have classified them so according to their sales they shall pay twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, two hundred, or one thousand dollars, upon the principle that the man under the Astor House, New York, or the St. Charles, New Orleans, or elsewhere, who sells $10,000, or even $100,000 of liquors in this way, shall not be left off like the little retail dealer on the cross-roads, who keeps one of the groggeries of the country.

Upon wholesale dealers we have increased the tax on sales. We charge each wholesale dealer $100 to begin with, and then three per cent. upon all his sales above $3,000 per annum.

We charge the manufacturer of stills fifty and twenty dollars for each still or worm that he manufactures, and thus by a specific tax upon him and a special tax upon his trade, we will realize a considerable amount never before obtained from that source.

Mr. INGERSOLL asked a question which was entirely inaudible at the reporter's desk.

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir; we propose a special tax on whisky.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Suppose the wholesale dealer sells for exportation a thousand barrels?

Mr. SCHENCK. If he takes his liquor from the distillery warehouse to the export warehouse, in bond and with all of these securities provided, and sends it out of the country, then of course it escapes tax; but if it leaves the distillery warehouse and becomes free whisky upon the market, it must stand the tax on sales, and all the other taxes.

I must go back and repeat my original explanation. Direct tax is collected at the distillery, and whisky, when it comes from the distillery warehouse, must be taxed, except in those particular instances where it is intended for exportation or preserving specimens in museum jars.

Then we have another system of taxation, which may be called the tax on capacity. On the subject of taxation of capacity we have found where it has been attempted it has always been abandoned where it has been sought to tax the capacity of the stills or tubs themselves; but there has lately been introduced abroad in lieu of that, and which we think may be introduced with advantage at home, a tax according to the number of bushels of grain which can be mashed and fermented at a distillery. We have, therefore, added to these other classes a tax of five dollars a day on every distillery that is capable of mashing and fermenting one hundred bushels each day or less; and whenever a distillery has the capacity for mashing and fermenting fifty or one hundred bushels more, we add three dollars a day for each hundred bushels or fractional parts of a hundred bushels.

We have in the bill, as gentlemen will find, strict provisions. Unless notice is served of their stopping, they are to be taxed as if running all the time. They are by law considered always running unless it is otherwise made to appear.

One thing more. They pay two dollars a day when they do not run as a sort of tax for having a distillery which may be used.

These, then, are the three modes of taxing distilled spirits: by direct tax, all sorts of specific taxes on distillers, rectifiers, manufacturers of stills and worms, and a tax upon the capacity of the distillery to mash and ferment.

As to what amount we can collect under this system of taxation by repeated calculation I cannot make any revenue less, with any due enforcement of the law, from this source than from sixty-five to seventy millions a year.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the tax per gallon on whisky taking all these direct and specific taxes together?

Mr. SCHENCK. It is very difficult to say. The special tax of four dollars per barrel will amount to about ten cents per gallon. We have computed the barrel to contain forty gallons of proof. Then there is sixty cents to be added to that, making seventy cents. Then we cannot tell how much the tax on sales will amount to per gallon, because of the difficulty of applying it to the retail dealer and the difficulty of making the calculation between the price of the liquor and the percentage put upon that price. We have no statistics showing the prices at which the sales are made, but only the aggregate sales. But I suppose some twelve or fifteen cents will be added in that way per gallon. Then if you add the other special tax I presume the whole tax upon the liquor, spread out in this way, will amount to something over a dollar per gallon. It may amount to more, but I put it at what I suppose to be the lowest estimate. I think the aggregate of this tax will exceed a dollar a gallon.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, or rather two questions. In the first place, how, by the system proposed, will you be able to ascertain how many gallons the tax is to be assessed upon? Are you to ascertain it by a meter, or how? In the second place, if the system of the capacity be so good as the gentleman seems to think—and I am glad to know that he entertains that belief—why may it not be a proper mode of assessing the tax altogether? First, how do you propose to ascertain the proper tax and prevent fraud, and second, why may not the capacity system be enlarged so as to cover the whole tax?

Mr. SCHENCK. I will answer the last question first. Our object has been not to make the tax upon any particular branch of production so high as to renew the old tem-tation under which such large frauds have been committed. But while we take care not to make it too low, and yet to make it low enough in regard to each particular mode of taxation, by scattering it over the whole product in all its various stages, this is as low as we could get a combined tax that would produce something like a sufficient revenue.

Now, as to the other question, how we ascertain the quantity of spirits, I wish the gentleman would have saved me the labor of going over several sections by having read the bill itself. He would have found in the first place that we cast around the production of the liquor such safeguards as have never been before placed around it, so as to prevent any of it from escaping from between the worm of the still or the receiving cistern and the distillery warehouse. We do not permit it to go out to the warehouse without the tax being paid, and it is to be proved to be paid by a stamp to be attached to the barrel.

Then for a further security we have provided that in making up the account of what is produced at the distillery there shall be certain calculations always made by the assessor, and every distillery shall be presumed to have produced so much in proportion to the amount of grain or mash that has been used. That is another security, all of which will be better explained if the gentleman will take the trouble to refer to the sections on that subject.

Mr. MYERS. One question further. I have read that part of the bill, and the gentleman is explaining to us what we all may here read. But I want to know whether the system does not provide for meters at the expense of the Government?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir; we have provided that the Government may adopt meters, hydrometers, saccharometers, or whatever may be deemed necessary for the enforcement of the tax, and whatever is adopted shall be at the expense of the Government. We have done that in order to take away what may seem to be a reasonable complaint by distillers of the imposition practiced upon them in having had to deposit a very considerable amount of money and wait till it is determined how much they shall pay for a meter they are required to use. We have also followed out the same principle in regard to storekeepers, as we explained once before to the committee, that they shall be paid by the Government hereafter and not by the distiller; so that, unlike the present whisky inspectors, they shall not be the slaves and bondmen of the distiller himself, but shall be under the direction of the Government, to be removed from place to place like any other officers, and not permitted to grow fast like attachments and fixtures in the distillery, as much belonging to the distiller as any other part of his apparatus.

Now, I have spoken of the mode of payment, which is to be by stamps. The committee, after examining a great number of plans and suggestions, finally provide in their bill for a stamp, and after having determined what kind of stamps should be used they procured the execution up at the Treasury Department of specimens so as to satisfy the House that such a system is practicable. All the stamps are to be put up in this form, [exhibiting a number of stamps bound together in book form.] Every collector who receives such a book is to be charged with the value in money of all the stamps and the stamps attached to them. Here is a book of stamps for forty gallons and a fraction—between forty and fifty gallons. A man has forty-seven gallons of whisky on which he pays tax. You cut off one of the stamps, which is forty gallons, and then seven of the coupons, which are between the stamp and the stamp, and then the forty-seven gallons of whisky exactly are paid for, and the collector is charged with forty-seven gallons for which he is presumed to have received the money, and he is only credited on his return of the book with as many coupons as remain attached to the stamp. We have had a series of experiments performed at the Patent Office by which it is ascertained that these stamps may be put upon a smooth surface of wood with an adhesive substance and covered with a transparent varnish, so as to prevent abrasion or destruction by water, and that engraved stamp will be evidence that the whisky sold has paid the tax. If whisky is found traveling without such evidence of course it is to be presumed to be whisky with the tax unpaid.

Some gentlemen may say here that the committee acted, perhaps, a little partially in this matter as between Mr. Clark, of the Treasury Department, and other persons. I desire to explain that this is not the invention of Mr. Clark, or of any other person; but it is a combination of ideas first agreed upon by the committee before any engraver knew anything whatever about it. Then an engraver was called in to see whether he could execute such a stamp according to the ideas of the committee. This is another portion of the system which may or may not be adopted, depending upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Each of these stamps—the specimens that I now exhibit—has a hole through it and a thin piece of tissue paper upon the back of it, the whole being engraved together, as upon one sheet of paper. It will adhere to the wooden surface of the barrel, so that it is impossible to take the stamp off without tearing the tissue paper and revealing that the stamp has been removed; so that it cannot be transferred from one barrel to another.

These are things which are left, of course, to be carried out in the administration of the law. All that the committee undertook to satisfy themselves of was that such a thing was practicable, and then to provide that those charged with the administration of the law should adopt something of the sort.

Mr. STEWART. Can the gentleman state the number of gallons of whisky now in bond and upon which no tax has been paid?

Mr. SCHENCK. It amounts at this time to between twenty and twenty-five million gallons.

Mr. STEWART. One other question.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is a little over twenty-five million gallons. It has been increasing lately.

Mr. STEWART. If the bill as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means is passed will not the owners of those twenty-five million gallons of whisky have a monopoly of the trade in whisky at a tax of sixty cents a gallon, while that hereafter made will have to pay a tax of a dollar a gallon?

Mr. SCHENCK. We have made a provision in our bill, as the gentleman will see, that every gallon of this whisky shall be taken out of bond, and the tax paid upon it in one hundred days. That settles the matter at once, so far as the payment of the tax upon that whisky is concerned. But there may be some advantage to those men who hold whisky free from this special tax, for that is what I suppose the gentleman refers to.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is a matter, however, which we cannot help. Every change in the law benefits somebody and injures somebody.

Mr. STEWART. Will not this change benefit the whisky ring?

Mr. SCHENCK. It is impossible to do anything with the law without treading upon some one's toes and helping others, though it may not be intended. That was one of the reasons why I was very reluctant to give up the two-dollar tax. I think in many cases there is more harm done by frequent changes of the law than by adhering to the law, though that law may not originally have been the best that might have been enacted. But as we finally determined to change, and come down to a lower rate of taxation, we concluded that we would make the complete change at once. And I know of no way in which we can prevent some persons from getting some benefits, and some persons from suffering some injury, in the transition from one law to another.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would ask the gentleman whether it would not be practicable for the committee to propose amendments by which whisky on hand in bonded warehouses shall be subject to a duty additional to the sixty cents per gallon, which shall substantially meet the requirements of the case?

Mr. SCHENCK. That may possibly be done. But then there is another thing to be considered: there is very little honest tax-paid whisky out of the bonded warehouses now already manufactured; and in the endeavor to do justice to the Government and as between individuals by putting an additional duty upon that which is in bond you would at the same time confer a great benefit upon those who are holding illicit whisky, whisky the tax upon which they have defrauded the Government out of, which whisky is outside of the bonded warehouses.

I do not know that there is any other matter connected with this article of distilled spirits about which gentlemen care to inquire. I will now submit a few words of explanation in relation to the article on tobacco.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time assigned by order of the House for general debate has now expired. The bill will now be read by sections for amendment.

The first section was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits on which the tax prescribed by law, has not been paid, a tax of sixty cents on each and every proofgallon, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or any person having possession thereof; and the tax on such spirits shall be collected on the whole number of gauge or wine gallons when below proof, and shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of proof spirit as defined in this act; and any fractional part of a gallon in excess of the number of gallons in a cask or package, shall be taxed as a gallon. Every proprietor or possessor of a still, distillery, or distilling apparatus, and every person in any manner interested in the use of any such still, distillery, or distilling apparatus, shall be jointly and severally liable for the taxes imposed by law on the distilled spirits produced therefrom and the tax shall be a first lien on the spirits distilled, the distillery used for distilling the same, the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein, and on the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, together with any building thereon, from the time said spirits are distilled until the said tax shall be paid.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move to amend the first clause of this section, which provides for the tax per gallon on distilled spirits, by striking out "sixty cents" and inserting "fifty cents."

Mr. INGERSOLL. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] will consent that the committee now rise.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have occupied so much time in explaining this bill, that I am willing to move that the committee now rise, and I will then submit to the House the question whether they will or will not have night sessions after to-night.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union pursuant to the order of the House had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate having proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the bill entitled "An act to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress," returned to the House of Representatives by the President of the United States with his objections, and sent by the House of Representatives to the Senate with the message of the President returning the bill, have resolved that the bill do pass, two thirds of the Senate agreeing to pass the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. CHURCHILL.

ORDER FOR EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now ask unanimous consent that after to-day and until the tax bill, now in Committee of the Whole, be disposed of, the House shall hold evening sessions, taking a recess daily from half past four until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. HARDING. With the understanding that no other business but the tax bill shall be considered.

The SPEAKER. No other business can be transacted except by unanimous consent.

Mr. KERR. I object.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose indicated.

The rules were suspended; and the order was made accordingly.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the order was made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that that body had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 264) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Covington, in the State of Maryland.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 586) for the relief of Elizabeth Carson, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

CAPTAIN CHARLES N. GOULDING.

Mr. COBB. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee of Claims Senate bill No. 251, for the relief of Captain Charles N. Goulding, late quartermaster of volunteers.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I object.

Then, on motion of Mr. INGERSOLL, (at five o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By the SPEAKER: A remonstrance of R. McKechnie, president, and John Collins, secretary, inclosing resolutions of National Typographical Union, against the proposed copyright law.

By Mr. DONNELLY: A memorial of William L. Banning, D. W. Ingersoll, John L. Merriam, and others, citizens of St. Paul, Minnesota, for the improvement of St. Mary's river and St. Mary's ship-canal; also, a similar memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minnesota.

By Mr. ELIOT: The petition of Richard Borden and others, citizens of Fall River, Massachusetts, praying that the collector of customs at Fall River may have an increase of salary.

By Mr. HUMPHREY: A memorial of the cigar manufacturers and dealers in Buffalo, New York, remonstrating against the increase of the internal revenue tax on cigars.

By Mr. KETCHAM: The petition of Buchanan & Fogg, of New York city, contractors for carrying the United States mail on route No. 6435, asking for increased allowance for such services.

By Mr. LINCOLN: The remonstrance of W. H. Baldwin and others, of Watkins, New York, against an increase of the tax on cigars.

By Mr. PRICE: The petition of 326 citizens of the States of Missouri and Iowa, asking for a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Iowa and State Line railroad.

By Mr. TWICHELL: The petitions of bookbinders and printers of Boston, Massachusetts, representing that the productive interests of the country are suffering and its industry paralyzed for want of protection against the cheaper labor and capital of foreign countries; that customs duties, which were sufficient under a high gold premium to create and foster manufactures, have become inadequate and must shortly prove ruinous; that much of the distress now prevailing would be relieved by the legislation suggested in the report of Special Commissioner Wells, as perfected in the tariff bill passed by the Senate, which failed in the House March, 1867, and praying that Congress will resume consideration of that measure and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 23, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. E. S. TAYLOR, D. D., of Brooklyn, New York.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. YATES presented a memorial of Darnielle & Grout, and others, cigar manufacturers of Alton, Illinois, praying Congress to authorize the use of revenue stamps instead of inspectors' stamps, and to retain the tax on cigars at five dollars per thousand; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWARD. I present the petition of Charles Foster and numerous others, soldiers of the war of 1812, living at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in which they say that the soldiers of the late civil war have been rewarded with a munificence unexampled in the history of nations. They received, in most instances, bounties hitherto unheard of; liberal pay and sufficient clothing from the Government. Cities, counties, and States vied with each other in contributing to their comforts, and the nation did immortal honor to itself in thus rewarding its gallant defenders. But they ask how it is with the soldiers of 1812? They did not receive one cent of bounty; the volunteers provided their uniforms, the officers their side arms, and the militiamen their clothing at their own expense. They were not paid till four or five months, or even a longer period, after the Government alleged they were discharged; whereas the soldiers of the late war were paid when discharged in par money, while those who served in the war of 1812 received depreciated Treasury notes for their services, and the privates only eight dollars per month. They pray, therefore, that the surviving officers and privates of the war of 1812 may receive pensions and be inserted upon the pension-roll. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Pensions, and I venture to call the special attention of the committee to this eloquent memorial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I present the petition of William Notson, M. D., and others, citizens of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, who state that in order to encourage the volunteers and militia to prompt and energetic action, and as an act of justice to the survivors of the war of 1812, all who served in that war, whether as soldiers or sailors, or were actually engaged in action, and the surviving widows of any who have died, or who may hereafter die, should be placed on the pension-roll of the United States, it now being fifty-three years since the termination of the war, while the soldiers who served in the revolutionary war with Great Britain were placed on the pension-roll in 1818, being only thirty-five years after peace was declared. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a petition of B. Wilkins and twenty citizens engaged in the business and commerce on Lake Superior, asking a grant of lands for the extension of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior ship-canal to Keweenaw bay; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented the petition of George C. Hutter, formerly a paymaster in the United States Army, praying to be relieved from the payment of certain money deposited by him in banks in the so-called confederate States, and seized and used by the confederate government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and sailors and the widows of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of Linus Parmelee, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I, in common, I think, with every other Senator here, have received a petition which purports to come from citizens of the county of Philadelphia, residing at Chestnut Hill, in the State of Pennsylvania, which represents what my honorable friend from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] read, and is signed by fifteen or twenty persons, none of whom I know, and none of whom, according to the statement in the petition, are soldiers or widows of soldiers of the war of 1812. I do not know anything as to the authenticity of the petition; but inasmuch as the right of petition is sacred, I will assume that it is authentic, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CATTELL presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the widows of such as have deceased; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and sailors and the widows of soldiers and sailors in the war of 1812, similar in character and place of paternity to those presented by other Senators. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I present a remonstrance of between seventy and eighty non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the Army stationed in this city, setting forth the fact that they have been residents of this city for more than a year, and residents of the fifth ward of the city for more than three months, having no other residence, and no right to vote anywhere else than in the city of Washington; that without a hearing or an opportunity to establish their rights their votes have been denied them at the recent municipal election; and that a bill recently passed by the Senate cuts them off from a proper hearing to establish their right. They therefore present their petition to Congress, that they may have a hearing before this body. I suppose it is proper that their petition should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I move that reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the petition of Anna R. Voorhees, widow of Commodore Philip F. Voorhees, United States Navy, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. POMEROY presented a petition of Joel Hyatt, praying for compensation for property taken for the use of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of Thomas Symmes, praying for an honorable discharge from the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Lizzie R. Smith be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 768) concerning the rights of American citizens in foreign States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SUMNER. At the same time I am directed to report back to the committee a large number of petitions and resolutions of public meetings and State Legislatures, relating to the same subject, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

The committee were so discharged.

Mr. FERRY. I am instructed by the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 580) relating to patents, to report it back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass. I desire to call up this bill for its passage at some time this session at as early a day as possible. I therefore call the attention of Senators to it.

Mr. CORBETT. I offer the following resolution, and ask its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill securing the right to Indians in such manner that they may testify in cases of murder, manslaughter, rape, &c., as between whites and Indians.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire to state that I hold in my hand a letter from an Indian agent in Idaho Territory, setting forth a case of murder wherein an Indian was murdered by a white man, and where the case was tried in the court there twice, and the white man was acquitted in consequence of the Indians not being allowed to testify. I desire to submit the letter with the resolution and call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to the case.

The resolution was adopted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 564) for the relief of Huldigs Cowperthwaite and Enoch H. Vance, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 565) to authorize the Secretary of State to adjust the claim of Gustavus J. Cushman for office rent while commissioner under the reciprocity treaty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 566) to authorize a bridge to be constructed between Boston and East Boston; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and I will simply say to the chairman of the committee that the Legislature of Massachusetts have authorized the construction of a bridge, and this is to see whether Congress will sanction the act. I call his attention to it, without committing myself in any way to the measure.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there be no further morning business I move to take up Senate bill No. 538, relating to the election of Senators. It will pass without any objection, I suppose.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the honorable member permit me to say, before the bill is taken up, that I have received a note from my colleague [Mr. VICKERS] stating that he is very much indisposed, and is detained from the Senate in consequence of it at his residence in Maryland. He hopes to be here in a few days.

The motion of Mr. EDMUNDS was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 538) in addition to an act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress. It provides that whenever any person shall have been elected a Senator in Congress, in the manner provided in the first section of the act to which this is an addition, and shall have died or shall die, or refuse to accept the office, before the commencement of his term of office and during the session of the Legislature by which he shall have been chosen, then the Legislature is to proceed, on the second Tuesday after it shall have notice of such death or refusal, to elect another person Senator in Congress in the manner provided in the first section of the act to which this is an addition.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out in lines five and six the words "or shall die;" in line six to add the letter "d" to the word "refuse;" in line seven to strike out the words "and during the session of," and in line eight to strike out the words "by which he shall have been chosen as aforesaid, then said Legislature;" so as to make the bill read:

That whenever any person shall have been elected a Senator in Congress, in the manner provided in the first section of the act to which this act is an addition, and shall have died or refused to accept said office before the commencement of his term of office, the Legislature shall proceed, on the second Tuesday after it shall have notice of such death or refusal, to elect another person Senator in Congress in the manner provided in the first section of the act to which this act is an addition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not here when the bill was reported by the honorable member from Vermont, and I am not certain that I know what its contents are. I rise, therefore, to ask him whether it takes from the Executive of a State, where a vacancy occurs during the recess of the Legislature, the authority to appoint.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course not.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask that in reference to my own State, as our Legislature meets only biennially.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill is only intended to provide for an omission in the present law; so that if a vacancy happens by the death or declination of the person elected if the Legislature have not yet adjourned they may proceed to elect and fill it. It does not interfere with the executive power of appointment as it now exists.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the reading of the bill as amended.

The bill, as amended, was read.

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest one difficulty in relation to this bill. If the Legislature of the State is not to convene in its regular or adjourned session until after there shall have been a session of Congress, and of the Senate, it would be a very great expense and inconvenience to convene the Legislature expressly to make such an election.

Mr. STEWART. It does not require that.

Mr. DAVIS. It does from the reading of it.

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. It provides that the election shall be made by the Legislature.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. DAVIS. Let us have the bill read again.

The bill, as amended, was read.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator from Kentucky be kind enough to tell me whether there is any precedent or authority under which the Governor can appoint to fill an office of which no person has ever been the incumbent? In other words, if a Senator-elect dies or declines before he receives his office, so that in truth he was never in it, can the Governor fill that vacancy?

Mr. DAVIS. I have not examined that question; but the statement of the Senator does not reach the objection I made at all. I understand this to be the provision of the bill: whenever there is not a Senator in the cases provided for by it, by reason of death or declination of the Senator-elect, then, within a certain time, and a short time after the Legislature shall have received notice of the death or declination, it shall proceed to another election. If the Legislature is not then in session, it must be convened for that purpose according to the requisition of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Allow me to correct my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. DAVIS. I may not comprehend, as I am informed I do not, the provision of the bill. I have been asking for a copy of it, and I cannot get it. If I were to read it probably I could understand it. But that is my comprehension of the meaning and effect of the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole, and if I understand it correctly I think that is a conclusive objection to the measure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Kentucky is entirely mistaken as to the meaning of the bill as amended. It provides that where a Senator-elect shall die or refuse to accept, the Legislature at a certain time after it shall have notice of that fact shall proceed to elect again. Now, I will suggest to him that if such a fact should occur during the recess of the Legislature, the Legislature could not by any possibility have notice until they met. The bill does not call on the Governor to convene an extra session or do anything else. It says that when the Legislature of the State have notice that an office which they have once filled will fail, because the person whom they have elected has declined or died, then they shall go on and elect over again. That is all it provides. It is a mere omission in the present law. It does not require the Legislature to meet, but if they are met and receive notice they shall act.

Mr. DIXON. Will the Senator allow me to suggest an amendment to this bill which possibly may obviate all difficulty?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no difficulty now.

Mr. DIXON. I would insert after the word "Legislature" the words "if in session." That will meet the objection. I understand that now the law does not provide for any new choice in the case of the death or refusal to accept of the person elected. The Senator says the Legislature cannot act unless in session, because they cannot be informed unless in session. Then why not put in the bill the words "if in session?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. The objection to that is that it would make the law, if my friend will pardon me for saying so, appear almost ridiculous on the face of it. The idea of a Legislature, which is a corporate body, which has no existence as a Legislature until it is met in its hall, being spoken of as a Legislature having notice if in session, as if it were possible that it could have notice otherwise, is a species of law-making that I for one would prefer to be excused from going into. The bill is not open to any dispute, when you look into it, now.

Mr. DAVIS. If the amendment is intended to have the meaning just expressed by the honorable Senator from Vermont, it is certainly worded, I think, with a good deal of infelicity. The bill, as amended, provides—

That whenever any person shall have been elected a Senator in Congress—

I should say "to Congress" myself; I would point that out as one of the infelicities of the bill—in the manner provided in the first section of the act to which this act is an addition, and shall have died—

I will confine it to that case—before the commencement of his term of office, the Legislature shall proceed, on the second Tuesday after it shall have notice of such death, to elect another person Senator in Congress.

I understand from the honorable Senator that the Legislature can only be notified when it is in session. If that be his meaning and the meaning of the bill, it might have been much better and more distinctly expressed. Every member of the Legislature, when the Legislature was in recess, might be informed of the death of the Senator-elect, and a question might well be made then whether the Legislature had not been notified of the death of the Senator-elect, and whether, according to the literal provision of this act, the Legislature from some indefinite time, when each and every member of it had been notified through the newspapers of the death, would be required to convene for the purpose of electing another Senator.

I probably do not understand the provision as the honorable Senator who framed the bill intended; but I think it is his fault, and not mine. I do believe that the language is indistinct, vague, and very infelicitous, especially for a gentleman of the acumen and learning of the honorable Senator from Vermont. I thought to have been redrawn, and redrawn in better form. I think the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] ought to have this bill referred back to his committee, and he take up the pen and put it in shape. It certainly is a little obscure and a little difficult to understand in the language in which it reads.

Mr. DIXON. According to the construction of the Senator from Vermont, the bill only provides that the Legislature on receiving notice of the death or refusal to accept shall proceed to a new election, and he says that the Legislature cannot receive such notice unless it is in session at the time. On looking at the bill I think he is right. I do not see how a Legislature can be informed of a vacancy in the office of Senator unless that Legislature is in session. I suppose the object of this bill is to provide for a case which is probably omitted in the first law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it exactly.

Mr. DIXON. I have not examined the law; but it is certainly a great omission if that law has not provided for a second choice at the same identical session of the Legislature. I did not suppose such was the case; but I am told that under the law the Legislature becomes functus officio as to this function immediately upon having chosen a Senator, and cannot, in case of his death or refusal, elect another. This provides for that case, as I understand; and if that is the object the bill is perfectly proper.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the whole purpose.

Mr. DIXON. I do not say that it is not proper in other respects. Now, as to the Legislature receiving notice, some States have one mode of calling a session, and some another. In Connecticut, I think, the Legislature can only be summoned by the Governor unless they themselves provide for it by an adjournment. But I must confess, with that understanding, if that is the meaning of the bill, I see no objection to it, and I do not think it will be necessary to make the amendment that I suggested.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator having charge of this bill to a provision in the original law that acts very inconveniently for the Legislature of my State in its election of a Senator. We have two sessions each year, one for the purpose of organization in the spring, and the other in the winter for legislative business. The Legislature meets and organizes on Tuesday at the spring session, and has always adjourned each year on the following Friday, only using the week for organization preparatory to legislative business in the winter. Now, by the provision of the original law they are required to meet on the second Tuesday after the organization, in the case of an election of a Senator, and recently they were compelled to adjourn over for two weeks, which was very inconvenient for our farmers. They desire to have an effort made to modify that act, so that the election shall be held on the Tuesday after the organization and meeting of the Legislature. Therefore, I suggest to the Senator from Vermont to allow an amendment to be made of this character: that when the Legislature of a State meets and organizes on Tuesday it shall be lawful to elect a Senator the Tuesday following. That would meet our case, and would not interfere, in my judgment, with the regular working of the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my friend from Rhode Island will not offer or insist upon that amendment. This same subject was discussed when the law was passed two years ago, and the very large concurrence of opinions then was that the most satisfactory and feasible method was to adjust it in the way that the law did, on the second Tuesday after the meeting of the Legislature, which would carry it usually about ten or twelve days into the session. It was thought just and right, as a matter of political expediency—and I use the term in its appropriate, and not in its party sense—that members of the Legislature should have an opportunity to consult with each other as to the person whom they would honor by the appointment to represent their State, and therefore that the election ought not to be brought on immediately on the meeting of the Legislature. If you were to have it at an earlier time, say the first Tuesday after the notice, or the first Tuesday after the meeting, it might sometimes happen that it would be the very next day, or even the first Tuesday of the meeting, the very day; so that the more the thing was discussed two years ago the more it seemed proper that the law should be left as it was left in the statute. I know that in the State of Rhode Island it is somewhat inconvenient, but these elections only happen once in six years, and where the Legislature of Rhode Island—as I hope they may continue to do—go through so agreeable an occupation as they have recently in meeting again for the purpose of unanimously returning my friend, I am sure it ought to be rather a jubilee than a burden. I hope my friend will not insist on the amendment.

Mr. DIXON. I beg leave to make one additional suggestion to those I have already made, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Vermont who reported the bill. This bill, it seems, is to provide for an omitted case, where the law provides for an election and the Senator-elect is supposed to have died or to have refused to accept. It strikes me, on a little further reflection, that although that may be called an omitted case, it does not leave the Legislature functus officio by any means. It is a case in which the Congress of the United States, having power to make rules and regulations with regard to the election of Senators, has failed to act at all. It is a case in which no law has been passed. That, I think, on reflection, is the situation of it. A Senator has been elected under a law of Congress in the supposed case. A vacancy occurs. There is no existing law of Congress. What then? Is the Legislature deprived of its power to elect a Senator? It can go on and elect a Senator under its own law and its own regulations, Congress having failed in that case to make a rule or regulation or alter a rule or regulation. I doubt whether Congress has the power to deprive the Legislature of the power to act in such a case as that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree to all that.

Mr. DIXON. Therefore, although I have no objection whatever to this bill, and I do not say that it is not proper, and that it may not be the best way to regulate it, still I do not think there would be an impossibility of action on the part of the Legislature in such a case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree to that entirely. But the same reason which produced the original law ought to produce this completion of it. If the different branches of the Legislature were of different political views, they might be unable to meet but for a regulation which this act of Congress in 1866 was intended to provide, to cause the representatives of the State under the Constitution to meet and elect; and this bill is only a completion of that. I agree to the law that the Senator lays down.

Mr. DIXON. I understand the Senator to say that the Legislature would not be deprived of the power to act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; I say that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. At first I thought this bill was not necessary; but there are one or two cases that may occur, not likely to occur, perhaps, that are not provided for in existing laws, and as I examined the bill in the Committee on the Judiciary I could not see any serious objection to it. There is no danger of the Governor calling the Legislature together to fill a vacancy which he may fill himself. I do not think there is any danger of usurpation in that direction. Therefore, I thought it proper to support the bill, although the occasion for this legislation may not arise very frequently.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

SENATORS FROM ARKANSAS.

Mr. THAYER. I present the credentials of the Senators-elect from the State of Arkansas, Mr. Rice and Mr. McDonald, and ask that they be read, and the oath of office administered to them.

The Chief Clerk read the credentials, as follows:

STATE OF ARKANSAS, to wit:

The General Assembly of this State, assembled under the provision of section two of article five of the constitution as adopted by the convention on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1868, a copy of which is hereto annexed, having on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1868, in pursuance of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress," approved July 25, 1866, chosen Alexander McDonald a Senator of the United States for the term ending on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1871.

Therefore we, John N. Sarber, president pro tempore of the Senate, and John G. Price, Speaker of the House of Representatives, do hereby certify the same to the Senate of the United States.

Given under our hands this 15th day of April, A. D. 1868.

JOHN N. SARBER,
President pro tempore of the Senate.
JOHN G. PRICE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

STATE OF ARKANSAS, to wit:

The General Assembly of the State, assembled under the provisions of section two of article five of the constitution as adopted by the convention on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1868, a copy of which is hereto annexed, having on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1868, in pursuance of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress," approved July 25, 1866, chosen Benjamin F. Rice a Senator of the United States for the term ending on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1873.

Therefore we, John N. Sarber, President pro tempore of the Senate, and John G. Price, Speaker of the House of Representatives, do hereby certify the same to the Senate of the United States.

Given under our hands, this 15th day of April, A. D. 1868.

JOHN N. SARBER,
President Senate pro tempore.
JOHN G. PRICE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those gentlemen will advance to the desk—

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I hold in my hand the credentials of two other gentlemen for the same office of a prior date. I will ask the Clerk to read them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be read if there be no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Before the reading of those credentials I should like to understand from the Senator from Kentucky what was the authority under which the credentials he has now presented were issued? Who are the men? By whom were they selected, and when?

Mr. DAVIS. The credentials upon their face will show that. They have been on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate for two years.

Mr. HOWARD. I suppose the matter rests right here: that the two persons whose names are mentioned in the credentials just presented by the Senator from Kentucky are persons elected under the Johnson Government; under his proclamation of 1865. Is not that the case, I will inquire of the Senator?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the papers, if read, will tell exactly how the fact is, and that will prevent any discussion of the question of their contents between the Senator and myself. I propose that the Clerk shall read them, that the Senate may be possessed of their contents, and I then propose to make a motion.

Mr. HOWARD. Indubitably the fact is as I stated, and therefore I move now to lay those credentials presented by the Senator from Kentucky on the table; and I call for the question.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not a debatable motion. The rule is that when a paper is proposed to be read, if the reading is objected to it can only be ordered by a vote of the Senate; but the motion now is to lay the paper on the table.

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose there is no motion before the Senate except the motion to swear in the Senators whose credentials have been presented by my honorable friend from Nebraska. I move that the credentials which he offers and the credentials which were presented and received by the Senate two years ago, and which are on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, that that committee may report which class of Senators are entitled to be received.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on laying the papers proposed to be read on the table, and the motion is not debatable.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair. If these papers which it is proposed to lay on the table are before the Senate, they are offered, I take it, in connection with the other credentials or as a substitute; and I inquire of the Chair whether, if we lay them on the table, it carries the whole subject on the table or not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot determine that there is any connection between the two sets of papers. The motion, if it prevails, will carry the papers embraced in the motion to the table.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Nebraska moves that these gentlemen be sworn in, and presents the papers on which that act shall be grounded. The Senator from Kentucky offers other papers in connection with these; and now the motion is to lay them on the table. I should have some doubt, it seems to me, if I were in the Chair, if the papers were before the body, as I do not suppose they are, in holding that the motion to lay on the table could prevail without carrying the whole subject.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator from New York will understand that my motion related only to the credentials offered by the Senator from Kentucky, and not to the others which have been read. Now, sir, if my motion to lay on the table is in order, I object to any further debate, and ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I rather think we are entitled to a ruling from the Chair, and to the opinion of the Chair, whether the gentleman objects to it or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York rose to a question of order. That is proper, but it is not debatable.

Mr. CONKLING. I rose for that purpose, and I beg to submit to the Chair a suggestion. In words the motion was of course confined to certain papers, which I submit are not before the Senate, and therefore not the subject of such a motion; but if they are, they are before us in connection with the credentials first presented, and I submit that the effect of the motion would be to carry all the papers on the table. I suggest, however, that the papers to which the motion of the Senator from Michigan applies are not before the Senate at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is impossible for the Chair to determine that there is any connection between these papers. We have not heard them; we do not know what they relate to. The reading of them is objected to. The Senator from Kentucky asks that certain papers be read; that is objected to; and we know nothing about any connection between them and other papers.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a question of order. A motion is made to lay certain papers on the table. Any Senator has a right to have them read to know how to vote on the question of laying on the table. He has a right to ask that the papers may be read so as to inform himself what they are in order to decide how to vote, whether to lay them on the table or not. If Senators will allow the papers to be read I presume I shall then vote for the motion of the Senator from Michigan, but I think we ought to hear the papers read. They are brief.

Mr. POMEROY. It seems to me another question of order might be raised, whether it is proper to read the credentials of men who are dead.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to know how many questions of order are in order.

Mr. POMEROY. I had information which satisfies me, and I think it is a matter of public notoriety, that Mr. Jones is dead, and one of the credentials offered by the Senator from Kentucky relates to Mr. Jones.

Mr. SHERMAN. How do we know whether they are the credentials of Mr. Jones or Mr. Smith until they are read?

Mr. POMEROY. They have been here for two years. It is not the first time that they have been presented to the Senate. Every Senator has heard them read before this.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, it strikes me that there is another question of order that might be raised—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We will decide one question at a time.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Chair indulge me in a single suggestion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We will begin at the beginning, and we will hear no argument until this is decided. Then the Senator can appeal and argue the appeal, but not till the Chair has decided the question.

Mr. HOWE. I have not heard anything to appeal from yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky offers papers and asks that they be read to the Senate. The reading is objected to, and a motion is made to lay those papers on the table without knowing what they are. That is a matter under the control of the Senate, and the rule is that that question is not debatable. The motion, I suppose, is in order. The Senate may lay papers that it knows nothing about on the table for aught I know, if they see fit to do it. The Chair thinks it is in order, and the question is upon the motion to lay on the table, and that is not a debatable question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before I vote on that question I wish to know what papers they are, and therefore I ask that they be read.

Mr. CONNESS. That is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A Senator has the right to call for the reading of the papers before any question is put in regard to them, and they will be read if the Senate see fit to have them read.

Mr. STEWART. I call for the reading of the indorsement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In regard to the reading of papers the rule is that if the reading of any paper is called for and it is objected to it shall be determined by the vote of the Senate. Is there any objection to the reading of these papers?

Mr. CONNESS and others. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the question must be decided by the Senate. The question is: Shall the papers be read?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under our rules this question must be decided without debate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask for the yeas and nays. I want to know whether a Senator has a right to have a paper read before he votes on it. I do not know what these papers are.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 30, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, McCreey, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, and Yates—30.
NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Ferry,

Frelinghuysen, Howard, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Nye, Pomeroy, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Wade, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cameron, Grimes, Norton, Saulsbury, Vickers, and Williams—8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be read.

Mr. CONNESS. Now, Mr. President, before the reading takes place, I desire to inquire of the Secretary of the Senate how the papers, having been upon the files of the Senate and in its custody, came in the possession of the Senator to be presented here again? I ask that question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let them be read first that we may know what they are.

Mr. DAVIS. I will answer the Senator from California.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the question of the Secretary first.

Mr. DAVIS. You have no right to put a question to the Secretary. I make that point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that these papers were delivered to the Senator on his application.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Chair please repeat the statement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I am informed that the papers were delivered to the Senator from Kentucky on his application.

Mr. CONNESS. From the files of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I suppose so.

Mr. DAVIS. That is the fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
LITTLE ROCK, November 26, 1866.

STATE OF ARKANSAS, to wit:

The General Assembly of this State, on the 24th day of November, 1866, having, in pursuance with the Constitution of the United States of America, chosen John T. Jones a Senator of the United States to fill the vacancy in the senatorial term commencing the 4th day of March, A. D. 1865, by the present General Assembly declaring the election of W. D. Snow for that term to be invalid and illegal:

Therefore I, Isaac Murphy, Governor of the State of Arkansas, do hereby certify the same to the Senate of the United States.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State of Arkansas this 26th day of November, 1866.

[L. S.] ISAAC MURPHY,
Governor of Arkansas.
ROBERT J. WHITE,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF ARKANSAS, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
LITTLE ROCK, March 4, 1867.

STATE OF ARKANSAS, to wit:

The General Assembly of this State, on the 21st day of February, 1867, having, in pursuance with the Constitution of the United States of America, chosen Augustus H. Garland a Senator of the United States for six years, commencing on the 4th of March, 1867, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation or non-acceptance of Andrew Hunter, who had previously been elected United States Senator from this State for said term:

Therefore I, Isaac Murphy, Governor of the State of Arkansas, do hereby certify the same to the Senate of the United States.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State of Arkansas this 4th day of March, 1867.

[L. S.] ISAAC MURPHY,
Governor of Arkansas.
ROBERT J. WHITE,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HOWARD. I move that those two papers lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the papers just read do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Those papers are well laid on the table, because they were on the table at the time the motion was made, as the records show. They were presented some time ago, and were then received and laid on the table; and they have been there from that time to this. I move now, Mr. President, that the credentials just read, with the credentials offered by the honorable Senator from Nebraska, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers are on the table at present.

Mr. DAVIS. I move, then, that the credentials presented by the honorable Senator from Nebraska be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for a report. I suppose that that motion is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable.

Mr. DAVIS. These papers carry evidence in favor of two classes of claimants to seats in the Senate. It is a general rule that the older title is the better title. It is a rule in the Senate prima facie. I make the motion to refer the credentials offered by the honorable Senator from Nebraska to the Judiciary Committee, that the committee may have the subject before them, with general power to inquire who are the Senators from the State of Arkansas according to the Constitution; whether those Senators be the gentlemen whose names are expressed in the credentials offered by the honorable Senator from Nebraska, or the gentlemen whose names are expressed in the credentials which I have had read. That is an important question. It is an important constitutional question. It is an important question that enters into the civil history of the country of this day; and I make the motion with a view to have the question in both aspects referred to the Judiciary Committee, that that committee may report upon the case and settle the precedent that should arise properly on the facts now before the Senate. I presume that if that reference be made it will give rise to two reports from that committee, one by the majority and one by the minority. I have my own definite opinion, as no doubt every Senator has his, in relation to the true rule of law and the Constitution that governs this matter. Upon that question I suppose there will be a division among the committee, and probably there will be two reports, one by the majority and one by the minority. The report of the majority, no doubt, would receive the sanction and approval of the Senate, and in conformity to that report these gentlemen would be admitted to their seats in this body; but for myself I have no doubt that the report of the minority of the committee would contain the true principle of the case, and the principle that ought to rule the action of the Senate. It is not with a view to any present action of the Senate on that question that I make the motion, but simply that the Committee on the Judiciary may have the whole subject under its consideration; and if there be, as I have no doubt there would be, diverse views in that committee on this subject, that the diverse views of the committee might have expression in a report made both by the minority and the majority of the committee, and that this double expression of conflicting opinion might be entered upon the archives of the Senate to be a part of the civil history of the country in relation to this subject to be perpetuated in the future.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky seems desirous to continue and expand the controversy which for years past has existed between the Executive of the United States and the Congress of the United States, in respect to the right and power of taking the initiatory steps for the reconstruction of the rebel States. On the other hand, I desire to bring that controversy to a close as soon as practicable, and to give the country rest and quietude in respect to that agitating topic.

He asks to have the credentials presented by the honorable Senator from Nebraska referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, for, as he says, the purpose of enabling that committee to solve the great constitutional question which he presents to the Senate, and upon which he is kind enough to inform us that his opinion has long since been made up. Sir, the Senate and House of Representatives, the law-making power of the United States, long since solved that great constitutional question. They did so when, in the enactment of the reconstruction acts, they declared that all the governments then existing in the rebel States were in their essence illegal governments, as established by Mr. Johnson, and that they could be regarded and should be regarded in no other light than as provisional, until substantial, permanent governments could be inaugurated under the reconstruction laws. We therefore have settled the question that the bogus Legislature of Arkansas, organized under the order of President Johnson in 1865, was not a legal, constitutional government, and we passed a law to enable the people of that State to call a convention, for the purpose of forming a new constitution and electing a new State government, in pursuance of the terms of that act. They have done so, and the gentlemen who now present themselves to the Senate and ask for admission are the persons who were thus duly elected by the Legislature of Arkansas, assembled in pursuance of our own laws; and thus this great constitutional question, so far as it depends upon the power of Congress, is settled; it is fixed and forever at an end, so far as the State of Arkansas is concerned; and all that remains for us to do here is to keep our faith with the people of that State, and to admit Senators properly elected under their new constitution to seats in this body.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I believe the usage has obtained when a Senator has been compelled to vote upon a question without offering a word of explanation of his vote, that he should take the next debatable question that is presented to the Senate to explain his reasons. Availing myself of that privilege, I want to say one word, while this question is pending, in explanation of my vote on the question of reading those credentials.

The Senator from Kentucky offered those credentials and stated that they had been on the files of the Senate some two years. With that statement in my ears I thought I could take judicial notice, if it is proper to use the expression, that they were precisely the credentials which have been read—credentials which were offered here by gentlemen formerly claiming to be elected to the Senate, and which were by the vote of the Senate laid upon the table. I thought, if that was the fact, he had no right to present those credentials here. I supposed he was not rightfully, legally in possession of them. Of course there was no impropriety in the Clerk's delivering them to him, or his taking them, under the usage of the body; but I supposed that the fact of having them in his possession under those circumstances did not authorize him to make any motion upon them or present them to the Senate. The Senate had them in its custody.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to say a word?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. I made no motion in regard to them.

Mr. HOWE. I understood the Senator to move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, with the credentials offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I understood him to make that motion upon those credentials, and I understood him to call for the reading of those credentials. I thought neither of those steps could be taken. I was called upon to vote whether they should be read or not. I thought they ought not to be read, because the Senate never had allowed them to be taken off its table; and yet, by the vote of the Senate, those papers which had once been laid upon the table, without any motion to take them off, have been read here. It is not a very grievous thing to complain of. I only take the opportunity to make this statement in justification of the vote I gave, because I do not think it was a very heinous vote to give under the circumstances.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, before disposing definitely of these credentials I think it somewhat important that we should understand exactly what they are, and adopt a rule that may guide us in regard to similar cases which will be presented doubtless within a few days. I see by the newspapers that the Legislature of Florida has also elected Senators, and Georgia, and North and South Carolina, and Alabama, will all of them elect Senators in a few days, I trust, who will present themselves here. Congress passed a bill, which became a law yesterday, declaring that the State of Arkansas was entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States under the constitution which was formed and adopted by the people recently, within a few months, and to-day the credentials of two gentlemen are presented as having been elected to the Senate by the Legislature of the State of Arkansas. These credentials are certified to by the presiding officers of the two houses of the Legislature of that State. Manifestly this election did not take place under the act of Congress prescribing the time and manner of electing Senators. That act requires the Legislature of a State, on the second Tuesday after it convenes, when there is a vacancy in the office of Senator from that State, or the term of a Senator is about to expire, to proceed in each house separately to vote for a Senator, and to meet on the next day and compare the votes of the two houses together, and if both houses have voted for the same individual that individual is declared to be the Senator-elect from the State; if they have not the two houses then in joint convention they proceed to elect a Senator; and the law further requires that the Governor of the State shall give a certificate which constitutes the credentials, stating the election, and the law specifies the facts to be stated in the certificate. The certificates in these cases are not in compliance with that act of Congress. The Senators were elected, as appears by the certificate, before Congress had passed the act recognizing the State of Arkansas, or the government which has been set up there as entitled to representation in Congress, and they present themselves in the same condition that Senators elected from new States have always presented themselves.

It has been the practice from the foundation of the Government whenever new States were formed from Territories for the Legislature, before the State was formally admitted into the Union, to organize and elect its Senators, and when Congress subsequently recognized the State organization it has been construed to have relation back to the time when the organization took place, and the acts of the Legislature have been held to be valid, and the Senators thus elected, although they were elected by a Legislature not at the time recognized as a Legislature of a State of the Union, have been held to be Senators elected by the Legislature of the State, and have been admitted to their seats. It was, only within a few years, perhaps within two or three years—I have not the act before me, and do not remember its precise date—that Congress legislated at all upon the subject of the election of Senators. Before that time it left each State, through its Legislature, to fix its own time and manner of electing Senators. In some States they were elected by a joint convention of the two houses composing the Legislature; in other States each house acted separately, and it required the joint concurrence of the two houses acting separately to perfect an election. Now, Congress has legislated; but notwithstanding this legislation, which does not apply to a case like the present or to the case of new States, it is, I apprehend, competent for Congress to recognize an election which has taken place, as this one in Arkansas has, before the Legislature was recognized as the legitimate Legislature of the State and without having the certificate which is prescribed by the law under which elections took place in States duly organized. It is certainly competent for the Senate alone to pass upon the qualifications and elections of the members of the body.

Certainly nothing is to be gained by requiring the particular evidence specified in the statute. The object of the statute in requiring the Governor to give a certificate of the election of Senators was to prescribe a mode which should be simple and convenient and easy of execution, and to avoid any controversy as to the evidence; but if the Senate has satisfactory evidence of the election, that is all that is requisite. We have decided that this State government inaugurated in Arkansas is the legitimate State government. We have recognized this Legislature as having authority to elect Senators. It has made that election. I presume nobody doubts that there is sufficient evidence on your table of the election of the gentlemen who have presented themselves here as having been elected; and it is now for us to decide whether we shall receive these gentlemen notwithstanding the act of Congress. I think we may do so; and doubtless we could refuse to do so and compel the Legislature of Arkansas again to go into an election.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would like to ask my friend a question as he is speaking on this subject; and that is what the rule is in relation to this form of election which elects one of these gentlemen to a particular term less than six years, and another to another term less than six years. If it were a case of a vacancy in the representation of a State, of course under the constitution the State Legislature would fill up the vacancy after the Governor had exercised his power, if he had done so. If those States are to be regarded as in the nature of States whose governments were completely disorganized, then the question I wish to put to my friend for his consideration and that of the Senate is whether these Senators ought not to have been elected in general and under the Constitution, which provides the specific manner of ascertaining their terms, shall be classified by lot, or whether we ought not now to go through with the classification as the Constitution requires. That is a question which I wish to suggest for his consideration, and it is a question of considerable practical importance under the Constitution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is a subject to which I had not paid special attention, and I have only given it the reflection which has been within my power since the question has been propounded by the Senator from Vermont; but it seems to me that these Senators are elected properly in that respect. Arkansas was a State of the Union, and the terms of her Senators were fixed when Arkansas was admitted into the Union as commencing at a particular time. The period of six years for which each one serves is a fixed period; and it is no matter whether Arkansas had Senators a portion of this time or not. Suppose that her government had not been disorganized, but for some reason or other she had had no Senators for a dozen years; still the periods would run on, commencing and terminating at a particular point of time, which could be ascertained with certainty by going back to the first drawing of terms by her Senators when the State was admitted. I have not looked to see, but I take it for granted that these persons are elected to fill out terms which have already commenced. Perhaps the term of one Senator will terminate on the 4th of March, 1869, and the other on the 4th of March, 1873. I do not know how that may be in this case; but these are fixed terms, and there being no Senators to fill the terms which expire on those days, and Arkansas having now got into a position that authorizes here to elect Senators, she elects them to fill out those terms which have already commenced to run.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then you claim that these are vacancies in the representation of the State, within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I claim that the term having been once fixed, the persons now elected are elected to fill out those terms which run on, and there is no necessity for the drawing of lots. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. POMEROY] has handed me a list showing that in the case of Arkansas the term of one Senator will expire on the 4th of March, 1871, and of the other on the 4th of March, 1873, so that these terms have gone on in the same manner as if the State had been represented all the time. I think there is no difficulty in that respect, and I see myself no insurmountable difficulty to allowing these Senators to be sworn on the evidence which is presented. It will facilitate the reorganization of these States to allow this to be done. I know of nothing that is to be gained by remitting them back to the same Legislature, to be elected over again in a particular mode, when that mode was not applicable to the case under consideration.

Mr. THAYER. I will state to the Senate that the Legislature of Arkansas did follow the provisions of the law of 1866 regulating the election of Senators in every particular; that is, the election took place in each house on the second Tuesday after the meeting of the Legislature; and the next day the two houses met in joint convention and declared the result. The provisions of the law in that respect were fully complied with. The Senator from Illinois has called attention to the certificate. It is signed, it is true, by the presiding officers of the two houses for the reason that the Legislature did not recognize the old Governor and the new Governor had not taken the oath of office, was not in possession of the office, and was simply Governor-elect. They therefore furnish the next best evidence, the official certificate of the president of the senate and speaker of the house. I suppose what the Senate wants is evidence of the election, evidence sufficient to satisfy the Senate that these gentlemen were duly elected. The provision of the law is that it shall be the duty of the Governor to certify the result of the election. But we can take the next best evidence, and that is furnished. I can hardly conceive that the absence of the Governor's certificate under these circumstances would afford sufficient ground for refusing to administer the oath of office to these gentlemen.

In regard to the reference of these credentials to the Judiciary Committee, I can hardly conceive of any reason for that. The acts of Congress under which these gentlemen appear here have been complied with in every particular, as Congress has declared in the act which became a law yesterday. That act declared that Arkansas, having complied with all the conditions prescribed by Congress, is now entitled to representation. I cannot, therefore, perceive any reason for a reference of these credentials. There are no contestants; no other gentlemen appear here claiming the seats. We cannot recognize any election which took place under the provisional government. We can only recognize the acts done by virtue of the authority of Congress as conveyed in the laws it passed, and the bill which became a law yesterday. I hope, therefore, no further objection will be made to these Senators being sworn in.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, the real questions that arise upon an objection to these credentials were, in my judgment, settled by the passage of the bill of yesterday. It is known to the Senate that I do not believe in the right of Congress to establish State governments; but as this is the first of the States that has presented claims for admission in the Senate under what is called the reconstruction policy, it seems to me that the Senate should take the most liberal action possible. But I think these credentials should go to the proper committee. Other States will be here very soon asking that their Senators be received; and although most of the questions are concluded by the action of the Senate in passing the bill, or will be when the omnibus bill shall have passed, yet as these elections are likely to take place in a very irregular manner the credentials ought to be examined by the proper committee. Upon that ground I shall vote for the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky, not to delay the admission of these gentlemen to their seats, but for the purpose of seeing that the election has been so far regular at least that we ought to recognize it, and to see that the evidence is satisfactory.

In this case, we have not the ordinary evidence that comes to the Senate. There is not a certificate here from the chief executive officer of the State under the seal of the State, but the separate certificates of the presiding officers of the two branches of the Legislature.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A general certificate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well; it amounts to a separate certificate. It is the joint certificate of the two, each certifying, I suppose under the act of Congress, the action of his body. If this election took place according to the law regulating the election of Senators, this is the separate certificate of the two presiding officers, because the president of the senate could not know officially what took place in the house, nor could the speaker of the house know officially what took place in the senate, and if they united in the certificate it amounts simply to a certificate each for his own body.

The question suggested by the Senator from Illinois, in my judgment, is an important one. How far the Senate is now bound by the law is worthy of very careful consideration. In the absence of law on the subject, the Senate may admit under its general constitutional power such persons as Senators as they deem to have been properly elected; but as Congress has prescribed the mode of an election, it is worthy of very deliberate consideration how far each branch is bound by that law. I understand from the Senator from Illinois that this election did not take place according to the law, but in some irregular manner.

Mr. THAYER. Oh, no; it was in exact accordance with the law.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Nebraska says that it did take place exactly in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I meant to be understood as saying that it did not take place in accordance with the law, the Legislature at that time not being recognized by Congress as a Legislature. It could not, of course, act in accordance with the law until there was a State government in Arkansas authorized to elect Senators, and there was no State government in Arkansas authorized to elect Senators at the time this election took place. The act of Congress recognizing that State organization is of a subsequent date, and of course it could not, therefore, be in strict compliance with the law. But I proceeded to say that I supposed the action of Congress subsequently might have relation back, so as to make valid what then took place. I understand from the Senator from Nebraska that the form of proceeding was in accordance with that prescribed by that act of Congress.

Mr. THAYER. Yes, sir; that is what I meant to say.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no special feeling about this matter. I think it is safe to make this reference, as this is the first of these States coming in under the reconstruction acts, not only that the evidence of the election may be examined, but any other question that the Committee on the Judiciary think properly arises.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the credentials should be referred, but I rise for the purpose of expressing an opinion which I entertain, subject to correction if I am in error; and that is that the authentication of the credentials is sufficient. It is a subject that I had occasion to consider when it was thought to be possible that a difficulty might arise in my own State. At one time it was believed that, in consequence of a failure to elect a Senator from Maryland strictly in accordance with law, the Governor of the State could decline to give his certificate. I was consulted at that time, and came to the conclusion, in which I had entire confidence, that if he did refuse to give his certificate and the election should turn out to have been according to law, the Senate would consider the credentials sufficiently authenticated if they were signed by the presiding officers of the two houses.

But, for the reasons stated by my friend from Indiana, I think it very advisable that these credentials should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, that some general rule may be established by which all subsequent difficulties may be averted. It is true that in one sense the election was not held in this instance according to the act of Congress for the reason stated by the honorable member from Illinois, that there was no Legislature in existence recognized by Congress as the Legislature of the State. But that has often occurred. In some instances there have been enabling acts, constitutions have been framed and adopted by the people, and Senators have been elected by the Legislatures before the States were admitted into the Union; but when they were admitted into the Union the Senators were received. Even in the case of California, which became a State without any enabling act, the Senators elected in advance of her admission were received.

In relation to the first point, it appeared to me that the provision that the Governor was to authenticate the credentials was merely directory, and could be dispensed with in all cases where it was found impossible that that should be done, either because the Governor declined to sign them, or because there was no Governor in office.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I understand a question is raised in regard to the authentication of these credentials, as to the evidence of this election. It is not necessary that these credentials should set forth that the election took place in the precise form marked out by the statute. The credential that I hold in my hand declares that the election was held in pursuance of the act of Congress of 1866, specifying the act. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, shall we not presume, this statement being uncontradicted, that the election was held in the very form prescribed by that act? Is it necessary that it should go on and say that the two houses met and did thus and so, and afterward met together to consider the question of an election? That is all embraced in the general declaration that the election was held in pursuance of the act of Congress.

These credentials are signed, not by the Governor, but by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives. Is not that all the evidence that is necessary? You have not made the certificate of the Governor necessary. The act of Congress does not do so. It goes on to state how this election shall be held, and the concluding section of the act reads as follows:

"That it shall be the duty of the Governor of the State from which any Senator shall have been chosen as aforesaid to certify his election under the seal of the State to the President of the Senate of the United States, which certificate shall be countersigned by the secretary of State of the State."

It shall be the duty of the Governor to make the certificate; but you cannot compel him to perform that duty. He is a State officer. His certificate is not indispensable. If there is other evidence which satisfies the Senate that the election was held in pursuance of the act of Congress of 1866, that is enough. Suppose the Governor refused to make the certificate altogether. He has failed in this case from some cause; it is not important to inquire what that cause was. Suppose he refused to make it. He is a State officer, and you cannot compel him to make it. You cannot punish him for not making it. If he refuses to make it that does not invalidate the election. If evidence is produced which is satisfactory to the Senate that the election was held in pursuance of the act of Congress, that is enough. If the Governor makes the certificate, that is conclusive. Congress need not go behind that. But suppose he refuses to do it, what are you to do? Does the election fall to the ground? You cannot force him to do it. You cannot compel him by a mandamus or by any other authority to make the certificate. But, sir, he has not got the power in his hands to defeat an election. If the evidence is satisfactory that the act of Congress has been complied with, that these men were elected in the way pointed out by that act, it is all that ought to be required. I do not care whether the Governor failed to make the certificate because of accident or sickness, or because he refused to make it; it is not important, it is not indispensable to the election. The question is:

was the election held in accordance with the act of Congress, and if it was, whatever satisfies the Senate on that subject is sufficient.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will my colleague allow me one moment?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If he understands me as saying that the certificate of the Governor is essential to the right of the party to his office he misunderstands me. It is the election which gives the man a right to his office, and the certificate is but evidence of the election. But as the law prescribes the character of the evidence that shall be furnished, in the absence of such evidence ought not the evidence presented to be examined by a committee? That is all I undertake to say.

Mr. MORTON. If there was any doubt about it, it might be proper to do so. The certificate of the Governor is not here, but the certificate of the two presiding officers is here. The Senator will admit that the certificate of the Governor is not indispensable. The absence of it does not defeat the election. It is simply a question, after all, whether there is satisfactory evidence before the Senate that these men were elected in pursuance of the act of Congress. The speaker of the house and the president of the senate say they were. Does anybody doubt that this certificate is true? There is no doubt entertained by anybody here on that subject. Therefore, a reference to a committee is a mere matter of form, which can do no good to anybody, and only accomplishes delay. For that reason I object to the reference. This great work has suffered many delays. This act is the consummation of a work that has been going on for a year and a half, or nearly so. It is time it was ended. Here is evidence that leaves no doubt upon the mind of any Senator here. There is no question about the fact. These men have been elected in pursuance of the act of Congress. Why not let them be sworn at once?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, a motion was made to admit two gentlemen as Senators from the State of Arkansas. Their credentials were presented, and it was proposed that they should take the oath required by the Constitution and the law. I thought that it was not regular, but against the right and truth of the case that those two men should be admitted to seats in the Senate. I therefore made a question upon that right, as it was my prerogative to do. They are the first of a series of Senators who are to be introduced under the reconstruction laws, and I conceived that it was an important action on the part of the Senate to admit them; and as I believed that they were not entitled to admission I decided to make the question at least, and I made it in the form of moving that the credentials of these gentlemen be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I had applied to the Secretary of the Senate at his office before to see these credentials, to know in what form they had been made; but they were not on file, and the objections which now come up on their face and in the form of the election I did not know of, as the credentials were not with the Secretary and I had no opportunity of examining them. Upon my motion to have their credentials referred I was using the credentials of other men, previously made out in their favor, as a part of my remarks, and it was only in that form, as a part of the remarks that I intended to make upon the case, that I asked to have them read by the Clerk. I supposed that if the credentials of the men who are now presented are referred to the committee the other credentials and all other testimony bearing upon any questions in the case of course would go before that committee. In making the motion, it was my intention and my purpose to bring as far as I could before the Senate and the committee, if the question should be referred to the committee, all the testimony bearing properly upon any question arising in the case.

Now, Mr. President, it turns up, after the debate has commenced, by the admission of the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that the election of these Senators took place before (according to the principle of the majority of the Senate) the Legislature of Arkansas was a constitutional and legal Legislature. I understand that position to be conceded, that this body, calling itself the Legislature of Arkansas, got together and proceeded to make an election by which these two gentlemen were selected as Senators from that State to the United States Senate, when, according to the principle of the majority of the Senate, there was no such thing in existence as a constitutional and legitimate Legislature of the State of Arkansas. It is conceded that the election took place by a body that was not authorized to make it, which, according to the principle of the gentleman, had no legitimate power to make it; and yet, as Congress yesterday passed a law declaring that Arkansas was entitled as a State in the Union to be admitted to representation in both Houses of Congress, it is contended that Congress should therefore sanctify and make valid this informal and void election of Senators from that State. It is a singular position, to say the least, that an election which had no validity, which was unauthorized by the Constitution and the laws, and therefore utterly void, can be made good and valid by the action of Congress. I ask, under that state of fact and of principle, who would make the election of these Senators, the Legislature of Arkansas or the Senate of the United States?

Mr. MORTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky one question. I ask him if it is not consistent with the whole practice of the Government in the admission of States? Territories are formed as States, but, before they are admitted, I ask him if their Legislatures do not elect Senators at a time when they are not Legislatures of States, but only in embryo; and whether such elections are not ratified and made valid by relation back when the State is subsequently admitted? Has not that been the practice of the Government from the very beginning?

Mr. DAVIS. I concede that; and upon this principle: that the people of the State had formed the State before it was admitted into the Union, and that the only action of Congress was to admit a State into the Union that had been previously formed by the people of that State.

Mr. MORTON. I ask if it was not still a Territory until it was actually admitted? If it was a State and to be regarded as a State for a moment until its actual admission?

Mr. DAVIS. I say not, in response to the honorable Senator. The State would exist in an organized form at the time of its admission as a State into the Union by Congress. Congress has no right to form a State. Congress has no constitutional power whatever to make a State or to form a State. The people make the State, form the State, and frame its State government; and after all this work is done the simple, isolated act which the Congress does is to admit the State, as it has been formed, into the Union as one of the United States.

According to the theory of the honorable gentlemen who constitute the majority of the Senate Arkansas was not a State in the Union, and not a State at all, at the time the election of these Senators took place, as I understand. Assuming their principle to be true, that Arkansas was not a State, then her Legislature was not a legitimate, valid Legislature of the State of Arkansas. It certainly then had no power to elect a Senator, or to give that election such validity as that when Congress should pass a law declaring that Arkansas should be entitled to representation in the Senate and House it would sanctify that election made by a body that was not a Legislature at all. Sir, this is a grave question. It is certainly of such a character as merits a reference to the Judiciary Committee, that that committee may consider it and report upon it to the Senate.

One word with regard to the other objection, which has been conceded to exist, to the admission of these Senators. Congress has passed a law which requires a particular form of evidence of the fact of the election of a Senator. That form of evidence, in one of its important requisites, in the present case is defective. The Governor of that State has not attached the certificate which the law requires to the credentials of these elected Senators. Will Congress, in the absence of that essential part of the proof, admit them without a reference of their credentials and their case to the Judiciary Committee? There may, or may not, exist a sufficient cause for the absence of that feature in the proof. If there is a sufficient cause for its absence, and it may be dispensed with, the facts upon which it may be dispensed with are certainly proper for the consideration and report of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. President, I was impelled to make objection to the admission of these Senators upon the ground that I previously stated. I do not believe that they have any constitutional claim or right whatever to seats as Senators from the State of Arkansas; and to meet their right, and to compete with it, I endeavored to have thrown before the Senate the legitimate and exactly legal returns or commissions of previous Senators from that State, whose terms of service, as evidenced on the face of the credentials, have not yet expired. I believed, as I now believe, that the right of the men who held the previous credentials was not only the paramount right, but the only right to a claim of seats upon this floor as Senators, and that consequently the two gentlemen who are presented this morning have no right whatever to seats in the Senate.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] says that that question has been settled, and that I am seeking to revive the controversy between the President and Congress as to which of those two powers of the Government should reconstruct these States. Sir, I have always denied that either of those powers of the Government had any right to pass reconstruction laws. I concede no such principle as that. I have always combated that principle, that power, that right on the part of the President or Congress either to reconstruct or to prescribe terms for the reconstruction of the States that were in the rebellion. My principle has been, as has often been expressed to the Senate, that when the rebellion was subdued, crushed, and the people of those States that were in rebellion made their submission to the United States Government, the Constitution itself, by its own principles and its own operation and effect, restored them to the Union and enabled them to claim all their rights in the Government as States of the United States.

But the honorable Senator says that that question has been settled; that it has been adjudged by the Senate and House of Representatives. I tell the honorable Senator that there is an appeal pending before the American people from that judgment, and in my opinion that judgment will be swept away, and will, before twelve months, exist as naught, as nothing. But that is a question of opinion between the honorable Senator and myself.

I have explained the considerations that moved me in making my objection, and I have stated my opinion in relation to the matter, and the grounds upon which, generally, it was formed, and I therefore leave the case.

Mr. POMEROY. The question I believe is, whether these credentials shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I move to lay that question on the table.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That will dispose of the whole subject.

Mr. POMEROY. I understand that that will lay the credentials on the table, where they should be, and then we can proceed to swear in the Senators-elect.

Mr. CONNESS. I understand the discussion to be at an end, and I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion, and let us vote.

Mr. POMEROY. I will withdraw it if no more speeches are to be made; but it is now after two o'clock, and we have been discussing a question which has been discussed here ever since I have been in the Senate about the power of these States to organize governments. If that question is to be discussed on the presentation of credentials and on a motion to refer credentials I think the subject should be laid on the table. I do not want to cut off any person who desires a moment to reply; and if the Senator from Michigan wishes to do so, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. HOWARD. I have but one word to say in reply. I do not propose to attempt to answer the honorable Senator from Kentucky upon the constitutional question which he has raised. I am quite content with the decision which has been made of that great question; and I am equally confident with himself that upon the trial of that question again before the great court of appeal which he seems to invoke the decision will be as decidedly adverse to him and his party as it has been in Congress.

I wish, however, to say one word in regard to the act of 1866, which is appealed to here by the gentlemen opposing the admission of these Senators, and as to which it is said that the credentials on the table are not in conformity with the provisions of that act. Now, sir, what was the date of that act? It was passed in July, 1866. At the time that act was passed the rebel States were still in their anomalous condition. They had no regular governments. They were held by the authorities of the United States by virtue of the triumph of our arms; and the very text of that act, when carefully considered, will be found not to be applicable to the States in that particular condition. I do not regard the act of 1866 as applicable by its terms or by its spirit to the readmission into Congress of the rebel States. It was not expected to apply to them, because in many of its provisions it was utterly impossible to apply it.

Then, again, eight months afterward, in March, 1867, Congress passed what is known as the first reconstruction act. That act and its supplements declare in substance that when the rebel States shall have complied with the terms contained in those acts the States shall be declared entitled to representation, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom as therein provided; that is, as provided in the State constitutions which the respective rebel States may have formed. We are not bound by the act of 1866 in regard to the credentials of Senators from those States; but we are simply thrown back upon our constitutional authority to judge of the qualifications of the persons elected, and of the sufficiency of their credentials. When Senators look at the act of 1866, it will be obvious enough to any one, I think, that it is impossible to apply the terms of that act to the rebel States. It was never supposed that it would be so applied. But in regard to the readmission of the rebel States we are governed exclusively and solely by the reconstruction acts and by our naked, constitutional authority. Therefore, supposing as I do, that these credentials are truthful upon their face, and that these gentlemen have been elected by the Legislature of that State altogether in pursuance of the reconstruction acts, I think they are entitled to their seats, and I am therefore opposed to the reference of the question to the Judiciary Committee, and am in favor of their being immediately sworn in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on referring the credentials to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now moved that the Senators-elect be sworn in.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senators-elect from Arkansas will advance to the Chair and take the necessary oaths.

The Senators from Arkansas, Messrs. McDONALD and RICE, escorted by Mr. POMEROY and Mr. THAYER, advanced to the desk, and having taken the oaths prescribed by the Constitution and the act of July 2, 1862, took their seats in the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 822) granting a pension to Hampton Thompson.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 292) directing the Secretary of War to sell damaged or unserviceable arms, ordnance and ordnance stores, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 216) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon," with amendments, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CORBETT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 1073) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 216) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon." The amendments were in line ten, to strike out the words "two years" and to insert "eighteen months, and in line twelve, to strike out "three years" and to insert "two years."

Mr. CORBETT. I move that the Senate concur in those amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE OF DAMAGED ORDNANCE.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 292) directing the Secretary of War to sell damaged or unserviceable arms, ordnance, and ordnance stores, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WILSON. As that is a joint resolution of but a few lines, I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution at this time. Is there any objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear what it is first. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, which is a direction to the Secretary of War to cause to be sold, after offer at public sale, on thirty days' notice, in such manner and at such time and place, at public or private sale, as he may deem most advantageous to the public interest, the old cannon, arms, and other ordnance stores in possession of the War Department which are damaged or otherwise unsuitable for the United States military service or for the militia of the United States, and to cause the net proceeds of such sales, after paying all proper expenses of sale and transportation to the place of sale, to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that resolution had better be referred. I think I can suggest to my friend an amendment that it clearly requires. It raises just such a question as we have repeatedly considered here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution can only be considered at the present time by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 28th ultimo, correspondence relating to the act of Congress prohibiting persons in the diplomatic service from wearing uniforms or official costumes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. CONNESS. I offered a resolution yesterday to discharge the Committee on Foreign Relations from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 768) concerning the rights of American citizens in foreign States. As that bill has been reported by the committee this morning I desire to withdraw the resolution. The committee having reported the bill, and I having no object in view but to get the early consideration of the Senate to the bill, I now ask leave of the Senate to withdraw the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is withdrawn.

PRINTING OF A PETITION.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I presented a petition this morning of certain voters of this District, which I desired to have printed. I intended to make the motion at the time I presented it; but I forgot to do so. I now ask that the petition be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be entered, if there be no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 216) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon."

A bill (H. R. No. 822) granting a pension to Hampton Thompson; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 264) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Covington, in the State of Maryland.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is now before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1869, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SUMNER to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations. The amendment of the committee was to insert after line three hundred and fifty-two, following the appropriation for the compensation of the officers of the State Department, the following proviso:

Provided, That the third section of the act of August 18, 1856, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act requiring foreign regulations of commerce to be laid annually before Congress,' approved August 16, 1842, and for other purposes," and also that the second section of the act of July 25, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment of Mr. SUMNER was to strike out of the amendment of the committee the following words:

And also that the second section of the act of July 25, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes."

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know that it is advisable to protract this discussion; and yet there were some remarks that were made at the close of the debate yesterday to which I should like for one moment to reply. I have nothing to say with regard to the first part of the amendment of the committee relating to the clerkship of statistics in the State Department. I leave that in the hands of the Senate. If the Senate think it advisable now to stop that appropriation and to destroy that little office I shall interpose no serious objection. I do not think it advisable to make the change at this moment. I would not recommend it myself until there was a systematic effort to establish a statistical bureau in the Treasury Department to which this might be transferred. But this may be abandoned without any serious detriment to the public business. The State Department will not suffer. Therefore, I shall say no more about it.

But when we come to the two other offices, the examiner of claims and the Second Assistant Secretary of State, there I have to say that the proposed change cannot be made without serious detriment to the public service. The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] seems to have a very inadequate idea of the services rendered by the examiner of claims. Since his remarks yesterday I have made further inquiry with regard to those services, and all the testimony that I can obtain is that they are of great importance to the public interests. Indeed, I doubt if the business at the State Department, or much of it in which our fellow-citizens are interested, could move easily and smoothly without some such office as that. That office was created after a discussion running over two or three years, in which many Senators took part. I did not myself vote for it, or come into its support in any way, except after the most careful inquiry. I satisfied myself two years before that office was created that it ought to be created; that there was need of such an office in the Department of State. Finally it was created; and now I understand the Senator from New York to ask for evidence of the importance or of the necessity of that office? What evidence would he have? He has the testimony of the Committee on Foreign Relations, charged with the special consideration of this question. I believe they were unanimous originally in the recommendation made two or three years ago, and they are now unanimous in thinking it expedient that the office should be preserved. What more would the Senator have? If I might venture my own personal testimony I do not know that it would be any reinforcement to that of the committee, and yet circumstances have given me some opportunities of knowing the course of business there and the important duties discharged by this officer. I consider him essential to the business of the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Tell us a little of the details of what he does. I do not understand it.

Mr. SUMNER. Since the war and during the war there was a large number of claims against our Government much beyond what had ever been at any time before, so large in number, so extensive in amount, so important to the claimants that they required very great attention.

Mr. HOWE. Where did they come from?

Mr. SUMNER. From every source, North, East, West, and South, growing out of the war, growing out of the action of British cruisers, growing out of the enforcement of the rights of war, claims upon our Government, claims of our own citizens directly on our Government, other claims of our citizens on foreign Governments.

Mr. HOWE. By what law does the State Department take jurisdiction of those claims on our Government?

Mr. SUMNER. They are claims that arise under the office of the Department of State. However, those are very small; I merely allude to them. The great body of our claims grow out of our relations with foreign Powers.

Mr. HOWE. I wish the Senator would explain a little of the nature of those claims, and how the Department gets jurisdiction of them to adjust them.

Mr. SUMNER. I am not aware that the State Department has undertaken to adjust them.

Mr. HOWE. Then what are the duties of this officer?

Mr. SUMNER. To make reports to the Secretary of State on all these claims as they are presented from time to time, day by day, and then they are presented to Congress. There are two or three bills that I have reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations within a short time founded on these very inquiries; one growing out of a claim under the mixed commission of the United States and Peru that sat two years ago; another, a claim of a colored person in the island of Nassau, who rendered important assistance to one of our cruisers through which a prize was captured of some seventy thousand dollars in value. That was presented to the State Department.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then there are the claims also to carry out the decrees of the United States courts.

Mr. SUMNER. Then there were another class of claims to which the Senator from Maine calls attention, with regard to which there are two or three bills now on the Calendar, in order to carry out decrees of the Supreme Court of the United States, the district court at New York, and the district court at New Orleans.

Mr. HOWE. They are sent here.

Mr. SUMNER. Not at all. They are sent to the Department of State, and by the Secretary of State they are referred to the examiner of claims, who makes a report on the facts that the Secretary may be able to judge what he shall do with regard to them. It is to this officer that complicated papers of all kinds and inquiries are referred by the Secretary. Take these very questions of naturalization; take the case of Father McMahon and the case of John Lynch: I find that going through the papers that all the papers relating to those two cases went through the hands of this examiner of claims, who made an abstract of the papers and a report upon them.

Mr. HOWE. Who is he?

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. E. Peshine Smith, of New York. I believe the services are of great value; I think the business of the Department would halt without such a person there.

But the Senator from New York told us that this gentleman was about to leave. Of that he has, I am inclined to think, exclusive information. At any rate, I have never heard of it before; and on inquiry this morning of the person who ought to be best informed I found that he had no such information. But whether he is about to leave or not is a matter of indifference. The office should be preserved. If he leaves, then I trust we shall find some person who will be a proper successor.

And this brings me to the other case, of the Second Assistant Secretary of State. I need hardly add anything to what was said yesterday so well by different Senators. It is within the knowledge of all that this office was created for Mr. Hunter, believing that it would furnish a field for the exercise of his talents and of his peculiar experience, and also that he deserved this promotion. It surely was not a very large promotion for one who had at that time given nearly forty years of his life to the public service; but it would be very hard at this time to deprive him of this rather small promotion, where I am sure he is rendering efficient service to the country.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] reminded me yesterday that in other countries there were usually two Assistant Secretaries of State, or Assistant Secretaries of Foreign Affairs. This is particularly the case in England. One of those goes out with the administration; the other remains to continue, if I may so express myself, the traditions of the office. He is not regarded as a political character, and he holds under all administrations one after the other. I think that in the conduct of our public affairs there is some reason why such an officer should exist among us. I think he may be useful; and I hope now we may set an example of that stability in the Department of State that will make this office permanent; so that amid all the vicissitudes of politics this Second Assistant Secretary may remain undisturbed. The First Assistant Secretary would naturally give up his office with the administration. He is always supposed to be in peculiar personal and political relations with the Secretary of State, and of course he would share the fortunes of that functionary. But it need not be so with the Second Assistant Secretary; and, indeed, I think for the public interests it should not be so.

If I add to these remarks something of what I said yesterday, that in all other departments of the Government, though there may not be by name two assistant secretaries, there are officers who in the service they render are practically assistant secretaries of the department, I shall complete, I think, the argument for retaining this office.

Mr. HOWE. If this amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts could be so modified as to save so much of the section which the amendment of the committee proposes to repeal as provides for a Second Assistant Secretary of State, and would still rid us of the employment of this clerk of claims, I should apply to my chief, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for leave to support the amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have drawn up an amendment for that purpose, and if the Senator will allow me I will offer the amendment.

Mr. HOWE. Certainly, if it is in order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I offer the following amendment—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two amendments pending now.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I propose to amend the matter proposed to be stricken out, and it is in order to perfect it before it is stricken out.

Mr. HOWARD. Let it be read, that we may see what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment of Mr. HENDRICKS, which was to insert after the word "that," in line three hundred and fifty-seven, the words "so much of," and after the word "purposes," in line three hundred and sixty-two, to insert the words "as authorizes the appointment of an examiner of claims for the Department of State;" so that the latter portion of the proviso would read:

And also that so much of the second section of the act of July 25, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes," as authorizes the appointment of an examiner of claims for the Department of State, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator will allow me, I will explain the effect of that proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin give way for an explanation?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; but I think I understand it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The same section provides for the Second Assistant Secretary of State that provides for this examiner. My amendment proposes to strike out so much of that section as authorizes the appointment of that examiner of claims. I have not any thought that that office is of any consequence at all to the public service, and therefore I wish to strike it out.

Nor do I believe in the doctrine of the Senator from Massachusetts, that there are any such dark places in the Departments as that a man of ability cannot master their duties in a very short time. I believe anybody with force of character, intelligence, and education can go into that Department and understand all about it in a reasonable time. I do not believe in the idea that all the wisdom of the age and all the efficiency of the public service are going to pass away with Mr. Hunter. But, sir, Congress, after careful and full debate a year or two ago, decided upon this office for the express purpose of making provision for him; and I know no reason now for reversing that action.

We decided then to provide this office for him. That was a thing decided, and I am in favor of letting it stand decided.

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me to suggest that Congress at the same time, in the same section, gave the same decision with regard to the examiner of claims, and after a most careful inquiry. The Senator says he does not believe the office is necessary. If that Senator would tell me that he had taken the trouble to inquire into the business of the Department, and on inquiry had satisfied himself that this office was not necessary, I should be willing to accept his judgment; but he will pardon me if I say that I do not think that on this question the divination of the Senator can be set against the knowledge and testimony of others who have made themselves acquainted with it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This much I do know, that when there is a Bureau of Statistics in one Department we do not need another. All this information ought to go there.

Mr. SUMNER. I say nothing about the Bureau of Statistics. The question now is as to the examiner of claims. You observe, under this amendment of the committee, there are three different offices that are touched; one is the clerkship of statistics, then there is the examiner of claims, then the Second Assistant Secretary of State. I say nothing about the clerkship of statistics, because if the Senate choose to sacrifice that I say it can be done without detriment to the public service; but I do not think that you can sacrifice either of the other offices without mischief.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator has called in question my knowledge of the labors of this gentleman. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he has made any report of his labors, whether it has been communicated to Congress, and whether, indeed, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations himself knows anything about them? Of course I have not gone into his office and sat beside his desk. I do not know personally by observation what he has done. I will ask the Senator whether he has made that sort of observation, or whether there is any public report of his labors which enables us to know anything about them?

Mr. SUMNER. I answer frankly and fully to the Senator that I have, to the best of my ability, made that inquiry. My inquiry and observation have extended now over two or three years.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator what the labors have resulted in?

Mr. SUMNER. They have resulted in facilitating immensely the business of the State Department.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is very general. What have they done?

Mr. SUMNER. We will take the claims on England for spoliation on our commerce. Those have all been presented to the State Department.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The old French spoliation claims?

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, no; the English, the Alabama claims, the Shenandoah claims, the Stonewall claims, growing out of depredations on our commerce during the rebellion. Those claims, as the Senator is aware, are multitudinous. Their name is legion. They have been presented, on the invitation of the Department of State, to that Department. It has been the duty of this examiner to arrange them and put them in condition for action. They have been made the basis, as the Senator is aware, of an extensive correspondence with the British Government, part of which has been communicated to Congress, and some of it is still uncommunicated. That is one very considerable item of his duties; and beyond that, as I am informed, whenever an inquiry occurs which does not properly belong to one of the clerks of the Department, out of the ordinary run, it is committed to this examiner of claims; and, as I have already said, I have had occasion, within twenty-four hours, to read his report on the evidence in the case of Father McMahon, and also of John Lynch, who were proceeded against in Canada.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was not aware that those cases fell under the description of claims.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator is aware that I said that inquiries which did not properly belong to any clerk were, by the Secretary of State, handed to him. But then I do not wish to be carried into any wrangle on this subject; I am only here in the discharge of my duty. I have stated my information.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator carried me into a wrangle by saying I knew nothing about it, and I wanted to see what the Senator knew.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator from Indiana to let me interpose, if there is any danger of a wrangle. Will the Senator from Massachusetts be kind enough to enlighten me upon this point? Under the examination of the Senator from Indiana, who, he says, does not know anything about this, he has cited one case in which the examiner of claims has been a useful man—the case of the Alabama claims. Without professing to know anything about it, and appealing to the fountain of light on this subject, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to state anything that the examiner of claims has done in that case, except to superintend the copying of the correspondence. I ask him also whether it is not true that an accomplished lawyer from his own city has been here for long periods of time to deal with, and has dealt with, those Alabama claims, and dealt with them exclusively, so far as professional treatment is concerned. If what I say be true, then I wish to submit to the Senator, as well as a man who does not know anything about this is permitted to do; that he does not make any case by that item of evidence showing the utility, even in the past while war claims were accumulating, of continuing this officer.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator inquires with regard to an eminent lawyer from Boston, who, on my invitation, came to Washington, and at his own charge volunteered his services to the State Department, not, as the Senator from New York imagines, to go over the claims of American citizens on Great Britain—not at all; he has not looked at one of them, to the best of my knowledge, but to review the correspondence between the two Governments relating to the great principles of international law involved in that inquiry.

Mr. CONKLING. I will inquire of the Senator whether Mr. Bemis did not make the brief, and the only brief I have heard of, that ever has been made, representing the position of our Government upon those claims?

Mr. SUMNER. I am not aware that Mr. Bemis has made any brief upon the subject. I hear it now for the first time, though my intimacy with him is great.

Mr. CONKLING. It is possible I characterize it in the wrong way. Has anybody ever made, to the Senator's knowledge, any statement upon paper, any codification, any exhibition upon paper, whatever the proper term may be, representing the position of this country upon those claims as the State Department view it, except Mr. Bemis?

Mr. SUMNER. I am not aware that Mr. Bemis has done it. I hear it for the first time, though my relations with him were almost daily while he was here in Washington.

Mr. CONKLING. Shall we understand, then, from the Senator that Mr. Bemis confined himself to perusing this correspondence?

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. Bemis perused the correspondence and made his own abstract of it.

Mr. CONKLING. "Abstract!" That is a word with which I was not familiar. [Laughter.] That is the word I ought to have employed.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator and myself do not understand each other. I am not aware that Mr. Bemis has performed there any function that belonged to the examiner of claims; that he was in any respect an examiner of claims.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not say he was. The Senator, in answer to my honorable friend from Indiana, adduced the Alabama case, which everybody conceived to be the complicated case, if there was any truth in this idea that we needed such an officer, because it is the conspicuous instance of claims of a character falling within the purview of the State Department. The Senator, therefore, instanced that case as showing the overmastering importance of this officer, with prolonging whose life he has been charged, he says, by his committee. Now, then, the inquiry being put as to what has been done in that one case, it turns out, as far as the Senator has gone, that a very able man has been reviewing and abstracting the correspondence; has been doing that whatever it may be—

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator is entirely mistaken in supposing that that belonged to the duties of the examiner of claims. The examiner of claims, as I understand his duties, was to consider the claims as presented by American citizens to the Department of State. Mr. Bemis, as I have always understood, devoted himself to perusing the correspondence that had passed between the Department of State and Mr. Adams relating to the great principles involved in those claims.

Mr. CONKLING. Am I wrong, then, in supposing that the Senator from Massachusetts cited the Alabama claims as the instance in which this officer had been so valuable?

Mr. SUMNER. I cited that as one instance. I hope my friend will pardon me. I do not care about prolonging the discussion.

Mr. CONKLING. In answer to that, to trespass one moment further upon the courtesy of my friend from Indiana, I beg to say this: I have heard the Senator from Massachusetts repeat a great many times that the Committee on Appropriations had acted in the dark, taken a step in the dark; and then I have heard him repeat as often expressions indicative of the painful labor, the procrastinating and attenuated attention which he had bestowed upon subjects of this sort, and the methodical, the conclusive, the infallible manner in which he had reached the opinion which he expressed. Now, he says he does not wish to be drawn into anything of this sort with me, and awhile ago he said that he did not wish to wrangle with the Senator from Indiana. With him we all know it is very hard to wrangle, because it takes two to wrangle, and he is usually not one of the two who do that business. But I submit to the Senate, with great respect, that it will hardly do for any man to rise here and, ex cathedra, express opinions of this sort, and put down the report of a committee, and then decline to state what the facts are that he has picked up in the long process through which he has gone.

I believe, after hearing the honorable Senator, that this office in the State Department, looking to the future, is wholly useless; and I believe the Senator would be utterly unable, on the stand as a witness, or in his place as a Senator, to respond to intelligent questions in such a way as to show, within his own knowledge, any reason whatever for retaining this officer. He has cited one instance, that of the Alabama claims, which, as I understand it, is a most striking illustration of the want of any utility in this officer in question. And now, when I press it a little, without meaning any disrespect to him, of course, he declines because he does not wish to be drawn into a wrangle with one Senator, nor into the answering of unnecessary questions of another.

My understanding is that Mr. Bemis is the man to whom was committed the perusal, the codification of this correspondence, the man to whom was committed the solution of those questions upon which the claims of all the claimants depended; and it is to that I was calling the attention of the Senate and of the Senator. I certainly do not wish to pursue the subject if he does not; but I beg to say to him that he will find more willing hearers than I am if he finds Senators who will take in the lump these stately phrases which the Senator employs with a view to convincing the Senate that he knows more about this matter than anybody else. I say to him frankly that I do not believe it, and he must not expect me to do so until he furnishes some evidence.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President—

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator allow me one minute further?

Mr. HOWE. I have heard three speeches since I got the floor, but I have no objection to hearing another.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I merely wish to explain my amendment very briefly. By inserting after the word "that" the words "so much of," it will prevent the repeal of the whole second section of the act of July 25, 1866; and then by inserting the other words after the word "purposes" it will effect the repeal of that part which provides for the examiner of claims.

Now, I wish to say, in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts, with the indulgence of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the labor upon the Alabama claims is without value, in my judgment, in the very nature of the case, for the reason that when we shall arrive at that state of negotiation between the United States and England that England shall recognize her liability to pay those claims, their amount must be ascertained in some way provided for by the treaty, or by the result of the negotiations, probably by the appointment of a commission. That commission will hear evidence, and this Government will be properly represented before such a commission, and take the place which is now contemplated by this examiner. This examination now is premature. It will furnish no evidence against England, for she is no party to it. It is not made under any negotiation with her. Therefore, in my judgment, upon that particular case and class of cases, the examinations now made are without value.

Mr. HOWE. Now, I want to add two or three words to the little that has been said on this subject, especially because I have had to listen to a very earnest protest on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts against my following my own convictions or my own opinions on this question. He seems to be impressed with the idea that as he has examined it longer and knows more about it than I can, therefore I ought to act upon his judgment and not refer to my own. The position would be pretty well taken with one qualification: if the Senator would be willing to tell us what he knows about the necessity of this examiner of claims I should be bound to listen to his testimony, and if he made it intelligible to me, then I could see as he did; but it will not do for him to testify that there is a necessity when he does not tend to convince me, unless he can show me the necessity. I never knew that Senator yet to be in possession of a fact that he could not explain. I never supposed that he knew anything that he could not tell, and tell adequately, and tell to my comprehension; and I am bound to say, though I think he has made an honest effort to inform me upon this point, he has utterly failed. I do not hold him responsible for it. I am not going to deny that I am personally responsible myself, or that my nature is not. Yet I am inclined to think the responsibility rests with the case that he has taken in hand. He has simply failed to show me the necessity for this officer, because there is no necessity for him in the world.

Sir, an examiner of claims in the State Department, I take it, must have something to do with one of three kinds of claims: either claims which individuals present against this Government, or claims which this Government presents against foreign Governments, or claims which individual citizens of the United States wish to urge upon foreign Governments through the agency of the State Department. If this examiner is there for the purpose of expediting claims of citizens against this Government or claims of anybody against this Government, I have simply to say that the Secretary of State has nothing to do with them, the examiner has nothing to do with them, no business with them; they cannot appropriate a dollar; they cannot adjudicate a dollar; it is outside of their jurisdiction altogether. If this officer is supposed to have relation to claims on the part of our Government against foreign Governments, then I have to say that the Secretary of State himself is that examiner and nobody else; and we have not authorized any substitution, and we should not authorize any substitution. If there is any high and sacred duty belonging to that officer, it is that; and to substitute Mr. E. Peshine Smith for Mr. William H. Seward, although it might be a good substitution, until it is authorized by the appointing power, I think it had better not be provided for by the appropriating department of the Government. If it be neither the one nor the other of those classes of claims, but it be claims of individual citizens which they wish to urge upon the attention of foreign Governments through the State Department, it is plainly the business of the claimant himself to prepare a statement of his claim, to set forth the grounds upon which it rests, to make up his own briefs or to make up his own abstracts, whichever may be needed to present the case so that the Secretary of State, and not an examiner of claims, can pass upon the propriety of it, and enable him, not an examiner, but the Secretary, the responsible officer under the Constitution, to determine whether it is a proper claim to present to the attention of a foreign Government or not.

Indubitably, there may be papers in the State Department bearing upon the claims of citizens on this Government, and we may have occasion to call for those. We find such evidence in every one of the Departments; we are calling for it every day, and that evidence is furnished us by $1,200 clerks in every other Department. I do not see why they cannot furnish it in the State Department just as well. If there is a necessity for such an officer in that Department it is because he is to do the work of an extra clerk, or it is because he is to assume some portion of the responsibility which the law said should devolve on the Secretary himself. For the division of that responsibility we furnish him one assistant constantly, and it is the effort of a part of this amendment to secure him another assistant. For that part of the amendment I am anxious to vote. I was not present in committee when it was considered there. I should not have acquiesced, I think—unless I had heard reasons for that amendment which I have not heard on the floor of the Senate—in the propriety of discontinuing the employment of the Second Assistant Secretary of State. I cannot dispute the Senator from Indiana when he says that he does not believe all the wisdom of the world will die when Mr. Hunter dies. He may be entirely right in that; but I am very much inclined to think that when Mr. Hunter dies a great deal of the wisdom of the State Department will perish. Undoubtedly it can be supplied; but I have the impression, though I do not pretend to know as intimately on this point as the Senator from Massachusetts must know, and as other Senators must, that Mr. Hunter is one of those officers of whom we have two or three or more specimens, I am glad to know, in the service of the Government, who are a sort of valde mecum in their respective offices, who know all about the duties of their office, and by reason of their long employment and close attention and great natural capacity have made themselves masters of the history and of the whole work of their respective Departments. It is a calamity to any Government to lose the services of such an officer. I think he is one. I think we have at the head of the Land Office another. I think we have as chief clerk of the Indian Bureau another of that class of men. I should be very sorry to see, for the want of any reasonable appropriation of dollars, the Government lose the services of such an officer. Now, I shall vote with great cheerfulness for the amendment moved by the Senator from Indiana because I understand it effects just what I desire to see effected, the retention of this Second Assistant Secretary of State, and the dismissal of the examiner of claims.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I still remain of the opinion that this examiner of claims ought not to be dispensed with. Of course it is a matter of no interest to me particularly. I had something to do, I think, at the time with passing the law providing for an examiner of claims, and I came to the conclusion at that time that it was necessary to have such an officer, more from what was said to me by the Secretary of State on the subject than by anything that I could know about the State Department.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] is right in his supposition as to what must be the nature of these claims, as a general rule, and the kind of service which has to be done, and in supposing that it is a service absolutely to be performed, in the last instance, by the Secretary of State himself. It not infrequently happens and must happen in Departments of the Government having a great deal of business before them that, while they have to decide upon claims to a certain extent, with regard to the question whether they are proper claims to be presented against foreign Governments, and to be urged, yet the head of a Department like the Secretary of State, with all his other avocations, conducting the diplomatic correspondence of the country principally, may not have time; when these claims amount to a very considerable number, to go over them all, arrange the papers, examine the evidence, and look up the law particularly, and devote all the time to that detail which must be devoted in order to come to a right understanding of the subject.

I have had some experience, though not very much, in this matter of the judgment that has to be passed upon subjects by the head of a Department. The Secretary of the Treasury is obliged to decide upon a great many questions of claims of one kind and another. If the Secretary of the Treasury was compelled look up all those questions himself, to arrange the papers, to collate and digest the testimony, and to state the principles and the statutes applicable to each particular case, it would be utterly impossible for him to get through one twentieth part of the business to be done by him. Of course he has to settle the matter in the last resort; but there are in the Department of the Treasury several clerks, in fact, passing upon different kinds of questions, familiar with their respective branches, who arrange the papers, collate the testimony, state the facts, and state the statutes and the law applicable to those facts, making a brief, in point of fact; and when that is done, the case in a comparatively narrow compass is submitted to the Secretary, and he passes upon it, either with or without further examination as may seem necessary to him.

Until the war there was very little of that in the State Department; there was no more, perhaps, than the Secretary could do himself; but it was stated to me by the Secretary of State that the claims upon foreign Governments and some upon our own Government—for there are many upon our own Government that come before him, of which I could give an instance if necessary—were so numerous that it was impossible for him, with all the other duties that were pressing upon him, to discharge that duty, that he must have some assistance, and that he had in his Department no clerk who was entirely qualified to do what was necessary to be done. In the first place he required a good and practiced lawyer as well as a good man of business to make an abstract and statement of these claims, the law and principles applicable to them, to be presented to him for his decision. I believed the Secretary of State; I believe him now. He is not a man to ask for help that he does not need. He is a laborious man, devoted to his duties, desirous to discharge them all; and when he stated to me that he absolutely needed this assistance in order to get through with the business that was pressing upon him from the very great number of those claims that must come before him for examination, I aided in passing that law in order to give him the assistance that I thought and still think he needs.

That statement, coming from him, is not to be answered by the fact that any member of the Committee on Foreign Relations in this body is not prepared to go through and undergo a cross-examination upon exactly what all this business is. I do not know, nor do I pretend to know, nor is it necessary that I should know in order to come to a right understanding of the question on that statement from the officer at the head of that Department. That necessity pressing upon him is as great now as it has been, and the only question, as it strikes me, which is pending before the Senate is simply this: shall we deprive him of this assistance which any one can see who is at all familiar with the workings of the Department may be necessary to him, and which he avers is absolutely necessary in order to enable him to discharge the duties of that Department and to meet the requisitions upon him from our fellow citizens which he must necessarily be called upon to meet? My opinion is, as I said before, that this officer is necessary, and I am unwilling to have him dispensed with.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine has referred to the testimony of the Secretary of State some time ago at the creation of this office. I am able to communicate his testimony this morning. In the course of business I saw him before the meeting of the Senate; and when allusion was made to the proposition to abolish the office of the examiner of claims he expressed himself very strongly against it, saying he regarded that office as essential to the business of the Department. He did not see how the business could be conducted to the satisfaction of the community without that office. Now, that is his testimony.

Senators have undertaken to cross-examine me on the subject; they have asked me to give a bill of particulars of all that this officer has done. I am not able to do it. I give my opinion on what I know. I have known the opinion of the Secretary of State, and of other persons in the Department now, for several years on this subject. Then, being at the Department in the transaction of official business, I have had occasion to see this officer myself. Then, from my connection with the Committee on Foreign Relations, I have necessarily had a great deal of correspondence with the Department of State; hardly a day passes that I do not receive communications of some kind from the Department covering papers and reports of different kinds. It is in those communications that I have had occasion to see the active talent and industry of this officer. I have seen it year by year and month by month. Now, that is my testimony. It may not satisfy my cross-examiners, the Senator from New York or the Senator from Wisconsin, and I freely say, in reply to them, that I cannot furnish the details. I never have busied myself to inquire into them. Enough if I satisfied myself that the office was important to the public interests. Personally I can have no interest in this. My acquaintance with this officer is very slight; since he has been here I have had nothing but official relations with him; but I am obliged to say that in my opinion he has rendered essential service to our country, and that his office ought not to be abolished.

The Senator from Wisconsin made an analysis of the different kinds of claims that might be presented to our Government. I do not object to his analysis; but take, for instance, the claims of foreign Powers on the United States; there is a very extensive class; and when they are presented it can hardly be expected that the Secretary of State himself will make the first examination of perhaps the complicated papers attending those claims. He necessarily puts that into the hands of another person, who goes over them and makes his abstract, and prepares the way for the final examination by the Secretary himself. And so when our own fellow-citizens present their claims to the Department of State, asking the Department to transmit them to England or to France, or to wherever else the claimant may appeal; the Secretary of State is not able himself to go over these claims and all the proofs accompanying them. In the first place, he must commit that duty to another person who performs what in the profession might be called the duty of the attorney, who prepares the case for the final action of the Secretary himself.

I believe in all this matter there is no mystification, nor is there any exaggeration. It is all plain as human duty, and I believe it grows out of the necessities of the public service. I hope, therefore, that both these officers will be allowed to remain, the examiner of claims and the Second Assistant Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I supposed the question was on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But is it not in order to perfect the words proposed to be stricken out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to perfect the bill, but this is part of an amendment merely.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, as it seems we are about to vote upon the whole of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, I wish to make one suggestion. The strength of the case against the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is the advice of the Committee on Foreign Relations; and now before making a statement, I wish to read to the Senate what the Senator from Massachusetts said yesterday. The amendment of the committee being read, which amendment proposed to put an end to three officers, the second under-secretary, the examiner of claims, and the superintendent of statistics, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts made this statement:

"I was about to say that I was instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to oppose the adoption of this amendment, and to move instead thereof an appropriation for the officers whose offices it is proposed by this amendment to destroy. This amendment is aimed at certain officers in the Department of State."

And the Senator then proceeded to argue the importance of all three of these persons and the impropriety and danger of putting an end to the offices of all three alike. Now, Mr. President, that we may see in one instance the extent of that critical process by which the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations supervises and overrules the Committee on Appropriations, I wish to make this statement: I was visited this morning by a person who knows better than the Senator from Massachusetts can know what is done in the Bureau of Statistics in the State Department, as it is called, and from him I learn that if this amendment of the committee is adopted, so far as the superintendent of statistics is concerned it puts an end to the tenure of a man who has had for a long period of time nothing in the world to do with the business of statistics in the State Department, who has simply received his salary, not professing to render any service in return. I am informed, further, that the adoption of this amendment, sweeping away that place, will leave the actual preparation and compilation of statistics in precisely the same hands in which it is now—the hands of an unthanked clerk of the Department, detailed by the Secretary of State to do that business, a man who receives nothing specifically for doing it, but who takes his compensation as a clerk, asking nothing more, and for that compensation does all the service for which we have been paying. And yet the honorable Senator from Massachusetts (as I said yesterday, the great orb of the State Department, who rises periodically in his effulgence and sends his rays down the steep places here to cast a good many dollars into the sea) rises and says that he is unanimously instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, in substance, to inform the Senate that they are approaching the edge of a precipice, and that they are to do great harm if they abolish this office, because he grouped them all together and made one equal in his indispensability with the other two.

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Senator allow me to correct him there?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly, as I am always honored to be corrected by the Senator.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator is very much mistaken. I made a distinction between the offices, and my motion is to strike out of the amendment of the committee that part which proposes to abolish the offices of examiner of claims and of Second Assistant Secretary of State, leaving the amendment of the committee, so far as it touches the statistical clerkship, unaffected. And in the course of my remarks, if the Senator will do me the honor to look at them, he will find that I made that distinction; and I began my remarks this morning by saying that I had nothing to say with regard to the statistical clerkship; I should leave that in the hands of the Senate. I made my question with regard to the two other officers whose existence in the Department I thought important to the public interests.

Mr. CONKLING. The proposition of the Senator to leave one of these offices in the hands of the Senate implies that the Senate is not to be permitted to pass upon the other two. It reminds me of a meeting somewhat famous which took place in a certain office in State street, Albany, where a certain man in New York, after making up the entire State ticket on the Democrat side, came down to the State prison inspector and had some difficulty about it in his own mind; he could not solve it to his own satisfaction, and so finally he said, "It is of no consequence; we will leave that to the convention; let them nominate a State prison inspector." [Laughter.] The Senator from Massachusetts proposes to make final disposition of all this matter except with regard to this one officer, and that he will leave to the Senate! I rather think, Mr. President, that before we have finished, all this will be left to the Senate by some hook or crook, and upon that theory I will continue to make an observation or two.

I repeat now that the Senator stated, as I read yesterday, that he was instructed; let me give his language:

"I was instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to oppose the adoption of this amendment, and to move instead thereof an appropriation for the officers whose offices it is proposed by this amendment to destroy."

Does not that mean the superintendent of statistics as much as it means anybody else? The Senator may have had some mental reservation about it. I am aware that he did go on afterward to argue and to propose to take the question upon the latter part of the amendment first. I know that he said this morning that in his judgment this officer, the superintendent of statistics, ought not to be abolished, that he thought it was not wise or safe to do it, but he intimated that he had not so much feeling about that as he had about the other two. But I was commenting upon his statement made yesterday, that his committee backed him in saying to the Senate that this amendment of the Appropriation Committee ought not to be adopted, but that appropriations ought to be made for the officers, to wit, three in number, whom it was proposed to strike out. It is to that I am calling attention, and there the record bears me out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I beg leave to say that that is precisely what the committee did agree to do.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly. I had no doubt about it. The Senator from Maine shows now that I am right in quoting the Senator from Massachusetts, and that the Senator from Massachusetts was right in quoting the authority of his committee. I had no doubt about it. Under these circumstances, having sat a number of times, as I have said, as the humblest member of the Committee on Appropriations, under the somewhat caustic animadversions of the Senator from Massachusetts, implying that we are in outer darkness on all these subjects, and that if knowledge is not confined to him it certainly is confined to somebody who does not belong to the Appropriation Committee, I have taken the trouble to repeat the statement which was made to me this morning on undoubted authority, that this work is done in the State Department by an unbanked clerk, designated, perhaps, by a wave of the hand of the Secretary of State to perform this duty, and repealing the existing law as regards the superintendent of statistics will leave that same clerk performing the same duty, and make no change except that a man six hundred miles away, having for two or three years drawn the salary of this place, will cease to draw it.

Now, Mr. President, I have only to say that in my belief the Committee on Foreign Relations, when they gave this instruction, were not permitted by the chairman of the committee to enjoy the benefit of all the information which he says he has on this subject. On the contrary, that committee, after proper tuition by its chairman, after being educated as far as it is capable of being educated in the mysteries of the State Department by him, would never, I apprehend, have instructed him to come here and caution the Senate against the false and almost fatal step that it was likely to take in abolishing, among other things, the office of the superintendent of statistics in the State Department, and as we are compelled now to vote upon his amendment as it stands together I trust that it will be voted down, and that the Senator from Indiana will have an opportunity to propose his amendment, and allow Mr. Hunter to stand upon his own footing, because I am very free to say, in harmony with my honorable friend from Wisconsin, that of these three places the Second Assistant Secretary, under all the circumstances, seems to me the one to retain, if indeed we are to retain either.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has a passion for misunderstanding me at least; and he has a manner of expressing it imported from the other end of the Capitol to which we have been less accustomed, I believe in this Chamber, than others have been in the House of Representatives. I am sorry. I wish it were otherwise. I have tried to make a frank statement. I have no personal interest; I am seeking nothing but the public interest. I do not doubt that the Senator from New York is also seeking the public interest; I make no suggestion to the contrary, though I do not see that the public interest requires the peculiar line of argument and cross-examination and the manner which the Senator has chosen to adopt; but that is for him to choose, and not for me.

The Senate will bear me witness that from the beginning of this discussion I made a plain distinction between these different offices. I said that I had little to say for the clerkship of statistics beyond this; that I thought when the change was made it should be transferred to a general bureau of statistics wherever that might be, whether in the Treasury Department or in any other Department of the Government, or whether such bureau should be elevated into a department. My criticism on the present proposition was that it abolished the office in the State Department without transferring its duties anywhere else. That is all. I did not even know the present incumbent, and I made no inquiry with regard to him, for in this whole matter I acted, if I may so express myself, impersonally. I had no individual in view whose interests I wished to promote.

Now, I ask the Senate if I have been treated candidly by the Senator from New York? In the face of my open statement, that with regard to this statistical clerkship I was comparatively indifferent, that I did not think the public interests would suffer if it were abolished, that therefore I made no plea for its preservation, but that I willingly left it to the Senate, was it candid for the Senator to make the comments upon me that he did? I propound the question and leave it.

And that brings me again to the two other officers with regard to which I made a clear distinction. I regarded then both of them as performing duties important to the public service. Now, it seems to me generally admitted all around the Chamber that with regard to one of them I was right. Even the Senator from New York does not ask to have the Second Assistant Secretary of State sacrificed; but he says, hand over the examiner of claims, let him be sacrificed; and the argument, if I understand his last speech, is that the Senator from Massachusetts insisted that the statistical clerkship should be preserved, and because, according to his representation, I so insisted, in his opinion, and on good grounds, as exhibited by him, the statistical clerkship ought not to be preserved, therefore these others should not be! I do not understand that logic. I do not understand the logic of taking up a case to which I did not refer, on which I did not build, with regard to which, in the discussion to-day, I have made no pretension whatever. I do not understand the logic of taking that case, which may not be sustained by reason or by fact, and arguing from that against the other.

Admit that the statistical clerkship should be abandoned, does it follow that you must abandon the other two offices? Clearly not. I have from the beginning made a difference between the cases; though, as I said when I opened my remarks yesterday—and little did I think then that the discussion was to run on in this way for so long a time—I was instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to oppose the whole amendment relating to the three different officers. But then the committee took into view the different grounds—the position in each case. They saw that the statistical clerkship might be dispensed with without great detriment to the public service, but they thought that when it was dispensed with its duties ought to be transferred to some bureau of statistics, and that the measure as now proposed was on that account incomplete; therefore they instructed me to oppose the abolition of that office under the present amendment. Had any substitute been brought forward to transfer the duties of that office to the Bureau of Statistics, that would have presented entirely a different question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to take time; but I think the only way I can reach the result I wish to reach is to vote in favor of the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, to strike out the whole clause, and then I shall vote afterward to retain only the Second Assistant Secretary. If I vote against his amendment and to retain the clause reported by the committee I do not perceive how I can afterward divide it.

Mr. CONKLING. Then the amendment of the Senator from Indiana reaches it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I do not think that will be in order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would inquire whether, if this proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts should be rejected, the proposition of the Senator from Indiana, to modify the amendment reported by the committee, would be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would be in order.

Mr. SUMNER. It would then be open to amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to know how I am to vote. I wish to retain Mr. Hunter in office. I think him a most valuable officer. I care nothing about the other two clerks. How shall I vote?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts is voted down, and the proposition of the Senator from Indiana prevails afterward, the Senator from Minnesota will reach the end he seeks to accomplish.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not so certain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Cattell, Cragin, Dixon, Doak, Little, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill, of Vermont, Patterson, of New Hampshire, Patterson, of Tennessee, Russ, Sprague, Sumner, Wiley, and Yates—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Ferry, Howe, Morrill, of Maine, ye, Ramsey, Rice, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cameron, Conness, Corbett, Davis, Fowler, Grimes, Harlan, Hendricks, McDonald, Morton, Norton, Pomeroy, Salisbury, Thayer, Tipton, Van Winkle, Vickers, and Williams—20.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. Now, with the permission of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] I will simply move to make the proper appropriation in that clause for these two officers.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let us go through with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations. This clause may be changed in the Senate; I shall propose further amendments which may change the character of the bill in that respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was continued, the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations being acted on in their order as reached in the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line three hundred and eighty-nine, to strike out "five" and insert "eleven," so as to appropriate for eleven clerks of class four in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and ninety-one, to strike out "eleven" and insert "twelve," so as to appropriate for twelve clerks of class three in the same office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and ninety-two, to strike out "six" and insert "fourteen," so as to appropriate for fourteen clerks of class two in that office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and ninety-three, to strike out "six" and insert "fifteen," so as to appropriate for fifteen clerks of class one in that office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and ninety-six, to strike out "$66,400" and insert "$101,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The clause from line three hundred and eighty-eight to line three hundred and ninety-seven, as thus amended, is as follows:

For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, two Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, chief clerk, eleven clerks of class four, additional to one clerk of class four as disbursing clerk, twelve clerks of class three, fourteen clerks of class two, two clerks of class two, (transferred from the Third Auditor's office,) fifteen clerks of class one, (two of whom were transferred from the Third Auditor's office,) one messenger, one assistant messenger, and three laborers, $101,800.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the leave of the Senator from Maine, I wish to move, on behalf of the Committee on Finance, to amend the bill by inserting in line four hundred: "For one chief clerk, $2,000." This is to provide for the chief clerk of the Construction Bureau of the Treasury Department. It is to supply an omission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines four hundred and eight and four hundred and nine, to strike out the words "declared to continue" and insert "continued."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after "chief clerk," in line four hundred and twelve, the words "six clerks of class four;" after the word "laborers," in line four hundred and fifteen, to insert "and for temporary clerks, $4,500;" and in lines four hundred and fifteen and four hundred and sixteen, to strike out "in all, $32,940," and insert "in all, $48,200;" so as to make the clause read:

For First Comptroller of the Treasury, chief clerk, six clerks of class four, eight clerks of class three, seven clerks of class two, (three of them transferred from Third Auditor's office,) two clerks of class one, one messenger, and two laborers, and for temporary clerks, $4,500, in all, $48,200.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting $9,000 instead of $4,500, in line four hundred and sixteen.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope my friend will allow me to go on.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is the proper time to amend the amendment. It is the only time I can do it. I propose to make the appropriation for temporary clerks in the First Comptroller's office $9,000 instead of $4,500. I desire to state that there are some amendments necessary in regard to these bureaus. I have carefully examined the matter, and I am satisfied that the amount of force allowed by the bill is entirely too low. The House of Representatives, in making the appropriations for the bureaus in the Treasury Department, did not allow the amounts estimated for, nor the amounts fixed by law, but took the old basis before the war. Our Committee on Appropriations has very properly, in nearly every case, increased the clerical force as fixed by the House of Representatives. Since the bill has been reported I have received communications in great number showing that in certain bureaus, where there can be no possibility of mistake about it, the force allowed is not sufficient to carry on the service.

The Committee on Finance, therefore, propose certain amendments to raise the amount so as to give them a force barely sufficient to carry on the business. In many cases we propose to allow less than they ask for. In regard to the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury no one doubts that the statement of Mr. Taylor can be relied on. He says, in an official communication, that with the assistance given in here he cannot carry on his office. I think what I propose to allow will barely allow him to discharge the duties. The business of the Treasury Department now cannot be carried on with the force before the war, because that Department is now settling up the business of the war; the war accounts are passing through the Auditor's and Comptroller's offices, and the war has occasioned a very large increase in the business of the Department. It will be necessary for me to offer several amendments in regard to the Treasury Department. The first one is in this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to increase the allowance for temporary clerks in the First Comptroller's office from $4,500 to $9,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now, the gross amount of the appropriation should be increased by adding $4,500, so as to make the total $52,700. I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and nineteen, to strike out "seven" and insert "twelve;" in the same line to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twenty;" in line four hundred and twenty to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-eight;" in line four hundred and twenty-one to strike out "six" and insert "twenty-one;" after "one," in line four hundred and twenty-two, to insert "twelve copyists;" and in lines four hundred and twenty-three and four hundred and twenty-four, to strike out "$71,480" and insert "$137,000;" so as to make the clause from line four hundred and eighteen to line four hundred and twenty-five read:

For Second Comptroller of the Treasury, chief clerk, twelve clerks of class four, twenty clerks of class three, twenty-eight clerks of class two, (one of them transferred from the Third Auditor's office,) twenty-one clerks of class one, twelve copyists, one messenger, one assistant messenger, and two laborers, in all $137,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and twenty-six, after "chief clerk" to insert "three clerks of class four" in the clause relating to the office of the Commissioner of Customs.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to move an amendment to that amendment, to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to provide for three clerks of class four in the office of the Commissioner of Customs. The Commissioner asks for five, and we have cut it down to three. I have a letter from the Commissioner on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator now proposes to provide for a new clerk.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator desires fuller information on the subject, I will send up the letter of the Commissioner of Customs to be read. He makes a very strong showing in favor of a larger number of clerks than we propose to allow him.

The Chief Clerk read the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS.
June 16, 1868.

SIR: I beg leave to call your attention to the classification of the clerks in this bureau, first premising that it is one of the three revising bureaus of the Department. By House bill No. 635, as reported with amendments by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, this bureau is allowed two clerks of the fourth class only.

As my chief clerk has been absent on account of sickness a good deal during the last eighteen months, and is now confined to his bed with inflammatory rheumatism, one of my fourth-class clerks acts as chief clerk.

I ask to be allowed three more fourth-class clerks, to be taken from my third class, for the following reasons: one of my third-class clerks is in charge of the captured and abandoned property division, an important and perplexing business. The clerk having charge of this in the First Auditor's office, whose doings are revised here, is a fourth-class clerk.

Within the past year the whole warehouse business has been sent from the Secretary's office to this. It became necessary to devise and carry into effect a new system of keeping the warehouse accounts, which had got into inextricable confusion. Judge Thurman, a man of good legal mind and accustomed to customs affairs—a third-class clerk in this office—was assigned the task of reorganizing this branch of accounts. With diligent labor he has accomplished it, and now has it in charge. These accounts now, pro forma, pass through the First Auditor's office and then come to this. At once a fourth-class clerk was assigned to the duty of passing them in the Auditor's office, but being entirely ignorant of the business was instructed how to perform his duties by Judge Thurman, his inferior in pay and grade. Is it right that these two clerks—and valuable ones they are—who revise the business of their respective divisions in this office should receive less pay and stand a grade lower than the clerks in the Auditor's office having charge of the same business, but who know that this office is responsible for errors and not that?

Again, I have a clerk of the third class, Mr. Weed, a good lawyer and most invaluable clerk, in charge of the New York accounts. He is indefatigable, and saves the Government, I will not say a hundred, but certainly more than ten times the amount of his salary every year in scrutinizing these accounts as they were never before scrutinized. I think he is justly entitled to the grade and compensation of a fourth-class clerk; indeed, he does more than double the labor of some pretty good clerks.

Judge Thurman and Mr. Weed are about fifty years of age. Mr. Fletcher, in charge of captured and abandoned property accounts, about forty years of age. He is also an indefatigable laborer.

In recommending, or rather asking, that the number of my fourth-class clerks be increased, I beg leave to say that I do not think the number of the third class should be diminished, nor that of the second class. I greatly need two additional clerks, say of the first class. If these should be allowed that class might then be diminished by one.

I have been obliged to write this very hastily, and I beg you to excuse its crudeness.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. SARGENT, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, Chairman Finance Committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and twenty-seven, to strike out "four" and to insert "six;" in the same line to strike out "seven" and insert "nine;" and in line four hundred and twenty-nine to strike out "thirty-one thousand and three" and to insert "forty thousand nine;" so that the clause will read:

For Commissioner of Customs, chief clerk, three clerks of class four, six clerks of class three, nine clerks of class two, seven clerks of class one, one messenger, and one laborer, in all, $40,920.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that now having inserted one additional clerk, it is necessary to increase the amount of the appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation will be changed to $42,720, if there be no objection.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and thirty-one, in the clause making provision for the clerical force of the First Auditor of the Treasury, to strike out "two" and insert "four," so as to allow four clerks of class four.

Mr. SHERMAN. In regard to the office of the First Auditor of the Treasury, I am assured by him, and by the Secretary of the Treasury, that he cannot get along with the number of clerks appropriated for. The Committee on Appropriations have proposed to amend this clause somewhat, but not so that I can offer my amendments. I suggest, therefore, that all the amendments in the clause relative to the First Auditor's office, be passed over informally for the present, and I will at a later stage of the bill offer a substitute for that whole clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendments in the clause from line four hundred and thirty-one, to line four hundred and thirty-eight, will be passed over. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The next amendment was in the clause providing for the Second Auditor's office, to strike out lines four hundred and forty-six to four hundred and fifty-two, as follows:

And the clause of the act of March 14, 1864, authorizing fifteen clerks of class three, fifty clerks of class two, and one hundred and forty clerks of class one, in the office of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, is hereby continued in force until the 30th day of June, 1869, and no longer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line four hundred and seventy, to insert "also one clerk of class four, four clerks of class two, four clerks of class one, one copyist, and two laborers, to be employed as a temporary force;" and in line four hundred and seventy-three, to strike out the words "forty-nine thousand nine" and to insert "sixty-four thousand two;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the Fifth Auditor, chief clerk, two clerks of class four, four clerks of class three, seven clerks of class two, fifteen clerks of class one, six copyists, one messenger, and one laborer, employed in his office; also one clerk of class four, four clerks of class two, four clerks of class one, one copyist, and two laborers, to be employed as a temporary force, in all, $64,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 23, line five hundred and forty-six, to strike out "one" and to insert "two" before "hundred thousand;" so that the clause will read:

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws, or conniving at the same, in cases where such expenses are not otherwise provided for by law, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line five hundred and seventy-nine, after the words "public lands" to insert the words "private land claims and surveys."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line five hundred and eighty-nine, to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty;" and in line five hundred and ninety, to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "fifty-eight;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of additional clerks in the General Land Office under the act of March 3, 1855: for one principal clerk as director, one clerk of class three, four clerks of class two, forty clerks of class one, and two laborers, $38,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines six hundred and fifty-eight and six hundred and fifty-nine, to strike out the words "two thousand five" and to insert "six thousand three," and also after the word "dollars," in line six hundred and fifty-nine, to strike out "$4,500;" so that the clause will read:

For compensation of the surveyor general of Minnesota, $2,000, and the clerks in his office, $6,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line six hundred and sixty-five, to strike out the word "four" before "thousand" and to insert "six," and also after the word "thousand" to insert "three thousand," and in line six hundred and sixty-six to strike out "$6,000;" so that the clause will read:

For surveyor general of Kansas, $2,000, and the clerks in his office, $4,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line six hundred and sixty-nine, to strike out "$7,000" after "dollars;" so that the clause will read:

For surveyor general of Colorado and Utah, $3,000, and for the clerks in his office, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines six hundred and seventy-three and six hundred and seventy-four, to strike out "$4,500" and to insert "$11,000;" and also, in lines six hundred and seventy-four and six hundred and seventy-five, to strike out "$7,500;" so that the clause will read:

For surveyor general of California and Arizona, $3,000, and for clerks in his office, $11,000.

Mr. POMEROY. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to this clause. I do not understand why the $4,500 should be stricken out in lines six hundred and seventy-three and six hundred and seventy-four and $11,000 inserted.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The $4,500 and the $7,500 are put together.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The clause now reads, as amended, "For surveyor general of California and Arizona, $3,000, and for clerks in his office, $11,000," which makes the appropriation $14,000.

Mr. POMEROY. That is the criticism I was about to make.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is evidently an error.

Mr. COLE. No, sir; it is not an error.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It seems to be an error as it stands.

Mr. COLE. Eleven thousand dollars for the clerks in the surveyor general's office in California is the amount of the estimate for that service. The usual amount of appropriation for the survey of the land in that State is, I believe, $50,000, and that is the amount estimated for this year. The fact is there is a great necessity for surveying the public lands in that State. The tide of population setting in that direction is very great; so great, indeed, that last month six thousand emigrants went to that State. It will be borne in mind that it is a very large State, comprising about two hundred thousand square miles, and the tendency of the population now is not to the mines, but to the agricultural regions, as will be observed from the fact that the exports of grain there have been very great; and there is very great distress and annoyance among those settling in the agricultural regions for the want of ability to get titles to their lands.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My friend from California will pardon me for interposing, but I think I can now say to the Senator from Vermont that the apparent mistake is not a real one, and that the clause is all right. I will read it as amended:

For surveyor general of California and Arizona, $3,000, and for clerks in his office, $11,000.

We intended to make an appropriation of $14,000, and if the Senator will refer to the book of estimates he will see that it is precisely what was estimated for, and the appropriation is in the form estimated for. The estimate is:

For the surveyor general of California and Arizona, $3,000.

Clerks in his office as per act, &c., $11,000.

Our information on that subject, which the Senator from California was communicating, satisfied us that the estimate was not too much.

Mr. COLE. I will only add, that so great is the necessity of which I was speaking of permitting the people settling in the agricultural portions of the State to acquire a title to their property that the Legislature of the State passed a resolution asking for a much larger appropriation for the survey of the public lands than has been accorded by the committee, and larger than will be accorded by the Senate or the House of Representatives. The reasonable amount that is asked here is certainly not extravagant by any means. It will not come up to the emergency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines six hundred and seventy-seven and six hundred and seventy-eight, to strike out "$7,000;" so that the clause will read:

For surveyor general of Idaho, $3,000, and for clerks in his office, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line six hundred and eighty, after the word "hundred" to insert "and two;" and after the word "dollars" to insert "and seventy-two cents;" and in lines six hundred and eighty-one and six hundred and eighty-two to strike out "$6,500;" so that the clause will read:

For surveyor general of Nevada, $2,502 72, and the clerks in his office, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line six hundred and eighty-five, to strike out "$6,500;" so that the clause will read:

For the surveyor general of Oregon, $2,500, and for the clerks in his office $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line six hundred and eighty-eight, to strike out "$6,500;" so that the clause will read:

For surveyor general of Washington Territory, $2,500, and for the clerks in his office, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line six hundred and ninety, to strike out "four" and insert "six;" and after the word "thousand" to insert "three hundred;" and in line six hundred and ninety-one, to strike out "$600;" so that the clause will read:

For surveyor general of Nebraska and Iowa, $2,000, and the clerks in his office, $6,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line six hundred and ninety-three, to strike out "three" and to insert "four;" and in line six hundred and ninety-four to strike out "$6,000;" so that the clause will read:

For surveyor general of Montana, $3,000, and for the clerks in his office, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As it is very clear that we cannot finish this bill to-day, and there is a necessity for an executive session, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Suppose we go on a little longer with the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is half past four now, and we have but half an hour for an executive session if we adjourn at five. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 23, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The reading of yesterday's Journal was, on motion of Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, dispensed with.

REPRESENTATIVES-ELECT FROM ARKANSAS.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I send up the credentials of the Representatives-elect from the State of Arkansas, together with a resolution on which I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the oath of office be now administered by the Speaker to Hon. Logan H. Roots, Hon. James Hinds, and Hon. Thomas Boles, Representatives-elect from the State of Arkansas.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin to take the course pursued in the case of Tennessee. The credentials of the Representatives-elect from Tennessee were formally referred to the Committee of Elections. The gentleman will see that is a wise and prudent proceeding. We had a report from the Committee of Elections almost immediately. I think it is the best course for us to pursue now.

Mr. PAINE. I withdraw the demand for the previous question. I wish to say a word by way of explanation and in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee. Having examined the credentials myself, having found them correct, and having heard of no contest of the claim of these gentlemen to their seats in this House, although they have been here for weeks and months waiting for admission, I do not see any good reason why we should refer their credentials to the Committee of Elections in the first instance any more than in ordinary cases of credentials presented where there is no notice of contest. If there is any contest, if there is any question in reference to the election of these gentlemen, if there is any doubt of their right to represent the State of Arkansas in this House, then I will admit it is proper to refer these credentials to the Committee of Elections, although even in that case the rights of contestants would not be concluded or prejudiced by the administration of the oath. If any gentleman will state that he has heard of any charge against either of these gentlemen of disloyalty or of any irregularity in the election at which they were chosen I will consent to this reference. Unless this is done I do not see why in this case we should depart from the ordinary procedure in like cases.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say a word. He was a member of the last Congress and will remember what I am about to say. At the commencement of that Congress the credentials of the Tennessee delegation were referred by the House to the Committee on Reconstruction. That committee reported substantially with regard to Tennessee the action that has been taken in regard to Arkansas. When that had been perfected into law the House then referred the credentials to the Committee of Elections. That committee reported them back, and the members from Tennessee were then sworn in. I think the same prudent course should be pursued in this instance.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman seems in earnest in this matter, and other gentlemen near me express the same opinion, I will modify my resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the credentials of the Representatives-elect from the State of Arkansas be referred to the Committee of Elections.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

DRAWBACK ON SHIP-BUILDING MATERIAL.

On motion of Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 1286) to allow drawback on articles used in the construction of vessels, which was yesterday referred to the Committee on Commerce, was ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to present to the Secretary of State the act entitled "An act to admit the State of Arkansas to representation in Congress," together with the certificate of the Clerk of the House of Representatives and Secretary of the Senate, showing that the said act was passed by a vote of two thirds of both Houses of Congress after the objections of the President thereto had been received, and after the reconsideration of said act by both Houses in accordance with the Constitution.

REPORT OF CHIEF OF ORDNANCE.

Mr. BUTLER, by unanimous consent, presented a report of the Chief of Ordnance; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Ordnance.

PENSIONS TO EX-OFFICERS.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1310) to provide for the granting of pensions to those ex-officers of the United States Army, according to their rank at date of final muster out, who were wounded while serving as enlisted men and who are not now drawing pensions as officers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BRAZIL MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement of the sums paid without protest during the years 1865, 1866, and 1867, on the vessels of the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company at the port of New York, amounting to $7,611 10; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADMISSION OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to record my vote on the bill for the admission of Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLER. Then I wish to say if I had been here I would have voted in favor of the bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President.

CONTRACTS PAYABLE IN GOLD.

Mr. BROOKS. If there is no objection—and if there is I would instantly withdraw it—I move to take up from the Speaker's table the bill of the Senate allowing contracts to be made in gold. It is pretty important that it should pass.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. ALLISON objected.

SALE OF HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. JULIAN. I introduced a bill the other day providing for the sale of Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed.

The bill was ordered to be printed.

R. P. PARROTT.

On motion of Mr. ROBERTSON, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 303) for the relief of R. P. Parrott was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to correct the Journal. I am recorded as not voting on the bill for the removal of disabilities yesterday. I voted against the bill.

MILLIGAN CASE.

On motion of Mr. ARNELL, by unanimous consent, the report of the Secretary of War in regard to the Milligan case was taken from the Speaker's table, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the various votes by which bills had been referred this morning; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. JENCKES, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That three thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Retrenchment on the civil service of the United States be printed for the use of the House.

HAMPTON THOMPSON.

On motion of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 822) granting a pension to Hampton Thompson was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment of the Senate was to insert in line five, after the word "volunteers," the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of twenty-five dollars per annum."

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. MILLER. I think the amendment had better be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania. The amendment does not increase the pension allowed by the House bill. It only specifies the amount, which the House bill did not.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose to call for the regular order, but before doing so I wish to state to the House that by its order, being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, we take a recess from half past four until half past seven o'clock. I ask that by unanimous consent the House shall remain in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for fifteen minutes after half past four o'clock, gentlemen staying here or not as they please, in order to afford the gentleman who acts as chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union [Mr. BLAINE] an opportunity of delivering a ten-minutes' speech, not on the tax bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. No business to be done?

Mr. SCHENCK. No business to be done.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I would like to know what subject the gentleman is going to speak upon.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Would it not answer quite as well for the gentleman from Maine to have the use of the Hall for this purpose for some evening? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK?]

No objection was made.

IMPROVEMENT OF WESTERN RIVERS.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I ask unanimous consent to present the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The Clerk read as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, June 22, 1868.

The Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, on the 20th instant, unanimously adopted the following:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Chamber it is of vital importance to the commerce of the Ohio valley, and of the West generally, that the appropriations named in the river and harbor bill now before Congress for the works at the falls of the Ohio river and at the rapids in the Mississippi river, as well as for the general improvement of navigation in those rivers, should be granted at the present session; and that we earnestly request our Senators and Representatives to give these features of the bill prompt and efficient support.

JOHN A. GANO,

President Chamber of Commerce.

Hon. BENJAMIN EGGLESTON.

Mr. COBB. That can be presented under the rules. I object.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred by the Journal clerk.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I call for the regular order of business.

The House, under the order heretofore made, resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The section under consideration was the following:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits on which the tax prescribed by law has not been paid, a tax of sixty cents on each and every proof gallon, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or any person having possession thereof; and the tax on such spirits shall be collected on the whole number of gauge or wine gallons when below proof, and shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of proof spirit as defined in this act; and any fractional part of a gallon in excess of the number of gallons in a cask or package shall be taxed as a gallon. Every proprietor or possessor of a still, distillery, or distilling apparatus, and every person in any manner interested in the use of any such still, distillery, or distilling apparatus, shall be jointly and severally liable for the taxes imposed by law on the distilled spirits produced therefrom, and the tax shall be a first lien on the spirits distilled, the distillery used for distilling the same, the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein, and on the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, together with any building thereon, from the time said spirits are distilled until the said tax shall be paid.

The pending amendment was the one moved by Mr. VAN WYCK, to reduce the tax on whisky to fifty cents per gallon, instead of sixty cents, as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. Chairman, the country, with great unanimity, are demanding the reduction of the tax on whisky, and the committee in its proposition have but yielded to that demand. Some weeks ago, when I submitted a report exposing the machinations and power of the whisky ring to some, it seemed almost incredible. Examinations since then made show its power still more incredible. It has stalked through the antechambers of this Hall, through the corridors of the Senate, and controlled the avenues to the Executive Mansion. While it directed the action it defied the power of the Government. I then believed that the only way to destroy the ring and check the immense frauds and demoralization permeating that branch of the service was to reduce the tax to fifty cents per gallon; to take away its wealth by depriving it of the source of its ill-gotten gains, and that the tax be collected at the worm of the still, thereby dispensing with that great means of fraud—bonded warehouses. Everything I then stated has been more than vindicated, and conclusions then formed fully justified by subsequent facts. The whisky ring then opened its batteries and honored me with its denunciations through every channel they could reach. At that time it was announced the Ways and Means would oppose any reduction and that the temperance sentiment of the country would insist upon a high tax. Feeling, therefore, confident of the retention of power the ring became more insolent, stole larger sums from the revenue, commanded thousands unblushingly and almost publicly to manipulate legislation. So bold and arrogant had it become in this last act that the people everywhere demanded that this power should be destroyed, and as it could only be destroyed by being impoverished that the tax must necessarily be reduced. Such was my position when I made the report as a member of the Committee on Retrenchment, and such is my position to-day.

The tax as proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, at sixty cents per gallon, in my judgment, will fail to drive out illicit distillers of molasses. I think, therefore, it is necessary to reduce that tax to fifty cents per gallon, so that the chances of illicit distillation may be removed. The cost of the manufacture of whisky is from thirty-five to forty cents per gallon. Add a fifty-cent tax, and you make the whisky worth from eighty-five to ninety cents per gallon. Now, the cost of making molasses whisky is somewhere in the region of eighty to ninety cents per gallon.

Now, if we are to strike down illicit whisky by means of reducing the tax, I think it is necessary to reduce it so low that we may strike down every source of fraud and violation of the law. And in my judgment it is necessary to reduce this tax to fifty cents per gallon, in order to shut out the chances of illicit distillation. I would myself rather favor a reduction below fifty cents, as many members of the House favor, than to leave it above that sum. One thing is evident, this whisky ring must be destroyed, or the power of this Government to collect taxes is gone.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHENCK. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN WYCK] is to reduce the tax on whisky to ten cents less per gallon than the amount recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means. The gentleman who makes that motion places himself upon the same ground taken by the committee; he says that he believes it necessary to come down to fifty cents per gallon, in order to make it unprofitable to manufacture illicit whisky. I shall not extend the remarks I made upon that subject yesterday by adding to them now. But in reply to the argument of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN WYCK,] in favor of his amendment, I want to take advantage of this occasion to correct an error into which I was betrayed yesterday. While occupying the floor with explanations in relation to this tax upon distilled spirits, I was frequently interrupted and compelled to answer at the moment, gathering my thoughts for the purpose as I best could; and when some gentleman inquired what I believed would be the aggregate tax per gallon upon distilled spirits under this bill, by adding together the direct tax, the tax on capacity, the tax on sales, and all the special taxes, I replied that in my opinion it would amount to a dollar or more. I am now satisfied I was wrong in that statement. I was having in my mind some calculations made in my head as I proceeded, based upon a former supposition that the direct tax would be fixed at about seventy-five cents or a dollar per gallon. Now, the truth is that the aggregate tax provided for in this bill cannot amount to a dollar per gallon. I have made a careful calculation upon the subject which I desire to submit to the Committee of the Whole.

The direct tax, as all are aware, is sixty cents. Then there is a special tax of $200 on the first fifty barrels or less of a distillery, with four dollars per barrel on every additional barrel, a barrel being by law required to be forty gallons of proof-spirits. This would be an addition of ten cents per gallon.

It is a little difficult to state what would be the amount of the tax upon sales; but the tax at wholesale being three per cent. upon the sales, if you average whisky at $1.33 per gallon (and it might, perhaps, as a general average, come down to about that if the tax were reduced to only sixty or seventy cents,) three per cent. would amount to only four cents per gallon. The retail charges have been increased so that they, added to the wholesale, would make an equivalent of about five or from five to six cents per gallon.

The tax upon the capacity is five dollars per day upon the mashing and fermenting of a hundred bushels. A hundred bushels, at the average of twelve quarts to the bushel, would be three hundred gallons. This per diem tax having reference to the amount taxed would be equivalent to about a cent and a half per gallon. Thus the whole tax in the aggregate, saying nothing about the tax upon sales, (which is comparatively a small matter and hardly to be taken practically into the account,) would be from seventy-six and a half to seventy-seven cents per gallon. I am therefore enabled, after a careful calculation, to reply now to the question which was put to me, and to state to the House that if the direct tax be fixed at sixty cents, and the propositions of the committee in regard to all other taxes be adopted, whisky will be taxed at about from seventy-six and a half to seventy-seven cents per gallon.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I would like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five," so as to make the tax twenty-five cents per gallon. I wish to submit to the consideration of the committee some facts in connection with this subject, so far, at any rate, as the manufacturers' interest is concerned.

Peoria has long been noted as a great central point for the manufacture of high wines and alcohol. Peoria engaged largely in this manufacture long before the war. All along during the past twenty-five years it has been largely engaged in the manufacture of alcohol for the export trade. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] inquires what amount of tax Peoria has paid to the Government on distilled spirits under our revenue laws. My recollection is that it has paid about sixteen or seventeen million dollars of revenue, a very large sum. Up to four months ago some of the distilleries in the district which I represent continued to run, but during the last four months not a single gallon of whisky or high wines has been made in that district. The reason is that the manufacturers there cannot compete with the fraudulent manufacture of whisky or high wines in localities more favorable for the illicit traffic, such as New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and Cincinnati. There is only one method by which the honest, legitimate manufacturer in the West can be sustained, and that is by reducing the tax to such a point as does not amount to an offer of an immense premium to fraud, while at the same time enforcing your revenue laws with great strictness.

Now, sir, I have moved to reduce this tax to twenty-five cents, and I desire to give my reasons in favor of this proposition. In the first place, you have tried to collect the two-dollar tax, and you have failed. When the tax was sixty cents per gallon the Government collected more revenue than it has collected during the last year at the two-dollar tax. During the year when the tax was sixty cents the Government collected $28,000,000, while during the last year, although the tax has been more than trebled, only $13,000,000 have been collected. If the tax be reduced to twenty-five cents per gallon no export or bonded warehouses will be required. The tax can be collected everywhere at the distillery before the whisky has been removed from the premises. Thus all whisky, when it leaves the distillery, becomes free whisky in the market. Business men can then draw against it for the legitimate purposes of business upon the commission house with which they do business. Now, no such thing can be done. Not a house in the West can ship whisky to New York and make a draft against it for one dollar a barrel. The reason is that they can have no assurance the whisky will not be seized at Chicago, again at Buffalo, and so all along the route; and before the whisky gets to New York its entire value has been eaten up by costs and charges levied by the hungry and not always scrupulous agents of the Government.

Now, sir, by reducing the tax upon whisky you will revive the industries of the West connected with this business, and you will, moreover, put more money into the Treasury at twenty-five cents per gallon than at the present tax, provided you will lay a five per cent. tax upon the sales of wholesale dealers and upon retail dealers. It will, in my opinion, then be easy to collect $50,000,000 from whisky alone; and, beside that, it will do away, in all probability, with the corruption on the part of revenue officers and all others now engaged in defrauding the Government out of its tax.

Let me state some facts in regard to Peoria. It has $1,500,000 invested in distillery property alone. Before the enormous frauds were committed, which closed the distilleries in Peoria, they employed three thousand men, who earned from two to three millions a year as wages. They consumed more than five million bushels of grain per annum. Besides, they fed and fattened thousands of cattle and hogs which found a market in New York and Philadelphia. All this great interest has been virtually destroyed. Now, reduce the tax to twenty-five cents and you will rescue this interest from absolute ruin, and in all probability revive an interest which has contributed so largely to the local prosperity of Peoria, and contributed to the revenues of the Government nearly twenty million dollars.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to oppose the amendment of twenty-five cents, because I desire the whisky tax may be fixed at twenty cents; and the reason I have for this is not, as has been stated by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, lest the business should be done by illicit distilleries. So far as I can learn the difficulty is with the rectifiers and wholesale dealers. A tax, perhaps, of a larger amount could be obtained from distilleries; but I desire to put it so low as to get rid of transportation bonds—to get rid of that great source of fraud. At twenty cents, that will bring, with special taxes, the tax on whisky up to forty or forty-five cents—a little larger, I think, than the Committee of Ways and Means calculated.

Now, sir, I assume that whisky can be made for from twenty-five to thirty cents per gallon. If you lay a tax so large that the tax is larger than the cost of the article, then the tax becomes a matter of speculation; and as you exceed the cost of the article, you step by step encourage evasion of the tax. That is the reason you cannot collect the present tax on whisky. A man can make his whisky for twenty cents a proof-gallon of the purest quality. If he can save one gallon out of ten he gets even by fraud; if he can save two out of ten he makes a profit. For that reason it is impossible to collect the tax. If you bring down the tax so a man to get a dollar has to risk a dollar, then the tax will be paid and collected. If he risks one dollar to get one, then it is a mere lottery. With the tax at sixty cents, as fixed by the Committee of Ways and Means, he risks one dollar to get three; and, at the same time, the distiller in the West cannot go on and pay his tax before he transports his liquor. Therefore, if you inaugurate the tax at sixty cents, you inaugurate a system of transportation bonds, which are the great source of fraud.

There is another reason why I want this tax brought down. Let me say now if you tax at sixty cents, with special taxes making it about eighty cents, your whisky will stand as it now does. With two dollars a gallon we do not collect more than a dollar or ninety cents. The reason is the taxes will not be paid. But if you put it at twenty, twenty-five, or thirty cents you can collect it. There will be more money paid over, and what is of still more consequence, you break down the whisky interest—I will not say ring—which is too strong for your Government to-day. You break up the corruption fund which will be collected from the people by the whisky influence to be used against the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw the amendment for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to renew it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not renew the amendment, but will offer another, to insert fifty-five instead of sixty. I only desire to offer this for the purpose of saying a word or two to the committee. And I desire here in advance to warn members against the danger of going to another extreme. Some members seem disposed to put the tax down to twenty or twenty-five cents a gallon on distilled spirits. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURLER] is mistaken in his calculation as to the amount of revenue we can raise out of distilled spirits by this bill. I take it for granted the Committee of Ways and Means have adopted all the incidental taxation that it is possible to impose upon distilled spirits, to wit: a special tax on the distillery, a special per diem tax, and a tax on sales. Now, the chairman of the committee has presented an estimate of the incidental tax upon this article. I believe the chairman is too high in this estimate. Indirect taxes, before the spirits are put upon the market, will not exceed six cents per gallon, so that if the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Massachusetts should prevail it will make the tax less than forty cents per gallon, which, taking the very highest possible estimate of the quantity, would only amount to $30,000,000 per annum or less.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the amount of tax that we ought to realize on distilled spirits should not be less than $50,000,000. The people of this country will not rest satisfied with a less amount raised from that source. But it is impossible to realize more than from twenty-five to thirty million dollars if you put your tax at twenty-five cents or less per gallon. Now, gentlemen say they desire to reduce this tax to a point so low that we can dispense with all transportation in bond. I wish to call the attention of the committee to this question of transportation in bond. The bill as presented to the House prohibits transportation in bond except for exportation, and the exportation of distilled spirits is necessarily confined to two distinct articles, namely, alcohol and rum, one being exported almost entirely from the city of Boston and the other from New York. Gentlemen seem to forget that we have in this bill a provision which, while it is intended to protect, and must in a very great degree protect, honest and fair men who are engaged in the business of distilling, requires this tax to be collected at the distillery warehouse, and that at the warehouse there shall be put on each barrel or package a stamp indicating the number of gallons contained in it and that the tax has been paid thereon. So I apprehend that the honest distiller can have no difficulty in securing from his banker, or from those who advance him money, the amount of money required upon that barrel or package when he exhibits it with the revenue stamp placed there by the collector of the district, showing that the tax has been paid.

Now the cost of producing a gallon of spirits from corn is twenty-five cents, which makes the barrel cost about ten dollars. Now, a tax of sixty cents will make about twenty-four dollars a barrel.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to oppose the amendment. I wish to say in the outset that I have, for three years, been of the opinion, as I am to-day, that it is folly for Congress to attempt to collect a tax of two dollars a gallon on distilled spirits. Whenever I have had an opportunity to vote on this question, whether in the Committee of Ways and Means or in this House, I believe my vote will be found recorded in favor of the reduction of the tax. But at this time I suppose at least a majority of the people agree that the hope of collecting two dollars is gone. The only question, then, is where we ought to put the rate. The Committee of Ways and Means propose to reduce it on the direct tax to sixty cents per gallon, but let it be understood that the committee have raised the tax in the various forms of special, per cent., and per diem taxes to the amount of sixteen and a quarter cents per gallon. All the special taxes now collected on spirits under the law will not amount to more than one quarter of one cent per gallon. Therefore, the sixteen and a quarter cents which the committee have added in the way of special taxes may be considered, with the exception of the quarter of a cent, as a clear addition to the tax on whisky. In other words, while they have reduced the direct tax from two dollars a gallon to sixty cents, they have increased the indirect taxes sixteen cents a gallon, making a tax of seventy-six and a quarter cents per gallon, according to the bill before us. The prevailing reason in the minds of all members here why we should reduce the tax is the necessity of breaking up the great power of the whisky ring; that combination which defrauds the revenue and prevents us from getting revenue on more than one gallon in ten. The only practical question of statesmanship for us to consider is whether seventy-six and a quarter cents is too high a tax to enable us completely and effectually to break up the combination.

I believe it is too high, and I am in favor of putting the direct tax down to fifty cents, but not lower. Now, I am aware that the precise amount of tax which will best meet the necessities of this case cannot be determined with the certainty with which we settle questions that depend on general principles. Without a full exhibit of the minute details, I am of the opinion that fifty cents direct tax can be collected without much fraud. I may not be able to give sufficient reasons to satisfy gentlemen why that is my faith; certainly I cannot do it in five minutes. But I am persuaded that a tax of seventy-six and a quarter cents on whisky, with all the opportunities that have been so long enjoyed, and the skill that has been acquired by experts in fraud, will be too much. As my colleague suggests, they have diffused the direct tax. That is wise, and we are pretty certain to get the sixteen and a quarter cents, and I would not disturb a single item of those special taxes so far as I have yet considered them. But I believe that if the committee will take fifty cents as the rate, and so far reduce the incentives to fraud and the temptation to rascality, with the additional guards thrown around the revenue in this bill in the machinery for collecting it, we shall be reasonably safe.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty cents" and inserting "forty cents." I do so because I believe that at that figure we will collect more revenue than at any other that can be inserted. I believe that with the tax direct and indirect, amounting to nearly eighty cents on the gallon, the frauds will be almost as large in gallons as it is with the present tax. The question put by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] to his colleague [Mr. ALLISON] during my absence involved the whole gist of the matter. I read it at my home. He interrogated his colleague as to whether the thing he was driving at was not to get grain whisky at such a price that it and the tax would be less than the price of molasses whisky without the tax, and there he hit the nail upon the head. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] says it hit Philadelphia. Not Philadelphia, but the scoundrels of the country who have been poured into Philadelphia to drive her old business men of integrity out of it. It hits New York; it hits Chicago; it hits the unconvicted felons, who, as I had occasion to say in quoting the language of an officer of the revenue, are creatures who would be committing burglary and highway robbery, or expiating their crimes in the penitentiary, if they did not find it more profitable and safe to be cheating the Government and the community in illicit distillation. Now, a reduction of the tax to sixty cents would diminish to some extent the price of molasses, and would consequently diminish the price at which molasses whisky can be produced. Ten cents above fifty cents is a mere bonus to fraud; a mere payment of millions to scoundrels to cheat the Government of other millions and tens of millions, and I fear that the difference between forty and fifty cents would operate to that effect.

Now, let us, while we are correcting this evil, do it effectually. Do not let us follow the unwise philosophy of a humane man, who was too kind-hearted to take all the dog's tail off at one swoop and took a little piece off each day. Do not for the next year leave the morals and the revenues of the country a prey to the men who hold them both at their mercy under the patronage of the Administration, but let us strike a point which will give us revenue enough for the Government, as forty cents per gallon, with the additional sixteen and a quarter cents, will do. The last day I was in the House I learned from a member from New York that he had the day before, in the ordinary course of business, shipped alcohol from New York to the western part of Kansas. Now, let us make this so that nature will have some influence in regulating this important branch of trade, so that the West may produce whisky where the corn is grown.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PRUYN. When I was a member of the Committee of Ways and Means in the Thirty-Eighth Congress, with two or three of my associates on that committee, I urged very warmly the propriety of reducing the then proposed tax of two dollars per gallon to one dollar. We failed in our efforts to do so, yet the result has proved just what was predicted at that time by the opponents of a large and heavy tax. No Government ever offered a greater bounty to fraud, perjury, and all kinds of iniquity than this Government did when it established the whisky tax at two dollars per gallon. It was a tax that all persons, looking at the value of the article, had told us never could be collected, never would be paid, but would be evaded at all times and under all circumstances. It was a tax that broke down honest distilleries and encouraged those who were dishonest in the illicit distillation of spirits.

I am glad that the Committee of Ways and Means have yielded at last to the acknowledged sentiment of the House and of the country, and have proposed to make this tax sixty cents instead of two dollars per gallon. And under a code of the most extraordinary character, such as is now contained in this bill, imposing fines and penalties and requisitions such as a man can hardly comply with, the tax is increased, as the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. SCHENCK] says, about sixteen or seventeen cents per gallon; making the whole tax some seventy-six or seventy-seven cents per gallon.

Now, the whole amount of whisky manufactured in the country at the present time, as I am assured by those well informed upon the subject, is about one hundred million gallons per year; perhaps a little more, and perhaps a little less. With the proposed tax we should receive a revenue from whisky of about seventy-five million dollars per annum.

Now, it is very difficult to decide just where the point is to which we can go with safety and collect the tax, and find that it will not be evaded by the distillers. My own impression is that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN WYCK] who has moved to reduce this tax to fifty cents per gallon, has just about hit the right point. And for one I am prepared, with the information I now possess upon the subject, to vote for fifty cents per gallon, believing that to be a tax which can be collected. If to that amount you add the other taxes of seventeen cents per gallon, you will have a tax of sixty-seven cents per gallon, yielding a revenue of about sixty-seven million dollars per annum; a very large revenue when contrasted with the ten, twelve, or fifteen million dollars per year now collected, an amount which will do very much, indeed, to strengthen the Treasury and the resources, character, and financial condition of this country.

I should therefore be very glad to give my vote to fix the tax upon distilled spirits at fifty cents per gallon, believing that, on the whole, to be the best point on which we can settle and dispose of this matter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JUDD. I renew the amendment to the amendment for the purpose of explaining in a very few words my conviction and belief. I observe, from the course of the discussion this morning, that there is a very general concurrence of sentiment that the tax on distilled spirits as at present fixed by law cannot be collected. Discreditable as that may be to the parties really responsible for this condition of affairs, it is a condition not to be disregarded in the framing of our revenue laws. While my conviction is that the larger part of these frauds upon the Government are attributable to the administration of the present law and the executive department of the Government, I cannot exclude entirely from my consideration the fact that the high rate of taxation and the enormous profits derived from the violation of law has been one proof of the causes that induced the present position. My conviction is that if this law and its enforcement were a private enterprise men honest to execute would be found. If the rules of honesty and business capacity, that prevail ordinarily among our business men, were applied to the execution of the present law, instead of receiving from this source only about fourteen million dollars during the past year the Government would have received $100,000,000. But the history of the country, and its administration during the last year shows, distinctly and clearly, that under the present system we were not to collect the present tax. Impunity induces boldness, and we are degenerating daily, and the influence of this demoralization is extending wider and wider; and the combinations to defeat the execution of revenue laws are growing stronger. The skill displayed in violating law if applied to any honest calling would entitle the possessors to honor and renown. We cannot change the Administration, as has been recently demonstrated, and the question recurs can we do anything, so as first, to prevent in any degree these frauds upon the Government, and secondly, to obtain the largest amount of revenue for the Government. It is perfectly evident that the tax of two dollars has not given us fifteen cents per gallon during the last year. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PRYOR] says not five cents. My desire was to state it large enough, so that if there was any error it would be against my position and not in its favor. Hence no man should be alarmed at the proposition of my colleague from Peoria [Mr. INGERSOLL] to reduce the tax to twenty-five cents, if by reducing the tax to that figure we shall do something towards restoring the moral tone of those dealing in this article, by removing the temptation to defraud. At that price the Government will obtain more revenue than it has obtained during the last year at the present rate of two dollars as fixed by the present law.

I say, then, let us, in accomplishing these objects, cut off, according to the illustration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] the entire tail at once. Let us not make another experiment upon this question. If it is doubtful whether a specific tax of sixty cents a gallon, with the additional taxes by way of licenses, &c., provided for in this bill will have the effect of preventing these frauds and realizing the proper amount of the revenue, let us go below sixty cents, and my judgment, Mr. Chairman, is, that if both forms of taxation when computed together make a tax of seventy-six cents on a gallon, as estimated by the chairman, [Mr. SCHENCK,] there is a margin of profit to the fraudulent that will continue the system in operation, and that we shall have gained nothing for the Government. The only effect is in a measure to reduce the profits of the parties concerned in defrauding the Government. I think that a tax amounting in the whole to fifty cents per gallon is as high as a safe collection of the revenue will warrant. The specific levy of thirty-five cents, adding to that the license, will, in my view, accomplish what is desired by this bill, that is, take away the temptation for fraud and give the Government a fair income from this article of luxury. In the present situation of the country it is safer, Mr. Chairman, to err on the side of reduction. If things continue as they have been this source of revenue will substantially cease. At any rate, the experiment must be made, and the fears expressed that there will not be revenue enough to meet the wants of the country will be dismissed in consideration of the condition of the receipts from this source. My desire is that we shall so frame this bill as to fix the entire levy, whether by special tax or otherwise, at an amount not exceeding fifty cents. To do this we must, according to the estimates made by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, as to the amount from licenses, &c., reduce the special tax to about thirty-five cents. If you add to that the amount of the license tax, as provided in this bill, you have a rate of about fifty cents per gallon. And I repeat again, Mr. Chairman, that my belief is that unless we destroy illicit distillation and put an end to these frauds, we shall get no revenue, and that the only sure method under the control of the legislative department of the Government is to reduce the taxes.

Mr. SCHENCK. I observe that there is manifested by the House a good deal of harmony on this subject, not only among members, but between the Committee of the Whole and the Committee of Ways and Means. The Committee of Ways and Means have made a recommendation to the House of sixty cents as the amount of the direct tax. They do not ask to have it considered in any other light than as a recommendation. They will be perfectly satisfied with any figure that the House may, in its discretion, think it wisest to fix. Indeed, the committee were somewhat divided upon the subject, some favoring a tax a little below sixty cents, and others a tax a little above that amount. The common purpose we all had in view was to fix an amount of tax which shall be collected, and which in process of being collected shall not be subject to those evasions and frauds which have been the disgrace of the country.

It is not worth our while, however, to stand here kicking at the "whisky ring" or fighting it, because it is very hard to ascertain what that ring is. I sometimes doubt whether it really has an existence as an organization. It is a sort of myth. In saying this I do not mean to be understood as saying that there is not a band of rascals in the country making money by frauds in reference to whisky; but these men, so far as I have been able to discover, while they are all ready to cheat the Government, are almost all ready at the same time to cheat each other. If there is anything that a distiller or a whisky dealer engaged in these frauds suspect more than anything else it is that the revenue officer with whom he is colluding will cheat him; and the revenue officer who is trying to get blackmail is just about as fearful that the distiller or the dealer from whom he expects to get it will cheat him in the course of their transactions. We, therefore, have them all to fight; and whether you call them a "whisky ring" or by any other name, there is a large number of dishonest persons throughout the country, official and unofficial, against whom we have to protect the Treasury. How shall we do it? I say—and we all seem to be agreed upon the point—by putting the direct tax low enough to take away the inducements to this fraud. What shall be the amount? The reason I have declared my willingness to assent to a tax of fifty cents is that the great proportion of the present fraud comes from the distillation of spirits from molasses. Now, it takes a gallon and a half of molasses to make a gallon of spirits; and the present price of molasses being forty-five cents per gallon, it requires sixty-seven and a half cents worth of molasses to make a gallon of spirits. It will cost something like ten cents to manufacture it, which brings it to seventy-seven and a quarter cents. You cannot make a gallon of these fraudulent spirits from molasses and sell it in the market for less than about eighty or eighty-eight cents. It may become lower hereafter; but this being the case, I doubt whether we have gone too high in fixing sixty cents. If the House prefer fifty cents as the direct tax on whisky, I will suggest when we come to that point, to increase the tax upon capacity.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HARDING. I move to strike out twenty-five cents, and in lieu of it to insert twenty-six cents.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the committee, while I am as anxious to obtain a large amount of revenue from this source as any gentleman upon this floor, I am fully convinced, after considerable observation bestowed on this subject during the last three or four years, living, as I do, in the neighborhood of distilleries, that no considerable amount can ever be realized from the tax upon distilled spirits if we put this tax at a higher figure than twenty-five or thirty cents.

Now, sir, before the war, as will be remembered by gentlemen who hear me, whisky or alcohol sold for about sixteen cents per gallon by wholesale. The tax of sixty cents now proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means is about four times what the article sold for previous to the war. It is certainly, at least, three times the value of the article. This is an inducement to fraud. Where a man has fair remuneration for honest labor there is no inducement to perpetrate fraud; but fraud upon the revenue is invited where the tax is so much greater than the cost of the production of the article itself. If we wish to collect the revenue from this source we must reduce the tax to the sum I have stated. While I have great confidence in the ingenuity with which the committee have framed this bill, and while I approve the means of distributing the tax, taxing the capacity, taxing the barrel, taxing the product, and so on, yet, sir, I wish to say that, in my judgment, it does not prevent fraud. We are to have a system of stamps. Stamps are to be put upon the barrels. How do they prevent parties from drawing out the contents of the barrel and filling it with illicit whisky? I confess I do not see how that can be prevented by this system of stamps. I am of the opinion that the tax can only be collected at the distillery. The moment you permit the party to remove the whisky from the distillery without paying the tax and to allow it to be transported in bond that moment you open the door to fraud. We have had experience enough already on that point. If you permit the whisky to go in the cars for exportation, what opportunity is there for fraud? What opportunity for changing the barrels? They will have depots where that can be done.

Why, sir, our distilleries in Illinois did a profitable business until we allowed the transportation of whisky in bonds without paying the tax. The moment that was allowed our distilleries in Peoria were closed. How they continued up to that time I know not.

In the brief time allowed me I can only throw out a few disconnected ideas. There are, Mr. Chairman, millions of money invested in the manufacture of distilled spirits. Let us put this tax so low that the men interested in this illicit distillation will have to give it up; for, sir, it costs more to manufacture whisky in an illicit way than in the regular and legal mode. Let us have the honest manufacture protected against the illicit distilleries. Then the Government will collect more revenue; and that can only be done by reducing the tax.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment for the purpose of having an opportunity of giving my views in reference to the tax upon distilled spirits. We attempted, sir, at one time to prevent frauds in distilled spirits in this country by trying, if possible, to get the Administration to appoint none but honest men for the collection of the revenue. I made the best fight I could on that subject, but failed. For that I have received any amount of abuse, for which, however, I care nothing. They have even gone so far as to employ a man who has vilified me all winter in my own State and who is now running around this city like a vulture.

But, sir, becoming satisfied that this cannot be done, then what is the next best thing for us to do in order that the Government shall not be defrauded of all the revenue? Believing that the House have determined to reduce the tax, I desire to recur to the argument that I made on the first occasion, which was that I was in favor of collecting it at the distillery, so that the distiller himself shall be willing to pay it rather than employ dishonest means of evading the law.

Now, sir, the committee have reported sixty cents. As a matter of course I agree to that report, and am willing to stand by it if the House so agree. But I say now that if the additional tax is an inducement to fraud I am in favor of reducing it to less than that. I prefer myself to fix fifty cents, although, so far as the report of the committee is concerned, I have concurred in it. With this reduced taxation there will be no inducement to fraud.

Now, sir, I have never been in favor of giving the whisky men—the rings, as they are termed, and perhaps correctly—more advantage under the law than they ask themselves. If there is a whisky ring—and I have no doubt of it myself, at least there is some organization of the kind, though it may not be a ring—let us give them no more than they ask. How, then, are we to destroy them? Now, I was in favor last winter of keeping the tax at two dollars. Why? Because we have twenty-five million gallons in bond which would give us a revenue of $50,000,000. I was desirous of having that $50,000,000 paid on those spirits in bond before we reduce the tax. That was one reason why I advocated retaining the present tax. But as it seems the tax is to be reduced, I want to get as much as I can from whisky in bond and whisky out of bond. At twenty cents we would get very little, at thirty cents more, at forty cents more, and at fifty cents still more. But with even fifty cents we will only get $12,500,000 on the amount of spirits in bond. I am in favor of fifty cents, but at whatever sum the tax is fixed I am in favor of collecting it at the distillery.

That is my theory. But I believe, from what I have learned, that it is the best plan. When you allow transportation in bond for any purpose whatever you allow an opportunity for fraud. My friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] knows that from his own town over eight hundred barrels were transported last year to New York which never paid one dollar of tax.

-[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLER rose, and was recognized by the Chair, but yielded to Mr. LOGAN, who said: I move to amend by striking out sixty and inserting forty-five.

Mr. EGGLESTON. How did the gentleman keep the floor?

Mr. LOGAN. If the gentleman understood parliamentary rules he could keep it in the same way. [Laughter.] I was speaking of eight hundred barrels upon which no tax was ever paid, because it was transported by some roundabout way, and just after it was supposed to reach the warehouse the warehouse was burned up and the whisky with it, as was alleged. Two days after it started from Dubuque it is said to have reached the warehouse. That was impossible, as everybody knows—as the evidence shows. We try in vain to ferret out these frauds. Thousands have been committed in the same way.

Now they talk about the whisky ring. Last winter there was a whisky convention in Washington city, represented by people from Missouri, Illinois, and every State in the Union where whisky is distilled. Mr. Curtis, of my own State, was president of that convention. They resolved first that—

“In order to confine the opportunities of fraud to as small a space as possible and avoid the multiplication of expensive officials, we recommend that the tax be assessed and paid at the still, or when the spirits leave warehouse class ‘A,’ and that class ‘B’ warehouses be entirely abolished.”

The convention made that recommendation to us last winter.

Sir, I have been in favor of collecting the tax at the distillery from the time I knew anything about the matter, and I am for it to-day. I was told by an attorney of the whisky men the other day that if I dared to vote against transportation in bond they would send a man to Congress next time who would vote for it. I say let them do it. So far as I am concerned I shall not vote for anything that I think wrong. If the whisky ring is strong enough to make this Congress do just as they have a mind to, so be it. But I do not believe any such thing. I do not believe there is a member of Congress controlled by any such influence. These slanders that are afloat through the country are the slanders of penny-a-liners who are employed to slander and bedaub the reputations of men in this House. But let us act on a principle that is sensible. Let us collect the tax—let it be sixty, fifty, forty, or thirty cents, as it may be—at the distillery, and have no transportation in bond, and then you will get your tax, and you will never do it in any other way.

An argument is made here that western men will be crippled by that measure. It is no such thing. I will tell you what the effect will be on the West. The moment you collect the tax at the distillery warehouse and pass a bill forfeiting the real estate in case of fraud you drive the distilleries to the side of the cornfields, which is the proper and legitimate place for them to be. That will be the effect of it. When you collect the tax at the distillery you drive them from the places where frauds are committed and put them where frauds cannot be committed. That will be the effect, and hence I am for that principle.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to read another resolution of this whisky convention. They resolved that inasmuch as the tax was likely to be reduced to fifty cents a gallon it should be collected at the distillery with a stamp; and they say “that any barrel of distilled spirits found leaving a distillery or class ‘A’ warehouse, without such stamp, should be condemned and destroyed and the distiller fined $300 for each barrel; and that any person who shall buy an unstamped barrel of crude distilled spirits should be liable to the same penalties as the distiller.”

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLER obtained the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee that all debate upon this section shall close in fifteen minutes.

Mr. BOUTWELL, Mr. COVODE, Mr. INGERSOLL, and others objected.

Mr. SCHENCK. Well, as gentlemen seem to be full of the subject, let the debate go on.

Mr. COVODE. I represent a great whisky district, and I want to say something before the debate is closed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, it cannot be expected that within the brief period allowed members to discuss this section of the bill under consideration that any one member can present his views fully. The question under this section is as to the amount of tax to be imposed on distillation of spirits. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that a tax of two dollars per gallon on an article that costs but thirty cents to manufacture appears to be exorbitant, and is higher than imposed in any other country save that of Great Britain and, perhaps, Russia. The amount of whisky annually manufactured in the United States is variously estimated; some make it fifty million gallons, others seventy-five million, and others even as high as one hundred million gallons. The able Commissioner of Internal Revenue, (Mr. Rollins,) in his last annual report, page 18, says, that “after careful consideration of the facts presented, and after conference with many of the principal dealers and manufacturers from all sections of the country, the commissioners are of opinion that with the maintenance of the present tax of two dollars per gallon the quantity of distilled spirits which may be expected to be produced and rendered subject to assessment for the immediate future will be from forty-two to forty-five million gallons.” In 1865 the Government realized near sixteen million dollars; in 1866, over twenty-nine million dollars; in 1867, over twenty-eight million dollars, and the present year, from returns already made, it will exceed but little over thirteen million dollars at two dollars per gallon; and of that the expense of collecting will be near three million dollars. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, in the doctrine contended on this floor that two dollars tax per gallon cannot be collected. I am satisfied if honest men were selected as revenue officers its collection could be enforced; still I admit that the enormous tax of two dollars per gallon is an incentive to commit frauds, and therefore am in favor of reducing the tax, believing that by doing so the Government will realize a greater amount of revenue from whisky tax. But I am opposed to making the tax less than fifty cents per gallon. Some of the gentlemen contend that it ought to be reduced as low as twenty-five cents. Such a reduction, in my opinion, would be wrong and greatly reduce the revenue, and the result would be that Congress would find it necessary shortly to raise it again. Much has been said in regard to the “whisky ring.” Mr. Chairman, the only effective means, in my opinion, to thwart the frauds of that ring is to put the tax at a reasonable rate, say fifty or sixty cents per gallon, and enforce the collection by stringent laws. I agree, Mr. Chairman, with the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] that the tax ought to be collected at the distillery. One great drawback to the revenue is the numerous useless officers employed, which absorbs a large amount of the revenue, and this abuse ought to be corrected at once. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would say to the committee let us fix the tax at a fair rate, have no more officers employed than absolutely necessary, and I have no doubt we will realize from distilled spirits from thirty to thirty-five million dollars per annum.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am not among those who can say “I told you so,” when we put this tax at two dollars per gallon, for I did not then suppose there was so much rascality and corruption in the country as the sequel has proved to be the case. But I am now a thorough convert to the propriety of reducing this tax so far, after securing the revenue, as to prevent the demoralization and corruption in the country.

The only question now before the House—for I believe members are generally in favor of the reduction of the tax now imposed—is, how low shall we reduce the tax? Now, I do not believe with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that we should reduce the tax so low that the cost of producing grain whisky, with the tax added, shall be as low as the cost of producing molasses whisky without the tax.

Now, crime is always expensive, and we should take that fact in consideration. A man does not steal a little when he risks a great deal of punishment. He will not set up a still in a secret place, and cannot afford to buy up revenue officers, and manufacture molasses whisky simply for what it costs to buy the molasses and make the whisky from it. He must make a large margin of profit before he will run the risk of punishment and pay the amount he must for purposes of corruption.

Now, it seems to me that a tax of fifty cents per gallon, the sum resolved upon by the convention of honest distillers last winter—as they called themselves, and I know nothing to the contrary—is about the right figure.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Allow me to correct my colleague. The amount recommended by the convention of distillers was twenty-five cents per gallon.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. They were first satisfied with a tax of fifty cents per gallon. I remember a conversation I had with some members of that convention; and while they advocated reducing the tax to twenty-five cents per gallon, yet they told me that they could stand fifty cents per gallon; and that at fifty cents per gallon they thought the fraudulent distiller in New York, Philadelphia, or elsewhere could not compete with them. They said that when they created their distilleries beside the corn-cribs, where the corn is cheap, the man in New York could not import the corn and distill the whisky, cheat the Government out of the tax, and make money by it.

I would then reduce the tax to fifty cents per gallon, and make clean, square work of it, and then put a tax of a dollar for every two gallons, or twenty dollars per barrel, and then I would increase the tax on sales to five per cent. That I think would be easily collected, and it seems to me we could realize the whole tax, or very nearly the whole of it, at those rates of taxation, which would realize a very good revenue to the country. I have thus given my views upon this subject very briefly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLER. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PILE. I renew the amendment to the amendment. If the city I represent, and the millions of grain growers who contribute to the trade and commerce of that city were not so vitally interested in this question of the tax on whisky and the production of whisky in this country, I should not presume to say a single word on this subject. From the discussion this morning I think it is apparent that three results are intended to be reached by every member who has participated therein. The first object sought is that the corrupt combination which now controls the manufacture of and trade in whisky shall be thoroughly and effectually broken up. The second is that we shall prevent the continued distillation of molasses, and restore the production of this article to the grain of the West, and that its manufacture shall be carried on in localities where nature and the production of the grain has furnished the greatest facilities. These two objects being accomplished, we then desire that there should be collected from distilled spirits the largest amount of revenue that can possibly be secured. To attain this object, while at the same time effectually breaking up these corrupt combinations and restoring the production of this article to the distillation of grain and to localities from which it has been transferred by the frauds that have prevailed for the last three years, we should, I think, make the tax not more than forty cents.

The highest rate now named is, I believe, sixty cents, the lowest twenty, and I ask the attention of the committee to this single consideration: that it is of far more importance that these corrupt combinations be broken up, and the production of this article restored to the distillation of grain and to the localities where the grain is produced, than to secure to the Government the difference in revenue between thirty cents and fifty cents or forty cents and sixty cents; and if there is a difference of opinion among those who have given careful consideration to the subject as to whether a tax of forty or sixty cents will most effectually secure these objects, then it seems to me wiser that we should fix the lower figure than that we should incur any risk of the continuation of these corrupt combinations. If we fix the specific tax at forty cents, and then increase the tax, as I am in favor of increasing it, upon the fermenting capacity of the still from four to ten dollars per barrel, it will make the aggregate tax sixty to sixty-two and a half cents; five to eight cents lower than the amount to which the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means thinks it could be raised, and yet prevent the distillation of whisky from molasses and imported articles. We had better fix the rate six, eight, ten, or even fifteen cents below this figure than incur the slightest risk of the continuation of the distillation of spirits in small distilleries, hidden away in garrets and cellars. If we reduce the tax to forty cents, twenty cents below the figure fixed by the committee, the loss of revenue to the Government will not be important as compared with the risk of continuing for ten or twelve months longer the corrupt combinations that now control the manufacture of this article, defrauding the Government, corrupting the morals of the people, and preventing the collection of the revenue. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HIGBY. I renew the amendment. I rise rather for the purpose of seeking information than to attempt to impart it. In the course of the debate this morning the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] made the statement that, in addition to the tax of sixty cents a gallon, there is provided in the bill a tax of sixteen and a half cents not provided for in the present law. I ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether that is the fact?

Mr. SCHENCK. I think that is substantially the case. Under the present law there is no other tax than the two dollars per gallon except the tax on the sales, which, being only one tenth of one per cent. on the amount above $25,000, amounts to next to nothing, and a small special tax of $200 upon distillers.

Mr. HIGBY. Then this bill provides virtually for a taxation of seventy-six and a half cents as against two dollars under the present law. Mr. Chairman, from the earliest moment of the imposition of the tax upon this article of whisky, I believe in the Thirty-Eighth Congress, I have been in favor of the sum of fifty cents, together with the member from Ohio and many other members of the House at that time. And I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] who quoted from the proceedings of a certain gathering in favor of the reduction of the tax to fifty cents per gallon, that that was not an original idea with that body of men, for there has been a certain number of the members of the Thirty-Eighth and Thirty-Ninth Congresses who have always been of the opinion that the tax upon whisky should not be more than fifty cents. If that body of men were dishonest men and trying to defraud the Government it seems to me it would be their object to get the tax up to the highest figure, when they would have the opportunity to make more money than to have it reduced to the lowest figure.

I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, I had intended to sustain the committee in fixing the tax at sixty cents per gallon, although my own idea is that fifty cents is as high as the tax ought to be. If there is to be added sixteen and a half cents to the sixty cents, making seventy-six and a half cents per gallon as an offset against two dollars a gallon, it seems to me we ought to come to the direct tax of fifty cents a gallon upon distilled spirits. That, in my judgment, is what the tax ought to be.

In reply to what has been said, that it will be impossible to collect this tax, I will say we ought certainly to make the experiment of the machinery contained in the present bill. If it is not strong enough let us make the machinery stronger, and let us see whether we can collect this amount of fifty cents. If we find it is not strong enough, then when Congress meets again next December we can make it stronger and see whether we cannot defeat those who are defrauding the Government.

It seems to me that we ought never to make a great difference between the cost of the article manufactured and the tax imposed upon it. If the tax be many times more than the cost of the article it will leave room for fraud, and there is no more ingenious people than the American people in this and in all other respects.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HIGBY. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Chairman, I understand the question before the committee, if the amendment to the amendment were withdrawn, would be the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN WYCK] to the tax fixed by the Committee of Ways and Means. I wish to know whether I am right in that statement?

The CHAIRMAN. That is so. If there be no amendment to the amendment pending then the question will be on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAINE. The gentleman from California has withdrawn the amendment to the amendment, and I now propose an amendment to the amendment on which I shall ask for a vote of the House. I propose to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York by fixing the tax at thirty-five cents per gallon. The chairman of the committee informs us that in addition to sixty cents per gallon there are other taxes imposed by the bill which, if the per gallon tax is fixed at sixty cents, amount in the aggregate to sixteen and a quarter cents per gallon, raising the tax to seventy-six and a quarter cents per gallon. If we put the tax at thirty-five cents then there will be added ten cents of the tax of four dollars on the barrel of forty gallons, three cents of tax in the shape of the three per cent. tax on sales at wholesale, one cent retail charges, and one cent and one quarter of tax of five dollars on capacity per day of mash, in all fifteen and a quarter to be added to thirty-five cents, making fifty and a quarter cents. I have made up my mind that fifty cents would be a fair tax. My amendment will make it almost exactly fifty cents. I should be willing to vote for a higher tax, but I should be unwilling to vote for a lower tax than thirty-five cents in addition to the fifteen and a quarter cents proposed by the bill. I shall ask for a vote on my amendment of thirty-five cents which, with the fifteen and a quarter cents, will make the aggregate tax fifty and a quarter cents.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I wish to renew the amendment to reduce the tax to twenty-five cents. I am opposed to the other amendment. I am from a district which pays more tax than any in the United States, with the exception of one or two, and yet there is not a distillery in the district. I am satisfied from what I have heard on this floor this morning that the object of members of the committee is to get as much money out of the whisky tax as they can. Now, if the Committee of Ways and Means had taken the course which I think they ought to have taken last November, and started this machinery then, we would have now been some thirteen or fourteen million dollars better off than we are. I am willing to shoulder a portion of the blame myself. But I sent two or three resolutions to the committee some time ago, one of them proposing to farm out the manufacture of whisky in this country. In that way I believe we could realize sixty million dollars per annum from the manufacture of distilled spirits.

Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire. Does the gentleman know of any civilized Government that ever farmed out the manufacture of spirits?

Mr. EGGLESTON. I know of no civilized or uncivilized country that does not collect the tax on spirits better than we are doing now. There is no country on earth that would let its revenue system be run as ours has been run in reference to the collection of this tax. Frauds have been committed all over the United States, under the eyes of the revenue department and of members of Congress. Remonstrances have been made against it, but it has gone on until the country has become demoralized in consequence of the failure to collect the tax.

Now, sir, if the committee will cut off the manufacture on whisky entirely, we would realize more money in the next six months than we have for the last six months. I suppose my friend from New Hampshire would say that no civilized country would do that. But, sir, if you cut off the manufacture for six months you would get the tax of two dollars a gallon on what is now in bond, and that would give you $50,000,000.

My opinion is we should make it twenty-five cents per gallon and collect it at the distillery. Then you collect it on all that is made, and you would have more revenue than you get in the way it is running now. I am satisfied that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is as well acquainted with the whisky question as any gentleman on this floor, because he is surrounded by distilleries in his district, where there are more of them, perhaps, than in any other district in the United States. I have a high appreciation of his opinion on this question. But, sir, I am satisfied the country is running to ruin by letting the present system run on in the way it is going, and I advise the chairman of the committee to get this bill out of the Committee of the Whole as soon as possible, with the tax fixed at twenty-five cents a gallon, or at all events reducing it; I am not particular as to the exact amount; put the previous question on it, and pass it as soon as possible. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are being stolen every day while we are debating this subject. I am satisfied that the machinery is as good as it can be, and I wish to have the vote taken as soon as possible. If I cannot get the tax reduced to twenty-five cents I will agree to thirty, fifty, or even sixty cents. But I prefer it should be twenty-five cents.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAINE. I withdraw the amendment to allow the gentleman from Massachusetts to renew it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I renew the amendment not because I favor it, but for the purpose of objecting to the policy of reducing the tax materially below the report of the committee. It is useless to suppose that the reduction of the tax even to twenty cents will operate very essentially in the way of deterring persons from attempting to defraud the revenue. These attempts were inaugurated when the tax was twenty cents, and they will be renewed and persevered in even if you put it at twenty cents. At present the object to be looked at is to raise from the tax on distilled spirits money enough after making due allowances for such frauds as will be committed to enable the Government to go on without returning to the taxation of those articles which have been exempted by previous legislation. Assuming that we can collect the tax on eighty million gallons, as we might with honest and efficient public officers, at sixty or seventy cents a gallon, we have a revenue of fifty or sixty million dollars a year from distilled spirits, and this revenue is needed to enable the country to avoid getting into debt or imposing taxes on articles already exempt.

The point to which I wish to direct the attention of the committee is this: that we cannot be justified before the people of this country in reducing the tax below the revenue wants of the Government without making another effort to collect it at that point. We abandon the tax of two dollars a gallon because it has proved, under the circumstances that exist, impracticable to collect it; but we are not justified in putting the tax below the revenue wants of the country until an effort shall have been made, extending beyond the term of the present administration of the Government, when we hope to have our revenue laws better administered than they are to-day. If we put the tax below fifty cents we certainly shall be deficient in the necessary revenue to carry on the Government, and I think there is the pivotal point upon which we should legislate at this time. I do not accept the theory that even at twenty cents you will drive distilling back to the grain-growing districts. Unless the tax is collected in the maritime ports, if it is collected in the grain-growing district, it will be cheaper to send the grain to New York and other maritime ports where there are opportunities of defrauding the Government and evading the payment of the tax and manufacture the whisky there than to manufacture it in the West and pay the tax there.

There is another point upon which I wish to remark, and I make the remarks now, because I intend, if I do not change my views on further examination, to offer an amendment to the report of the committee, unless the committee shall see fit to propose it themselves, which I should much prefer, to separate by law, and in the license granted, the business of distilling for export and for the manufacture of medicine from the general business of distilling in the country, so that transportation in bond shall be limited to the product of those distilleries that are licensed for the purpose of engaging in the business of manufacturing for export only. The great frauds upon the revenue heretofore have been in consequence of the transportation bonds being violated. The business of manufacturing for export will be from four to five million gallons a year. That will employ a certain number of distilleries. Those distilleries cannot have a monopoly of the business because they come in competition with the foreign distiller who also manufactures for export to the consuming countries of the world.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHENCK. It was my purpose to make some reply to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE,] but the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] although renewing that amendment, has submitted to the House most of the views, anticipating mine, against its adoption. I was going to put my opposition to the amendment mainly upon the ground of the question of revenue which it involves. In their anxiety to bring about a wholesome condition of things, as it is supposed, in the collection of the tax on whisky, so as to prevent evasion and frauds, gentlemen must take care that in their underbidding of each other they do not come to a point where we shall cease to have that revenue which we ought to have and which we must have from whisky, tobacco, and articles of this kind, unless we are to be thrown back upon oppressive taxes to be imposed upon other industrial pursuits.

Now, sir, I suppose the production of distilled spirits to be from eighty to ninety million gallons. The whole tax imposed by the proposed bill, then, will scarcely bring the amount of tax up to the $70,000,000 estimated by the Committee of Ways and Means as being necessary in order to help out the other taxes for the support of the Government.

But if the proposition should prevail to reduce the tax to thirty-five cents instead of sixty cents, including these indirect taxes as a part of the fifty cents, which is assumed to be all that is necessary in the aggregate, we should get below that standard, even if we collected the whole tax, and there must necessarily be a deficiency of some twenty, thirty, or forty millions, probably about thirty millions. I believe, sir, that something equivalent to that which is proposed by the committee can, if enacted into a law, be enforced, and that up to that point we can, with reasonable certainty, count upon a collection of the taxes.

But the gentleman from Wisconsin is wrong, it seems to me, in another proposition. He counts as a part of his fifty cents this three, four, or five per cent. on the aggregate of the wholesale and retail dealers' sales. That is nothing to the distiller. That is a tax imposed upon the trade in this article after it has been produced and has passed out upon the market of the country, and therefore it is not fairly to be counted as a part of the fifty cents.

My colleague [Mr. EGGLESTON] complains that we have not adopted a system suggested by him at some former time, of farming out the tax. All I have to say on that point is that under the Governments of some of the eastern countries this system of farming out taxes has been tried, and being made a matter of individual speculation has become so hateful that even the submissive people of those countries have risen against it. If we should attempt in this country to let a body of private individuals have the benefit of some fifty, sixty, or eighty millions of taxation upon assuming to collect the tax and pay a certain amount to the Government, I would not give the snap of my finger for the lives of the agents employed in collecting that tax. Our people would never submit to anything of the kind. Quieter, more submissive people than ours are not disposed to submit to that mode of collecting taxes. I therefore hold such a system to be entirely out of the question.

We are now endeavoring to impose and arrange our taxes in such a way as in the aggregate to raise sufficient revenue for the purposes of the Government; and I think the Committee of Ways and Means are not much out of the way in the figures which they submit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire that the debate upon this particular section shall be brought to a close, gentlemen having been heard pretty generally all around; and unless the committee will give unanimous consent I will move that the committee rise in order to terminate debate in twenty minutes. There are, I believe, no other amendments to be offered requiring discussion, excepting one which I think a very good one; but I will confine my proposition to closing debate upon the particular subject of the amount of the direct tax. I ask unanimous consent that debate on that question be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I object.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move, then, that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate.

On the motion there were—ayes 69, noes 80.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAINE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1284, to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order, all debate upon the amount of direct tax on distilled spirits shall terminate in twenty minutes.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Say thirty minutes.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield to the importunities of a great many gentlemen, and modify my motion so as to limit debate to thirty minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was presented by Mr. W. G. Moore, his Private Secretary.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and resume the consideration of the internal tax bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLAINE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the question of fixing the amount of taxation per gallon on distilled spirits will terminate in thirty minutes. The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. COVODE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to renew the amendment offered some time ago by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PAINE] to strike out "sixty" and insert "forty," so as to make the amount of the tax forty cents per gallon. I had come to the conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that fifty cents is the proper amount at which to fix the direct tax; but since learning that the bill, as reported by the committee, contemplates an indirect taxation of from sixteen to twenty cents additional, I have become satisfied that this will place the aggregate taxation so high that there will be room for enormous frauds.

Prior to the war the southern States consumed annually thirty million gallons of whisky, manufactured principally in the North and West. Now the southern people make their own whisky, and they make it, to a large extent, without the payment of the tax. When I was in Louisiana, two years ago, my attention was called to six extensive distilleries then being carried on in Rapides parish, and paying neither tax nor license. Some months ago I received a letter from Dr. Waters, secretary of the convention then in session at New Orleans, stating that those distilleries continue to run, and do not pay one cent of tax or license.

The great object in reducing the tax is to put an end to the frauds which have existed; and if a specific tax of fifty cents per gallon should be adopted as the aggregate of the taxation on whisky, I believe we could thereby accomplish the object sought; but if there be in addition an indirect tax of sixteen to twenty cents, I believe we cannot accomplish that object. At the present time the South is not only making its own whisky, but is sending into the North for sale whisky that has never paid the tax. We must break up this system of fraud, and in endeavoring to do it let us take such measures as to accomplish it at once.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COVODE] that he loses sight of the fact that the aggregate of this tax is distributed. An aggregate tax of seventy-five cents, distributed among the distiller, the seller, and the consumer, is no greater practically than would be a tax of fifty cents at the still.

Mr. COVODE. I understand that; but if you examine the proceedings of the court at Richmond a few days ago, you will see that the men engaged in perpetrating frauds on the Government know how to get over everything of that kind. Four of them paid the Government officer $30,000 for permission to cheat the Government out of $250,000 a year; and then, upon being found guilty in court, they are sentenced to pay the enormous fine of $1,000 or upward, and to undergo an imprisonment of one year or more.

Mr. Chairman, I represent a district which pays more tax on whisky than any other district of the United States. I believe that in my district will be found the largest number of distillers that have acted in good faith. They have been shut out from the market for the last six months. What I desire is that the Government shall collect the tax; and if it were possible to collect the tax of two dollars per gallon I would never propose a reduction, but they have not collected one tenth of that amount.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, this House is proposing in this bill to make what seems to me to be a strange admission, that a law of the United States providing for the collection of a tax cannot be enforced. Now, sir, if this Government is the Government that we have always supposed it to be, the present tax on whisky ought to stand. And I say it ought to stand if for no other reason than the vindication of the Government. If this country could enforce its laws against ten million people in arms against it, I say it presents a strange spectacle if it cannot enforce a law to collect the taxes.

Mr. Chairman, if the energies which this House has displayed and its committees have displayed for the last three months in investigating the impeachment or the evidence against the President, had been used in the investigation of the frauds against the Government or this question of the whisky tax, its collection could have been enforced; and if a committee had been appointed by this House and used the same energy as the committee used in looking up the evidence against the constitutional head of this Government, I say that those who have violated the law in reference to this whisky tax would before this time have been brought to punishment.

Now, sir, if we go on legislating in this way this "whisky ring," or the men who are setting the law at defiance which fixes the tax on whisky at two dollars a gallon, will set a law at defiance if the tax be fixed at fifty cents or any other sum. I say it is due to the dignity of the Government that, instead of repealing the tax on whisky, this House should take such measures as will bring those who violate the law to a proper punishment, and the energy of this House ought to be brought to bear for that purpose. When the majesty of the law has been established, and not before, let us legislate for the reduction of this tax.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move to insert two dollars a gallon.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a point of order. As the question stands there is no chance for that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct, but the Chair will explain. The pending amendment to the amendment is to insert thirty-five cents. The bill which the Clerk will read is very obligatory that it is not in order to strike out what has once been inserted.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Although it is not in order to strike out by itself what has been inserted, it may be moved to strike out a portion of the original paragraph comprehending what has been inserted, provided the coherence to be struck out be so substantial as to make this effectively a different proposition."

The CHAIRMAN. If sixty cents be stricken out and any other sum inserted it will cut off all further amendment on that point; and the Chair has thought it agreed with the pleasure of the House to allow a wider range of debate than that rule would call for, of course, within the thirty minutes to which the debate has been limited.

Mr. PAINE. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. COVODE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I now move to insert "two dollars."

Mr. Chairman, it will be recollected by yourself and others who were members of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, that when the internal revenue law was inaugurated in the course of the discussion two views were taken in regard to the tax on whisky, one that it should be taxed heavily, because its use was immoral, and the other because it was an article of luxury. I then thought it should be considered like any other article of commerce, and that, although its improper use engendered immorality and vice, other considerations were more important in determining the amount of the tax which should be imposed. After much examination and discussion Congress settled upon two dollars a gallon. At the time this seemed to be satisfactory to the country. No such difficulties in the execution of the law appeared as to induce the Thirty-Ninth Congress to diminish the tax. We are now, however, told that the tax must be reduced in order to enable us to collect it, or, in other words, that in our law-abiding and law-respecting country there is no power whereby the law, as it now stands in this regard, can be executed.

Such an assertion is an assault on our Government and our people. All I suppose will admit that the article of whisky, so far as taxation is concerned, must be regarded as a luxury, and all will also admit that it is wise political economy to obtain revenue from luxuries so far as possible. Thereby the productive industry of the country is relieved, and the price of those articles which necessarily enter into the consumption and comfort of the laboring man reduced. Upon this ground whisky can well bear the tax of two dollars a gallon. It is now proposed to reduce the tax to sixty cents. The only argument in favor of such reduction, so far as I have heard, is that if we impose a higher tax the law cannot be enforced. A whisky ring scares Congress out of its adherence to duty and propriety, and regulates our legislation at its will. Such is a fair statement of the proposition, and what cowards we are!

The fault, sir, is not in the law. The difficulty is not in the alleged fact that combinations of wicked men can at pleasure defeat the execution of the law. The fault is in the Government itself. The law is good enough. The two-dollar tax can be collected. In order to execute the law we must have for the chief revenue officer a man of large intellectual endowment, of iron will, of marked executive power. The various subordinates should be responsible to him and subject to his control. When a subordinate proves himself to be incapable or dishonest he should be turned out, and politics should have nothing to do with it.

My own State, sir, has nothing but a general interest in this matter. I do not suppose that there has been a gallon of whisky distilled within its boundaries for many years, and perhaps there is as little drank there as in any section of the country. All our people are burdened with taxation, and it is our duty to lighten that burden as far as possible, and at the same time preserve every national obligation according to the letter and the spirit.

My policy would be to tax whisky and tobacco, articles of mere luxury, heavily, and with a fair and moderate tax upon petroleum, stamps, and two or three other articles, raise the required revenue.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Chairman, in the very limited time allotted us by the order of the House it is impossible to do anything like justice to so vast and interesting a question as the one now under consideration.

Revenue and taxation in their various forms always affect to a greater or less extent the business interests and commercial relations of a people, and hence the legislator should exercise his power over these measures with great caution. A change of taxation, either in its amount or its mode of collection, will to some extent affect the values of property; it may depress one species of property and appreciate another species; and we should prevent, if possible, too great a difference in these extremes of appreciation or depression. Our people, with singular unanimity, have long since agreed that alcohol, (or whisky,) for many reasons, should be made to bear a very large proportion of the public burdens. How best to accomplish this object has for years engaged the attention both of the public and of Congress. Could the present tax be collected by the officers of the Government and placed in the national Treasury there would be no demand for its reduction.

But it is a melancholy fact that our laws are evaded and disregarded. Interested parties and corrupt officials are appropriating to themselves millions of dollars of the public revenue, thus defrauding the national Treasury and increasing the burdens of the honest taxpayers of the country, and we have now to meet the question whether we shall permit such a state of affairs to continue longer, to the disgrace of the country both at home and abroad.

It is most humiliating, but the fact stares us in the face, and cannot be controverted, that this Government is not to-day able to enforce its laws for the honest collection of the revenue on this particular species of property.

I have not the time to enter at length upon the causes which produce this sad result; but most prominent is the belief that the executive branch of the Government is derelict in its duty, and offers no effective resistance to the rings of plunderers who now appear to control it.

To the legislative department of the Government there is but one remedy left, and that is to reduce this tax to such a point as will enable the honest manufacturer of whisky to compete with its illicit production. That point, in my judgment, is that which places the tax nearest the cost of the production of whisky, which would be somewhere in the range between twenty-five to fifty cents per gallon. By this reduction you drive the illicit distiller from his occupation, for crime is always more or less expensive, and in proportion as you increase the profits of crime to that extent you increase crime itself.

Nor will this reduction have the effect of reducing the general revenue, but rather to increase it, for we see that with the present tax of two dollars per gallon we realize only about thirteen million dollars of revenue, while our experience has proved that with a much less tax we have heretofore been enabled to collect a much greater revenue.

Believing, therefore, that public morals as well as the public revenue will both be subserved by a change of the tax on whisky, I shall vote to fix that tax at the lowest sum named, to wit: twenty-five cents on the gallon, and failing in that, shall vote for such other sum in reduction of the present tax as shall finally be able to command a majority of the votes of this House.

Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the reduction of the tax on distilled spirits for the reason that the attempt to collect any considerable portion of the two-dollar tax has proved a failure. This tax and the attempt to enforce its collection have defrauded the revenue, debauched the administration of public affairs, and sapped the very foundations of official and private morals. Why is it, sir? In my opinion these results are the direct consequence of a wide departure from that sound maxim of political economy which seeks to keep the tax below the cost of production. Here is a tax which bears to the cost of production the ratio of one to six and a half. Such a disproportion cannot fail to stimulate fraud and corruption to an alarming extent, even under the most favorable administration of our revenue laws. How much greater and more alarming have been the frauds under the corrupting influences of the present Executive! On the one hundred million gallons of whisky made in the United States we collect now $12,000,000, six million gallons only paying a tax, while ninety-four millions escape collection entirely. Such is the operation of the present law; and while all admit the unfortunate influence of the Executive upon its collection, I am free to confess that this excessive tax is wrong in principle and vicious in its practical results. Distilled spirits, as an article of luxury, should be taxed to the utmost limit consistent with its collection. Beyond that you cannot safely go, beyond that limit your law becomes worse than a failure.

The Committee of Ways and Means, after struggling to invent some method of collecting at least a moiety of the present tax, have reluctantly acceded to the general demand for its reduction. Their bill proposes a special tax of sixty cents on the gallon with incidental taxes bringing it up to about seventy cents. This is indeed a great concession. Still, I fear that in its practical results it will be found to be too largely in excess of the original cost of production and violation of the principles to which I have adverted. Therefore, sir, I hope the tax will be reduced still further, leaving less inducement to fraud and converting the stimulus that now exists, and must under a high tax always exist, to evade its payment. We ought, perhaps, to be able to collect a tax of fifty cents per gallon. This would give us an annual revenue of $50,000,000 from this source alone, a sum nearly double the amount which has been collected under existing laws and four times as much as we are now realizing. I am willing to try the experiment of such a reduction, in the belief that it will operate to break up the swindling rings which now ply their corrupt and fraudulent practices all over the country, and yield such a revenue to the Government as ought to be derived from articles of luxury.

Mr. INGERSOLL and Mr. HOLMAN rose. The CHAIRMAN recognized the former.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has spoken once on this subject and I have not.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I have not spoken on this proposition to increase this tax to two dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. Technically the gentleman from Illinois is right, though the debate has been upon the general subject. The Chair therefore recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to hold it, then. I wish to correct a statement made by my colleague, "that since the passage of the law last January in reference to the export of whisky the manufacture of it in the Peoria district has ceased." It had nearly all ceased long before. Out of some twenty manufacturing houses in that district not more than four or five have been in operation for the past year.

Now, sir, I propose to show that sixty cents cannot be collected at the distillery. I do not believe that any distiller in the West can raise the necessary amount of capital with which to run a fifteen hundred bushel house, and there are many larger. A fifteen hundred bushel house will produce six thousand proof gallons per day; at fifty cents per gallon tax, he will have to pay $3,000 per day. New York is the great market. He ships to New York, and he cannot expect to receive returns from the sale of the whisky sooner than thirty days, if you grant that he finds the price in the market satisfactory. He will have to run his house thirty days before he gets any return. It will be seen that he has paid $90,000 tax in the thirty days. The actual cost of the production for that time is not less than $45,000 more, which makes $135,000; and this is only for one month. Now, it often happens that the distiller does not find the market price satisfactory, and is compelled to hold the whisky for a year, and in this event he would require over one million five hundred thousand dollars capital to do business on for one year. At the present time no distiller can draw on his commission merchant for advances on whisky shipped, for the reason that the whisky is continually liable to seizure, and is therefore no security.

Now, a word in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOWWELL.] New England has little interest in the manufacture of whisky. That may account for the position of that gentleman. Now, seven eighths of the capital invested in distilleries is invested in the middle and western States. Hence it is proposed to throw all this burden of taxation on the West, while the manufacturers of New England have been relieved from the burden of the five percent. tax on manufacturers. This will not do. The burden of taxation should be distributed with the strictest regard to equity and justice; all bearing their fair proportions.

My remarks in reference to the fifty-cent tax are based upon the assumption that the tax is collected at the distillery. If one removal in bond shall be allowed, which ought to be done, it would enable western distillers to do business.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty." I think the tax ought to be lower than forty cents a gallon. I think the interests of the country would be promoted if the tax were fixed at twenty cents a gallon. In my judgment the tax ought to be fixed at twenty cents, and in making the motion to fix the tax at forty cents I am influenced by the belief that the majority of the committee have determined not to reduce the tax below forty cents. I am, indeed, apprehensive that a reduction to forty cents cannot be obtained.

Mr. Chairman, I represent a district very largely engaged in the manufacture of distilled spirits, and I know that not only has that interest been almost destroyed by the unwise legislation of Congress, but other important interests of industry incidentally connected with that branch of manufacture have been utterly prostrated. By the unreasonable tax imposed on distilled spirits our industrial interests have been destroyed, and fraud has transferred this branch of manufacture to the great cities. In my own district gentlemen of unquestionable integrity have been engaged in the distilling business. The leading firm engaged in the business are gentlemen of as high character as any business men of the Northwest, and have for twenty years commanded the highest degree of respect and confidence. They assure me that unless the tax is greatly reduced all honorable men will be driven from the business, that a tax of twenty or twenty-five cents per gallon while putting an end to the stupendous frauds which have disgraced this business would manifestly increase the revenues of the country. They believe that in a country like ours no system can be devised to prevent extensive fraud when the motives are so great, and when, by reason of the enormous tax, the profits of successful fraud are so enormous.

It has been said that when the tax of twenty cents was imposed in 1862 frauds were perpetrated. I never heard that suggested before. On the contrary, the universal impression in my section of the country has been that during the time that tax was in operation it was faithfully and honestly collected.

I hold in my hand an article from a leading commercial paper in the Northwest, the Cincinnati Gazette, discussing this subject fully, urging a tax of twenty cents, and protesting, in the name of the business men and manufacturers, against imposing restrictions, endless regulations, and infinite details, such as are proposed in this bill, which would cripple this branch of business and other branches of business indispensably connected with our prosperity. It is manifest that if the tax is fixed at twenty cents, to be paid at the distillery, we may abandon at once the embarrassing and complicated system of regulations prescribed in this bill, and when the spirit has paid the tax at the distillery it will pass untrammelled into the market. It is unjust to the Northwest that this business, connected as it is with the grain-growing interest, the great interest of the Northwest, should be so loaded down and hedged in by a system of regulations which is the inevitable consequence of the imposition of an enormous tax. Dispense with the high tax; impose a tax on this article about equal to the value of the article itself, and then, the motive for fraud being gone, business will resume its natural and proper relations, the revenues of the country will be collected, and the fraud and public demoralization which now curses the whole land, rendering our legislation odious and disreputable, will cease.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to oppose the amendment, and I wish to say a word or two with reference to the rate of tax which may be fixed here by the committee. I want to call attention particularly to this fact, that if we fix the tax this year at twenty-five cents or twenty cents we will be compelled to come back here at the next session of Congress and raise the tax again. If there is any one thing that honest people want it is stability and permanence, and not to be shifted and drifted about by speculators who may want a high tax to-day and a different tax to-morrow. I want gentlemen, therefore, to fix the rate of tax that we will be willing to stand by as a permanent measure of legislation to go into our statute-book, and that will raise the amount of revenue that we require from these articles of luxury. I submit that twenty or twenty-five cents a gallon is not a sufficient tax to raise the amount of revenue that must be raised from the article of distilled spirits. We raise to-day ten cents a gallon from oil. We have raised hitherto twenty cents a gallon and collected every dollar of that tax. Gentlemen are mistaken in saying that these indirect taxes affect this question. These indirect taxes have nothing whatever to do with the amount of specific tax to be levied upon distilled spirits.

What is the tax? The first is in the nature of a license or special tax, and is distinct and separate from a specific tax. If a man undertakes to manufacture whisky at all he must pay the tax of four dollars per barrel before he can set up and run a distillery. If he runs an illicit distillery then he incurs the penalty of forfeiture of all the real estate upon which the distillery is situated. Under this bill a distillery cannot be run without the owner of it also owns the real estate upon which it is located. And if an illicit distillery is permitted to be run all title to the real estate is forfeited.

And so in regard to the tax on dealers. That is levied upon the wholesale dealer after the specific tax of fifty, forty, sixty cents, or whatever it may be per gallon, has been collected and paid. It does not go into the general account upon which frauds can be committed. Manufacturers have paid the tax of five per cent. upon their sales for the last three years. Now we propose to collect a tax of only three per cent. upon wholesale liquor dealers. Is it to be presumed that there will be any great evasion of that tax? And yet that is a distinct and separate tax, entirely separate from the specific tax upon distilled spirits, and has nothing to do with the frauds upon the revenue.

Therefore, whatever tax is levied by law upon distilled spirits as a specific tax, is separate and distinct from any other tax. Therefore my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FAINE] makes a mistake when he proposes to make the specific tax thirty-five cents per gallon. He says he is willing to make the total tax fifty cents per gallon, including all the taxes. This indirect tax is a different tax entirely from, and has no reference whatever to, the specific tax of sixty cents.

The Committee of Ways and Means have reported sixty cents per gallon as the specific or direct tax. I do not know that the committee are wedded to that particular sum. For myself, I am willing that the tax shall be reduced to fifty cents per gallon, if that will harmonize the views of members upon the subject. Now, I submit that can be collected, and will be paid as any tax upon distilled spirits will be paid.

There will be evasions of the law always, I do not care what the tax may be. There are men in the mountains and valleys and out-of-the-way places who will seek to evade the tax, let it be whatever it may. But we can collect a greater amount of tax at fifty or sixty cents per gallon than we can at a lower rate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I desire to say but a few words.

The CHAIRMAN. But one minute is left of the time allowed by the House for debate on the portion of this section relating to the tax per gallon on distilled spirits.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I merely want to say a few words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will permit the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to proceed until some member objects.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection by any one.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I think this is one of the most difficult questions that ever arose in legislation. I think the object to be considered is not so much the amount of tax which you levy as the mode of collecting the tax. My judgment is that if you would collect the tax by one of two ways you would be able to collect it either by virtue of the capacity of the still or by virtue of the capacity of the mash, which would, perhaps, be a little more accurate. Now, from the most thorough examination that I have been able to give to this subject, I have no doubt at all that by the adoption of either of these plans you would be able to collect the tax on at least four fifths of all the liquor in the country. Now there is not one fourth collected.

I believe, too, that if that were done there could be no general evasion of the law. It could be so arranged that every dollar of it could be collected, except what was necessarily lost by the borings of the instrument. I had hoped, therefore, that the Committee of Ways and Means would have adopted some such plan. I find, upon an examination of the English, Spanish, Italian, and many other systems, that those two plans are found to be perfectly feasible. As regards the amount of tax to be placed upon this article, I regard that as a matter of very little importance. Under the plan here proposed, if the tax be one dollar you will not collect it; if it be a half a dollar you will not collect it. Suppose the tax be fixed at a half a dollar a gallon and you send out to collect it, how much will you collect? Probably one fourth, and that one fourth will be two thirds less than the amount which really ought to be collected. Therefore, as I said before, the amount of tax put upon this article is a matter of no importance. I shall vote for whatever sum the Committee of Ways and Means desire, because I am willing to gratify their tastes—I do not mean their appetites—I am willing to gratify their tastes, believing that it cannot possibly make one farthing of difference whether we put this tax at a dollar or at fifty cents per gallon. That is about all I had to say on that point.

I have tried for three years past to get one of these systems adopted. I myself introduced a bill and sent it to the Committee of Ways and Means; but it is not there now. I ought not, perhaps, to speak of it, because it may be regarded as offensive. But I beg that committee, between this and the next session of Congress, to go into some cave where the good old Monongahela is made, and take care not to have with them any man who drinks too much; and by experiment they will find that they can adopt an instrument that will save the tax on nine tenths of all the distillation.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has now closed by order of the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN WYCK] moves to strike out "sixty," and insert "fifty," as the tax per gallon. And the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty," and inserting "forty." The question is upon the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have a proposition to make to the committee which I trust will be agreed to by unanimous consent; that is, that we vote first upon "sixty cents," then on "fifty," and so on successively upon each proposition down until some amount is agreed upon by the committee.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I want to modify the proposition, so that we may begin at "twenty-five," and vote up.

The CHAIRMAN. Any proposition which is contrary to the ordinary parliamentary course will require unanimous consent.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is what I asked.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] objects.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very well; then let the question be taken in the regular way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is upon the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. INGERSOLL. When will I have an opportunity to vote on the "twenty-five" cent proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment to the amendment is not adopted, the amendment will then be open to amendment.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask unanimous consent that the voting be first on "twenty-five," and so on up till something is agreed to.

Objection was made.

Mr. COBB. Has the word "sixty" been stricken out of the section, and a blank created there to be filled?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. The proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN WYCK] is to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty." The amendment to the amendment is to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 29, noes 63; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 34, noes 79.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. VAN WYCK, to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty."

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five."

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to, there being upon a division—ayes 35, noes 77.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "thirty."

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I now move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "thirty-five."

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to, there being upon a division—ayes 40, noes 79.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty."

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and, upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes 23, noes 78.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to strike out "fifty cents" and insert "one dollar."

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty-two."

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to, there being upon a division—ayes 36, noes 73.

Mr. HARDING. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty-five."

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MULLINS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty-eight."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. VAN WYCK, to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty;" and being taken, it was agreed to, there being upon a division—ayes 87, noes 37.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] to add to the end of the section the following:

Or said distilled spirits shall be sold and removed from the premises according to law.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, my object in moving that amendment was this, and I think it will strike the committee as being a proper one: Distillers do not object to being held responsible in the manner which this bill seeks to hold them, so long as the whisky remains in their possession, so long as it is under their control and remains unsold; but there are provisions in this bill—and if they are stricken out this amendment will fall—permitting distilled spirits to be removed from the bonded warehouses for rectification, for exportation, for scientific purposes, and for other purposes, by substituting other bonds. Now, it does seem to me that while the distiller should be held responsible with his distillery, his real estate, and everything connected with the distillery, so long as the whisky remains in his possession, yet as soon as he sells it and it passes out of his hands and out of his distillery, then neither he nor his property ought to be bound for any frauds which may afterward be committed in reference to that whisky. He has to sell in order to realize the tax he pays to the Government. He sells in the open market to the highest bidder. He should be responsible so long as the property remains in his possession and upon his premises; but when removed and it becomes the property of the purchaser, then the distiller and his property ought to be relieved. That is the object of my amendment. The committee can very well see that a distiller, when he has sold his whisky, in good faith removed it according to law and it has been carried to New York for export, for rectification, or any other purpose, and fraud begins there. Under this bill he would have his distillery and other property held responsible until the tax was paid. He ought to be relieved from responsibility as soon as it passes out of his warehouse and beyond his control, and the purchaser has given other bonds.

Mr. JUDD. I rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment, and indicating a substitute which I think should be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest this is not the place for the gentleman's amendment. The committee have provided for this in another part of the bill.

Mr. JUDD. I want to amend by inserting after the word "thereof," in the sixth line, the words "before the distilled spirits leave the distillery warehouse."

Mr. ALLISON. That is not in order to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The committee divided on Mr. BECK's amendment; and there were—ayes 29, noes 54; no quorum voting.

Mr. BECK demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BECK and Mr. JUDD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCHENCK. The committee have instructed me, in order to remove all ambiguity that may be supposed to exist, to move the following:

Insert after the word "thereof," "before removal from the distillery warehouse, except as otherwise provided by this act;" so it will read:

That there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits on which the tax prescribed by law has not been paid a tax of fifty cents on each and every proof-gallon, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or any person having possession thereof, before removal from the distillery, warehouse, &c.

Mr. Chairman, the object of that amendment is apparent. I do not believe the amendment is necessary. If gentlemen will look at page 31 and succeeding pages they will find the only exceptional case in which whisky can be removed from the distillery warehouse is amply provided for. But to remove all question about it the committee propose to insert in the first section a provision declaring in express terms that the tax is to be paid at the distillery warehouse, except in such cases as may be otherwise provided for in this act.

Mr. JUDD. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "except as otherwise provided by this act." Adopt my amendment, Mr. Chairman, and the amendment proposed by the chairman [Mr. SCHENCK] will be in the exact language of the amendment proposed by me as a substitute when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] had the floor. It presents to the committee the direct question whether distilled spirits shall pay the tax at the place of manufacture, and before any removal for any purpose, or whether the commodity shall be allowed to start on its errand of dodging the law and avoiding taxation under the delusive expectation that when once in motion dishonest officials will even reach it. If the chairman of the committee [Mr. SCHENCK] will detail to this committee the evidence the Committee of Ways and Means has accumulated showing the transportation frauds, there would not be one moment's hesitation in adopting the amendment I propose. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the safety of the revenue from this source absolutely demands the prohibition of transportation until the taxes are paid. There is no disguising the fact that the provisions of this bill, as they now stand, restore practically the enactments which we repealed at the beginning of the session.

Mr. SCHENCK. No approach to it.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman says, "no approach to it." I answer that under the former law distilled spirits, before they paid the tax, were allowed to be transported to bonded warehouses B, and changed under bond from warehouse to warehouse; and the chairman of the committee well knows, from the evidence before the committee, what frauds were perpetrated on the revenue by this transportation system. Seventy-five out of every one hundred per cent. of the frauds against the revenue occurred in that business of transportation. When once in motion and under the control of the parties, you never see it again. And the records of the Department are full of fictitious, false, forged, and valueless bonds.

Now, then, to be sure in this bill as draughted, bonded warehouses B, under the old law, are called "export warehouses." But under the language of the bill every gallon of distilled spirits that is made in Peoria, Chicago, or anywhere else can be transported without having to pay the tax to any part of the United States where there is a port of entry, and the Secretary of the Treasury may establish an export warehouse. The moment you take out the spirits and set it on wheels the experience of last year shows that it is beyond the reach of law. Neither the fact nor the effect of this is changed by saying that it must be declared that it is set in motion for exportation. It is in motion and forged bonds and straw bail are no guaranties that it will ever reach a foreign clime.

Take, for instance, a lot of spirits at Detroit, which is a port of entry. If there is any distillation there all taxes are avoided by storing it in export warehouses and then exporting it across to St. Clair, in Canada; next you hear of it it is in Portland, Maine, on its way by vessels to be landed at New York. It escapes just as the Dubuque whisky did, becomes lost in the mazes of the network of transportation, paying no tax whatever. Now, you say it is only for purposes of export. That sounds very well; but under the pretense of exportation every gallon escapes paying tax. Now, I am not prepared for that. I desire no exception in favor of spirits. Let it pay the internal revenue tax the same as other manufactures.

In addition to this "change of base" in distilled spirits the bill allows it to be taken from the warehouse of the distillery to any other warehouse for redistillation. And here you find the little joker hiding in a new place. This bill provides for its return to the manufacturer's warehouse. It goes out "distilled spirits," and it comes back water, perhaps, or may be good corn juice is turned into molasses rum. Who knows or can tell what changes it takes on? And can you guard against this by bond and penalty? I think not. At any rate if you get your tax before it moves you have no necessity for such enactments. It is no answer to say you will destroy the export business. Let this manufactured article like all other manufactured articles that have paid an internal revenue tax, when complete evidence of its actual exportation is furnished, be entitled to have that tax refunded. The chances for fraud are too great to authorize us to try again the experiment of "transportation in bond" for any purpose whatsoever.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAYNARD. If I understand the amendment to the amendment I am opposed to it. The only interest that I have as an immediate representative on the subject of distillation relates to some very small manufacturers, making whisky by what are known as copper stills at the rate of perhaps not more than fifty barrels a year. So far as they are concerned I do not desire to exempt them from any imposition that is proposed to be placed on this business generally. I simply desire that they should have the privilege of manufacturing on precisely the same terms as those who manufacture in larger quantity. Therefore I desire that they shall have an opportunity of paying their tax directly as they manufacture the liquor, and I trust the exception proposed to be stricken out will be permitted to remain. I yield the remainder of my time to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to oppose the amendment. There is no question but that frauds have prevailed in all the different States in the manufacture and disposal of whisky. The gentleman is mistaken as to where the greatest amount of fraud is to be found. I believe that far more whisky has escaped the payment of tax at the distillery by not getting into the distillery warehouse, but by being spirited away, smuggled off, than from any other cause. He is altogether wrong in supposing that this bill "under the pretext," as he says—that was not a very good word to use in reference to the committee—

Mr. JUDD. I used the words without any intention of imputing anything to the committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I supposed he did not mean to impute any purpose of the kind to the committee. He is entirely mistaken, however, as to the effect of the bill. It is not a revival of the old warehouse "B" system. You could carry distilled spirits from the distillery to warehouse "B" and there pay the tax and take it out and put it into market, and not only that, but from warehouse to warehouse. Now, what does this bill propose? That under no circumstances shall spirits be more than once removed in bond, and that under stringent regulations, defining the route by which it is to go, the conveyance by which it is to be carried, and the means by which it is to be transported, and various other regulations are thrown about it. Next to that, it can only go from the distillery warehouse to the export warehouse, and when it goes to the export warehouse it is to be actually exported from the country. There are only three other instances in which it can leave the distillery warehouse without payment. One is for redistillation into alcohol, which is to be exported; another is to go into medical preparations and compounds that are to be exported; and the other is to go to scientific institutions, for the preservation of objects of natural science; all these being guarded in such a manner as to prevent the possibility of those frauds, which are easy under the present law.

Now then, if the gentleman's amendment prevails, what does it mean, and what will be the effect? Simply that you shall strike down the whole export trade of the country, and the question is whether this House is prepared to do that. We are sending abroad now some four or five million gallons of alcohol—it has run up now to above four millions—and two million gallons of rum spirits. This has been gradually increasing. Up to 1867 there never had been more than three million gallons carried abroad in any one year. But within the last two years it has been increasing—to say nothing of any frauds that may have been committed, swelling the apparent quantity carried abroad—until the actual exportations of these spirits have been contributing some five million dollars or more toward paying our debts abroad, with a probability of a greater increase. The Committee of Ways and Means have desired, while they closed every avenue as much as legislation perhaps possibly can close it against fraud, at the same time not to strike down this interest in the country. If the gentleman's motion prevails, then every gallon of whisky must pay the tax at the distillery, and there can be no export trade whatever from this country in spirits, because, the tax being paid, we cannot compete with the production of alcohol and rum abroad.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JUDD. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I renew it. It is well known to the committee that on this point I reserved the right to differ from them. I will commence by saying that the exportation of whisky is a thing unknown. Hence there is no necessity for an export warehouse for whisky. That is the simplest proposition in the world.

Mr. LYNCH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is no such thing as the exportation of distilled spirits to be provided for in this bill?

Mr. LOGAN. I said whisky, sir.

Mr. LYNCH. That is distilled spirits.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, I understand that whisky is distilled spirits, if you will allow me.

Mr. LYNCH. I want to inform the gentleman that not only alcohol—

Mr. LOGAN. The gentleman cannot give me any information on the subject except what he can find in the reports in reference to exportations, and I can find it there as well as he can. I assert here that there is no such thing known as the exportation of whisky, unless it is smuggled. Then if there is not there is no necessity for providing that you may export distilled spirits. Why not provide that you may export alcohol and rum, the only two articles of distilled spirits that are ever exported?

Now, I desire to state my reasons for this amendment. If the tax is paid at the distillery, then if a man wants to export alcohol or rum, let him buy his whisky with the tax paid on it, redistill it, export it, and bring forward proof that it has actually reached the foreign port of delivery, which will satisfy the Secretary of the Treasury, and he can get the tax refunded to him. Then you will get all the tax on the whisky in this country, and you can get it in no other way. One gentleman has remarked that that would interfere with exportation. I say it would not. I have an amendment already prepared to this bill which I propose to offer when we reach that portion of the bill which relates to exportation, providing for the exportation of alcohol and rum in such a manner that it can be legitimately exported and still have the tax on whisky collected. I propose to alter the provisions of the bill so that we may get some revenue from this article.

Let me put a case. Suppose we provide, as this bill provides, for the withdrawal of whisky from bonded warehouses for redistillation into alcohol. That whisky goes to New York. What is to prevent it from being changed in its course on the way, the export stamp torn off, and that whisky put upon the market? And how are you to detect it? If you provide for the transportation in this country of whisky in bond, you have not provided properly against enormous frauds that have been and may be committed against the Government—from three to four million gallons of alcohol and rum. Now, if the Government should pay for that three or four million gallons entirely out of the Treasury they would make money by it, provided you collect all tax on distilled spirits before leaving the distillery warehouse for any purpose.

If you require all the tax to be paid at the distillery, then whenever whisky comes from the rectifier it will be understood that the tax has been paid prior to rectification, as is a mere pretense now. If it is transported without paying tax to be exported under whatever name you please to call it, you will only have a repetition of many of the frauds heretofore committed.

We do not want to see these frauds perpetrated as heretofore. I propose no hardship upon these distillers. They passed a resolution in their committee declaring "that this transportation should not be allowed, if we would prevent fraud." We should not be in favor of making a law less stringent on this question than the men engaged in distilling have asked us to do. I take it this is generous beyond that which would be ordinarily deemed generosity.

If you want to collect your tax, you must provide for its collection in the manner I have proposed. I have another amendment which has been agreed to by the committee, and which I propose at the proper time to offer as an amendment of the committee, providing that all this swarm of officers shall be stricken off, and that collectors and assessors shall not pass from one district to another as they have been permitted to do heretofore, to exercise doubtful authority—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER. I think I may speak on this question with as little feeling as any gentleman, for the reason that I do not know of a single distiller in my district. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] that whisky is not exported as an article of export; but rum is exported, and that alcohol is exported.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly,

Mr. BUTLER. And the single question is whether we propose to break up the export trade.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not.

